I hate being called a fascist- liberal-pinko- conservative- commie-redneck Americans have a desire to label and everything. You must fit into a simple category. On Affirmative Action forms, they only let you check one race. What if you're mixed?

Everybody wants to connect themselves with their ancestral background. If you are an American resident or citizen, then you are American. Everybody wants to be Italian-American, Jewish-American or African-American. Even those people whose ancestry dates back millennia on this continent aren't "Americans." They're "Native American." Chill out, folks.

I hate euphemisms. "Passed away" (dead), "large" (fat), "plain" (ugly), "musak" (elevator or shopping-cart music), "Dining Commons" (cafeteria) and "dislike" (hate). None of these are accurate. They just mask the bad with a glossy finish. "Good American" (Republican).

So, the next time you feel angry about the liberal, racist, Republican administration or you support the Everywoman's Department of Defense Fetus Fund, and you want to spew on the Collegian, take my advice: Don't waste your time, just get a good night's sleep.

Nobody reads this stuff anyway...except you.

Jones Library undergoing $5M renovation

By LESLIE MENCHER
Collegian Correspondent

The Jones Library in Amherst is currently undergoing a $5 million renovation, which includes a new wing and courtyard, and should be completed in January 1992, according to the library's director.

According to director Bonnie J. Isman, the library was built in memory of Samuel Minot Jones, a former Amherst resident, and first opened on November 1928. She said the library was reported to have once been a house, and it was actually built that way.

She added that the Jones family "wanted people to feel at home, and they do."

According to Isman, there were only 5,000 students when the library was built in 1928. "It must have been huge in this little, tiny town," she said.

The Jones Library now has 28,000 borrowers, she said. Some 4,000 are UMass students.

The renovation includes increasing the library's size form 38,000 to 50,000 square feet. The present J-shaped library will be boxed in with an additional building forming a rectangle with a center courtyard. The courtyard will have a glass roof and will be sued to house new books, paperbacks and displays.

With the addition, the library will be renovated to bring it up to current building codes, Isman said. The existing heating, electrical and plumbing systems will be upgraded, and air conditioning will be installed. The library will also be made more easily accessible for handicapped patrons, she said.

Other features include:

- Expanding circulation from 120,000 to 158,000 volumes.
- Reorganizing the public services onto three levels for easy access and efficient operation.
- Increasing seating to 185, including group study rooms and a quiet reference section.
- More children's facilities, including a preschool room, arts and crafts space, and a story hour room.
- Separate staff work areas from public reading and study rooms.
- More space for local history, including Emily Dickinson and Robert Frost exhibits.
- Study space for young adults.

Although the construction will modernize the library, its original atmosphere will be maintained.

"One of the goals of the whole project is to keep the home-style furnishing," says Isman.

Check-outs, circulation and billing are all done by compute, although the library maintains a "historical" atmosphere, Isman said. The library also features compact discs, videos, books on tape, and computer-catalogued magazines.

An English as a second language program is housed at the Jones Library. The program connects non-native speakers with trained volunteers, she said.

Part of the funding for the library's construction and renovation comes from the sale of a painting that had been a gift to the library. The painting originally given by the Burnett Family, has been on loan to a museum which had better security than the library. The Platt River Nebraska by Alan Beistadt was sold to the New York auction firm for $2.4 million.

Students who want a free library card with the Jones Library need a picture ID and a piece of mail with a current address on it.

"Of course we do have sensational news too," Darwish said, "but it does not take up the space that it does in the United States."

They said while all of the news mediums in Syria are government-controlled, the news Syrians produce is more accurate and fair than American journalism because there are governmental checks on what they write.

Cole said the MSP has taken a survey of its members concerning the furlough proposal as many other campus unions have done. He refused to release the results of the survey.

Juan Roberts, vice-president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said his union, which represents most blue-collar workers on campus, remains adamantly against any furlough since it would be in violation of the union's contract.

"The administration must proceed by our contractual language," he said. "And the administration must understand the financial hardship this would mean to our rank and file, most of whom make less than $20,000."

The petition's opposition have estimated that the rollback would cut 40 percent of discretionary revenues which are public higher education, human services and roads and bridges. The Board of Regents, after analyzing the petition, reported that public higher education would lose $126 million if CLT passes.

The prediction of what will happen if CLT passes to the campus will be disasterous, but GEO spokesperson Jill Havens said disaster has already hit campus after three years of public higher education cuts.

"It's easy for students to think that workers can take a pay cut or for workers to think that students can pay a fee increase," she said. "If we don't stand together, decisions are going to be made without us."

The protestors marched through campus to North Pleasant Street to join in a statewide speak-out against question three at Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst which was organized by local human services agencies such as the Hampshire County Action Committee.

The speakers were welfare mothers and other recipients of state services who articulated how question three would effect their lives if passed.

The HOME Coalition (Housing Opportunities in Massachusetts for Everyone) formed to oppose question three because they said the question will do more than cut fat from state government by denying services to low income people.

"Barbara Anderson [CLT's executive director] likes to talk about fat and waste in the system," said Jackson Hall, the director of HOME. "People being affected are not fat and waste, they are real people."

Tashira Wildrose, the tenant services coordinator for HCAC, said the tenants she assists already have suffered from cutbacks in fuel assistance, making low-income people have to choose between whether they can pay for heat, food or shelter.

"Poor people have already been squeezed so tightly, but question three is the last straw of a whole set of injustices mounting up since the Reagan years," she said.

Vicky Regish, who lives in subsidized housing in Northampton with her two mentally retarded sons, said, if question three passes, the Bay Services for the Mentally Retarded will be cut. She said the six services developed over 30 years provided to her by the state, such as transportation and day services for her sons, would "go down the toilet if CLT passes."

"When people put things together, like CLT, they don't think about people less fortunate than them like my sons who don't know their rights and how CLT could affect them," she said.

Levinson's Avalon is no more than a postcard

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

John Boorman's wonderful Hope and Glory, an autobiographical account of growing up in war-torn England during the height of the London Blitz, remains as one of the greatest celebrations of family ever captured on film. Hope and Glory achieved its success because Boorman had the intelligence not to retell childhood memories through an adult voice, opting instead to filter his vision of life and family through the eyes of his eight-year-old alter ego, played by Sebastian Rice Edwards. By giving us the voice of a child, Boorman achieved a level of clarity and depth that he could not have gotten otherwise and was able to bring a heartwarming glow to the film that never became romanticized.

With Avalon director Barry Levinson is trying to do the same: reconstruct an entire vision of his life based upon his childhood perception of his family. Beautifully photographed by Allen Daviau, Avalon is a big, gorgeous postcard of a movie spanning 50 years of Levinson's family, from its immigrant beginnings and generational living conditions up to and through the post-war era when the move to the suburbs and the advent of television slowly drew the big family apart. It's a visually appealing film that's as big as the country it's set in. But is Avalon a great movie? I don't think so. There are no strong voices in Levinson's story.

THE SCREENING ROOM

The film centers around Levinson's immigrant grandfather (played with delicate passion by the great German stage actor Armin Mueller-Stahl), who, after dedicating his life to preserving and respecting family tradition and unity, must slowly come to grips with the progression of time and its eventual impact on the family structure as relatives die and children move on.

Even though it's essentially the grandfather's story, it's all constructed from Levinson's childhood perception of him. It's his memories that give the story its style, and so it only follows that the film should adopt the perspective of Levinson's alter ego, played by ten-year-old Elijah Wood. But Levinson can't get a grip on where his story should be coming from, and as a result the film is left in a narrative vacuum, devoid of clarity and cohesiveness. There's no progression from one image to another because there's nothing linking them together. It's as if Levinson were tacking family pictures on a wall and then pointing to each one to explain its content. But as an audience we need a voice from inside the pictures to draw us into the experiences in order to appreciate them. Without that voice we're left with very little to do other than to stare at the pictures and admire the skill of the photographer.

The problem is Levinson's inability to remain objective as a director. Rather than keeping in touch with his memories and sorting them out in an orderly fashion, he dives right into them, laboring excessively to give them a larger-than-life emotional high through the composition of his images. And what striking images they are! — full of robust colors and apple pie values.

This is where Levinson goes to fill the dramatic void of his narrative: plump, juicy images full of false emotion. This is Levinson's idea of poetry.

Avalon is now playing at the Mount Farms Theater, Route 9 in Hadley.

University Gallery offers an escape

By NOA BEN-YEHUDA
Collegian Correspondent

If your day is shot to hell, riddled with appointments and classes, you are apt to get a little crazed. Next time you are in this mode and happen to be near People's Market or the Cape Cod Lounge, you might want to make a detour into the University Gallery.

Though this month's show Planit! Water featuring the collage and assembled objects by self-proclaimed "global individualist," Doctor Neutopia, a.k.a. Libby Hubbard, leaves much to be desired, a stop in the gallery makes for a nice break. In spite of the chaos swarming outside the Student Union Building and in your brain, the University Gallery maintains a peaceful, still atmosphere. Libby Hubbard's conceptual artwork which will be adorning the gallery's wall until Nov. 1, focuses on just that sort of chaos or "megalopolus" which makes us need to escape.

"There is a need to synthesize our knowledge to form a more evolved global culture which has the power to visualize a way out of the political chaos of the 20th Century," Hubbard says.

"UMass could use some of the same vision," she says. "There is no harmony here. There is no place for intellectuals to come together and have a forum. The forum is the essence of democracy — that's when you will find the natural leaders." Instead, she says, we are stuck in a UMass dictatorship.

The idea is a good one and Doctor Neutopia is earnest in her endeavor to communicate it to the UMass community, but the fact that the actual pieces of art are unprofessionally put together — somewhat shoddy magazine cutouts stuck with a gel medium onto a board — detracts from the message.

Some gallery goers have nevertheless found great enjoyment from the show, as shown by the comments written in the gallery's vistor book.

"I got high," wrote one. "If you come in you are bound to think," wrote another. These words were balanced by one scathing comment that used the words "laughable" and "doubtful" to describe the show.

Hubbard readily admits that although visual art is not her "path," she says it is the "ultimate education." She writes poetry as well. Hubbard, along with poet Julie Maloney, will be reading selections on Halloween night at the gallery. Everyone is invited to come (in costume if so inspired). But even poetry, she said, is not really her calling. Living in the fashion that she is expounding is her ultimate goal.

Her bright green eyes sparkled as she spoke of the Italian architect, Solari, who is building a utopian community for 5,000 people in the Arizona desert. She stroked one of her hanging pieces — a stop sign with a blueprint of Solari's project pasted on the back — as she described how amazing it would be to live there.

Hubbard, originally from North Carolina, is a doctoral student at what she calls "the UMass dictatorship." She received a B.A. in Utopian Studies through the University Without Walls program and an M.A. in Future Studies through the Education department. Both programs were severely cut because of the budget crisis.

"Everything I am interested in seems to be disappearing," she says with a forlorn look.

Hubbard realizes that there is probably not a huge market for Doctors of Future Studies. But if her visions and dreams come true, if her "loveolution" (love + revolution = non-violent spiritual revolution) comes about, perhaps then she will find her space.

Torch Song Trilogy burns brightly

By HEATHER M. RONOVECH
Collegian Correspondent

Harvey Fierstein's Torch Song Trilogy met with a standing ovation after its performance at Hampden Theater, following its four performance run Oct. 17-20. The production explored the unique perspective of being gay.

Torch Song Trilogy addresses gay life and gay pride, covering a range of issues in everyday gay life. Specifically, meeting a lover, breaking up, jealousy, anti-gay violence, the expectations of traditional parents, bisexuality, marriage, gay parenting and the amusing aspects of being openly gay in day-to-day life.

Student Valley Productions presented the once on-Broadway show that made its appearance during the early 80s and made its debut in the movie theaters with Fierstein in its starring role.

It is the tale of the ups and downs in the life of Arnold Beckoff, a gay man making his living as a nightclub drag queen living in New York. It is also a social commentary on conflicts between gays and heterosexuals in today's world.

The play opens with Arnold (Russell Reinke), dressed in an evening gown before one of his performances, lamenting about how he can never seem to find "the perfect man." With sharp, tongue-in-cheek humor and an often sad tone, he tells us of his good and bad relationships and sexual experiences.

Arnold conveys his pride in being a gay man in the face of a heterosexist world that would rather pretend that gay people don't exist.

Reinke was both hilarious and touching as Arnold, a sensitive man hardened by the fact that he lives in a world where he is always oppressed. Reinke did a wonderful job with this difficult emotional role, especially when battling with his mother over his open and proud gay lifestyle.

Kyle Nash gave a strong performance as Ed, one-time lover and friend of Arnold. Ed's bisexuality and subsequent marriage to a woman causes great conflict between Arnold and Ed throughout the play, because Ed is not "out of the closet" at work or in the world at large. At times, Ed insists that he is not gay to Arnold. Despite their problems, a friendship sustains itself 10 years after their romance has ended.

Cutter Garcia's performance as David, adopted son of Arnold, was a highlight of the show, with his wise-aleck remarks to Arnold, whom he calls "ma," and his juvenile delinquent mannerisms.

Laurie Ciarametaro, as Mrs. Beckoff gave an impressive performance as the stereotypical old Jewish mother with a great walk and accent.

Minimal set design in Act I, staged during 1979, and II, happening in 1989, enabled the players to cater scenes to their needs without ever changing the entire set. A more substantial set appeared in Act III [1990].

Strong performances, universal themes and the brilliant and funny writing of Fierstein made the show a marvelous production and definitely worthwhile.

Williams College robs rugby, 13-11

By DAVE SZPILA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts rugby club was knocked out of the New England Championships this past weekend as the team suffered a 13-11 loss to Williams College.

The match started off smooth for UMass according to captain Bob Carney who stated that on the opening drive, "We walked down the field."

Jerry Hunt capped off the series with a penalty kick, that put UMass up 3-0. Williams came right back, however, and scored a penalty and a try giving them a 7-3 edge.

With a few minutes remaining in the first half, Williams scored another penalty for a 10-3 lead, but UMass held its own and ran the field for a try by Brian Donovan. The score at halftime was Williams 10, UMass 7.

Williams added to their score first by hitting a penalty early in the second half, making the score 13-7. Then, with about twenty minutes remaining, UMass came back with a try, leaving the club only three points away from a win. They almost pulled it off.

With one minute left, the ball went to Brian Donovan. He ran towards the try line and dove for the score that would have put UMass on top. He was taken down inches from the goal as time expired.

Standouts for the UMass club included Jerry Hunt, Greg Champeaux, Ed Doyle, Bob Carney and Ricky Dever.

The UMass B and C sides both won this weekend.

UMass is scheduled to play Holy Cross this weekend at home, but there have been schedule changes all year so the match may be moved.

The New England Championships are scheduled to be held at UMass in two weeks, but with the loss of the home club, the matches might be moved to a new location. There will be more information on this later in the week.

In preseason activity, the newest of Garber's Gorillas are doing well. UMass beat Hofstra 8-5 and Maryland 6-5, but lost to Rutgers 4-2 in scrimmages this weekend.

The team alternated between grass and turf (and grass) — in that order — during Sunday's games at Hofstra's and Rutgers' campuses. Maryland was up for the weekend as the teams ran a round-robin of games.

"We played the veterans longer in the first two games, but also let the new guys see some time," said head coach Ted Garber.

Garber cited a lot of adrenaline and effort on the part of both squads and was pleased with the performances he saw.

Goalies senior Ted Kellerman and junior Ray Souris vied for equal time in the net during the Hofstra and Maryland games.

Novice goalkeeper Todd Ackerman, a sophomore, saw action in the last 10 minutes of the Maryland game and freshman Dave Welker put in 20 minutes at the end of the Rutgers game.

"We wanted to give everyone a chance to see some action," Garber said.

Scoring was spread out fairly evenly among the attack and midfielders; a good sign, according to Garber. Senior attack Jim McAleavey assisted often, Garber said.

"We did a good job in our transition game, which has held us up in the past," he said. "It's so early now . . . but so far we look pretty good."

The Gorillas will host the Brine Lacrosse Club at 10:30 a.m. this Saturday on Upper Boyden in other preseason action.

Field hockey hosts No. 13 Terriers

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team, currently on a five-game winning streak, will try to extend that streak to six against Boston University at 2:30 p.m. today at Totman Field.

The Minutewomen (12-4), currently ranked eighth in the country, will try to keep their momentum going against No. 13 Boston University (8-4-1).

UMass coach Pam Hixon expects a very tough game from BU.

"We've had a real hot rivalry with BU over the last few years," Hixon said. "We had the opportunity to beat them on penalty shots in the NCAA's last year."

UMass took that opportunity to beat BU last year in the NCAA tournament taking their shots. The teams were scoreless for the entire regulation and through three overtimes. The win enabled UMass to advance in the tournament and, ultimately, oust BU.

Top players for BU this year have been goalie Lori Heywood, midfielders Patrice Schena and Lesley Ambinder as well as forward Lisa Barone.

"I think they're hungry," Hixon said of BU. "They need a win against a Top 10 team for a chance to get into the NCAA tournament. I'm planning on a fight to the finish."

Of her own team, Hixon admits that they feel good about the way they've been playing.

"We're on a bit of a roll right now," Hixon says. "We're playing well right now and we have to keep playing well."

Hixon credits her team's current success with the fact that a number of players are contributing to the net, not just a few select players. She added that the defense has also been playing well.

Hixon said she hopes her team can score early and often against BU.

Wilkos hopes for quick return to campus

By SAM SILVERSTEIN

Gary Wilkos got a "good, clean" shave from his uncle, Philip Francheshini, in the Stanton, Del. hospital bed he has occupied since suffering a severe neck injury in Saturday's football game, and said he is feeling good and looking forward to returning to Amherst, possibly by this weekend.

Wilkos was examined earlier this week by the specialist who operated on White House Press Secretary James Brady after the 1981 assassination attempt on President Reagan.

Tests have revealed no signs of paralysis, or neurological damage.

"He was the man," said Wilkos of the examination, arranged by Delaware Gov. Michael Castle. "He relieved all the pressure off my parents and told them everything that's going on."

Wilkos lay injured on the field for 36 minutes Saturday before an ambulance arrived to take him to the Christiana Medical Center in Stanton, Del. Wilkos' father called the delay "totally insane," but Wilkos himself said he didn't mind.

"For the first 30 seconds I had a little bit of tingling. I knew I had messed up my neck . . . but I had my whole family there and that made me feel great," Wilkos said.

Monday, Wilkos was outfitted with a halo brace, which he will wear for three to six months. The brace will keep Wilkos' vertebrae aligned by immobilizing his head and neck.

Wilkos had originally planned to spend several weeks at his home in Staten Island, N.Y. before returning to Amherst, but now hopes to make it back in time to see the Minutemen play Northeastern this Saturday.

"I guess I'll live in the infirmary for a while, get some tutoring and see if I can get some work done," he said. "The last thing I want to do is withdraw."

"I'm just looking forward to standing up. I haven't been out of bed since the third quarter Saturday."

UMass coach Jim Reid, teammates, and other friends from school have been in close contact this week. Wilkos' uncle, 'Father Phil,' has been at the hospital throughout, Wilkos said.

"I can't tell you how much coach Reid means to me," Wilkos said. "It may sound corny, but his advice was to just get better and the rest will take care of itself. And he's exactly right."

Though it is still far too early to speculate about whether Wilkos will return to play football again, he did admit "I'm still really nervous. People who know me know how much football means to me.

"But I think [the team] will be all set with whoever's in there, Tom [Fasano] or Paul [Tornatore] or Dave [McGovern] or maybe even [265-pound offensive lineman] Paul Mayberry," Wilkos joked.

"Mabes can throw the seed."

Shaw burns up Celtics' parquet

It's only been four preseason games but the Boston Celtics are averaging 131 points per game. The supposedly slow-footed C's have been running-and-gunning in wins over the Pistons (116-98), Nuggets (173-155), Jazz (114-107) and a loss to the Hawks (127-122).

And who's got the troops running? Brian Shaw.

Tonight on the parque floor the Boston faithful will be re-introduced to Bird, Lewis, Parish, McHale and, after a year's hiatus, Brian Shaw.

Will Celtics' fans be willing to welcome Shaw back with open arms after all the bad-mouthing and threats he made? Yes.

Stephen Katsoulis

Myself along with the rest of Celtic fans are starving for some excitement from the Green and we know that Shaw is the key to making the team run-and-gun.

Many factors have gone into new coach Chris Ford's hopes of making the Celtics a running team. Among them are the release of Dennis Johnson and Jim Paxson and the proposed release of John Bagley, along with the drafting of a quick guard in Dee Brown.

Shaw felt he was unfairly treated by the Celtic organization and bolted for Europe and a more lucrative contract. God forbid he question the fabled front office of the team. All the blame was placed on him.

It's interesting to note that both Shaw and his Celtic backcourt mate Reggie Lewis are both represented by Jerome Stanley. Shaw sat out the speaking aspect of the negotiations and Stanley did the mouthwork. Attitudes about Shaw changed over the summer when the same threats were made by Reggie Lewis, who also came close to going the Italian route.

In relation to Shaw, Boston columnists claimed that if Larry Bird's contract came into question every measure would be taken to make him happy. This, of course, led to cries of possible racial motives. So far this hasn't been pursued.

After a year, Shaw signed a five-year contract with the Celtics. Following a change of heart, and many court hearings, he suddenly threatened to sit out the next five years and told the Celtics where they could stick their green shamrock.

Realizing he had no other options, he agreed to play and anticipated the beginning of the season.

He has come under fire for trying to tarnish Celtic Pride, and neither the Boston media nor fans are quick to forgive and forget.

The only thing that matters to Shaw is that the fans realize he made a mistake — I feel they will. He also realizes that when the team is not doing well, all eyes will be on him. He has accepted this and now just wants to play.

If he wants the fans to forgive and forget, all he has to do is produce — and remember the words of Dick Vitale, 'Just win baby!'

Volleyball optimistic, faces BC

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

With three weeks left in the season, a dismal record of 3-19, and a few injured players, dreams of an A-10 Championship just do not seem plausible for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team.

But the Minutewomen have yet to throw in the towel.

"The team is still practicing hard and looking for wins," said coach Carol Ford.

At 7 p.m. tonight in Totman Gym, the Minutewomen will host Boston College (12-13). According to Ford, BC has one of the best teams ever.

"They have middle attackers, hitters and a strong setter — players coming at you from every position," she said. According to Ford, instead of turning around and running the other way, the Minutewomen plan on fighting back.

"We're concentrating real hard on our defense, which will be the key." said Ford. "If our defense is successful, then all we have to do is put the ball away."

She called this 'assertive transition.'

The Minutewomen's star setter Angie Pallouci, mirrors the team's luck. Her luck has not been with her all season. Starting off the season sick, she now has a sprained wrist, as a result of the game against George Washington. Ford said she is now undecided about who will play tonight in the setter's position.

"We have another setter, but we need Angie's height to block," she said. "Because of our size, our blocking has not been a real factor, but it's improving."

The Eagles are led by the strong setting of Jennifer McEnroe. Coach Ford noted that the 5-foot-9 McEnroe "is not only a great setter, but also has the capability of hitting the second pass over."

It is not surprising that she holds one of the top kill records for her team.

Another player to watch out for is Jennifer Smith, who is a big factor to the team in blocks, kills and serves, according to Ford.

Water polo takes 4 of 5

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team took four out of five wins home this weekend after competing at Brown in the Eastern Tournament.

According to coach Russ Yarworth the 11-6 win over Yale encouraged the team to put up a fight against No. 19 Harvard. They were, however, tired, he said, which contributed to the 10-7 deficit.

GT Ladd and Brian McIver as well as Alex Yelensky each netted two goals for the Minutemen.

"It was a good team effort," Yarworth said of the tourney. "This was a very positive step forward for us."

Brown (No. 12) and Harvard were the only nationally ranked teams UMass faced at the tourney. UMass entered ranked No. 16.

During the Harvard game, Scott Reed recieved an elbow in the mouth and was lost for the remaining games. He has now been fitted with braces and will be able to play at Amherst College this weekend.

Brown fell to UMass 10-9, the first loss Brown has experienced against a New England team or an East Coast team this year, according to Yarworth.

Jon Miller had seven of the team's 10 goals against Brown, putting in four against Harvard.

UMass went on to take Boston College 11-9 in overtime as well as Massachusetts Institute of Technology 12-8 in regulation time.

McIver netted five goals against BC and Miller completed three goals against MIT.

The team has been without the services of Todd Larson, due to an ear infection, and Dan McOsker who has been out for the past five weeks with a broken thumb since a match against Cal.-Berkeley on Sept. 23.

After this weekend, the team has a 15-6 record.

Saturday and Sunday the team will host the UMass Tournament to be held at Amherst College with the first game held at 11:30 a.m. against Queens Club. The team will also scrimmage members of Queens College and Queens Club at 5 p.m.

The B Team will face Queens College at 10:15 a.m.

"It's good for them to play the older players," Yarworth said. "The refs tend to swallow the whistle more and just let the kids play."

Congress approves $1.9 million research grant

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Two University of Massachusetts programs will be several million dollars richer if President Bush signs legislation passed by the U.S. Senate this week approving funding for two renewable energy projects.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) announced Monday that $1.9 million has received final Congressional approval for a solar heat engineering storage project and wind energy research. The measure now awaits the president's signature.

The largest grant, $1.5 million, has been given to James F. Manwell, director of the renewable energy research laboratory. Manwell said the grant, which will be used to continue research and development of wind energy technologies, is a reappropriation of an $800,000 grant the University received in 1987.

"I think UMass got this grant because we have had a large renewable energy program since the 1970s," Manwell said. "Even during the Reagan years when such research somewhat died, UMass kept going.

"And this University has also produced a great deal of graduate students who are now in the field doing research. The reputation of our graduate students is outstanding," he said.

Manwell, who heads the wind project, said four faculty members and at least seven graduate students will work on the project focusing on storage capabilities, the integration of wind turbine power with standard electrical systems and the clustering of wind turbines in one area, often referred to as wind farms.

"Wind energy looks like it is on the upswing again and especially now since we can produce a very large fraction of power from the wind," he said.

A $400,000 grant was also awarded to the University for engineering and design work on a system which will hold solar energy underground and use it to heat the Boyden Physical Education Building and Mullins Memorial Arena, which is under construction at the site of the old UMass barn.

Engineering Professor Edward Sunderland said the project, the first of its kind in the United States, will have solar collectors gather the power of the sun and store it in a clay bank. He said there are some 35 similar collectors in Europe.

He said the unit will be operational year round, recovering approximately 85 per cent of the energy collected.

"No money is used for oil so this is potentially very helpful to the University and the region," he said.

He said about three graduate students and 10 to 15 undergraduates will help design the unit.

In a press release, Kennedy called the grants a "tribute" to the quality of work at UMass. "Both the solar and wind projects are making vital contributions in the fight to protect our environment, maintain U.S. energy independence and keep this country competitive in the world of technology development."

$500,000 grant OK'd by House

Collegian Staff Reports

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives on Tuesday approved legislation that could bring a $500,000 grant to the University of Massachusetts to establish a Center for Manufacturing Productivity, which would study and perhaps slow the decline of manufacturing jobs in the state.

A spokesperson for Congressman Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield), said yesterday that the grant has been approved by the House and will most likely pass the Senate also.

The center is expected to focus on the rapidly declining manufacturing segment of the Massachusetts economy and especially the western portion of the state.

The grant would be divided between the School of Management and the School of Engineering with the additional input of the Massachusetts Small Business Development Center. Together, they intend to develop skills and strategies aimed at improving the productivity and the quality of products.

In a press statement, Conte, whose district encompasses the Amherst area, said the center will fuse pure and applied research at UMass with activities of regional manufacturers, stung by an economy in recession.

Republican Club rallies in support of question three

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Republican Club urged a dissenting group of about 50 students yesterday at a rally on the Student Union steps to support the tax rollback ballot question as a measure to restrain state government spending.

"The level of taxation is so burdensome," said Ted Maravelias, a Republican Club member who spoke at the rally. "We're just flat out sick and tired of having tax raised to bail the legislature out of their hole."

The Citizens for Limited Taxation petition, question three on the November election ballot, would roll back state taxes and fees to 1988 levels in the middle of this fiscal year if passed by voters. The rollback would cut $1.2 billion from state revenues, which opponents estimate will be doubled since the rollback would happen in the middle of the budget year, cutting 40 percent from discretionary accounts.

Maravelias criticized the anti-CLT movement on campus for using the Board of Regents' estimation of how CLT will affect public higher education as "a scare tactic." No one should assume how the legislature will cut the budget by $2.4 billion until question three passes, he said.

The Regents, assuming the legislature would make across-the-board cuts to discretionary line-accounts by the petition's deadline of Dec. 6, estimated that funding for public higher education would be reduced by $126 million if CLT passes.

The Regents then applied the $126 million across-the-board cut to state colleges and universities to estimate that UMass-Amherst would lose $28 million before next semester.

"Anti-CLT sentiments are motivated by irrational fears that are propagated by the same people who got us into the deficit under the Dukakis administration's liberal legacy," Maravelias said. "[The Regents] are basing their assumptions on worst-case scenarios."

As the keynote speaker of the rally, Maravelias said the state government has

Bombings kill six in Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Simultaneous bomb attacks at two security checkpoints in Northern Ireland today killed six soldiers and left a civilian missing and presumed dead, police said. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility.

Five men were arrested in the Irish Republic in connection with the predawn attacks, which also injured at least 27 people, six seriously, police said.

Police said that in both cases the bombs were driven to the checkpoints by civilians acting under IRA threat. One of the drivers, an elderly man, warned the soldiers at a checkpoint, but not in time.

The IRA claimed those forced to drive the bombs to the checkpoints were "collaborators," who had done

BOG to vote on LBGA seats

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

As the Board of Governors prepares to vote tonight on a proposed constitutional amendment to eliminate the representation of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, many student leaders are concerned about the proposal's effect, but are confident that it will not pass.

Last week, Gov. Ted Maravelias and BOG Vice Chairman Ed Corrigan submitted a motion to remove the LBGA's seats from the Board. No other non-elected positions, which included representative seats from the Third World Caucus, Abilities Unlimited and Graduate Student Senate, were slated for removal.

Todd Bryda, Graduate Student Senate liaison to the BOG, said he had faith in the governors' ability to work together effectively and to think clearly on issues and that recent publicity about the Board's proposal does not reflect its actual mood.

"I feel it's a shame because it makes the Board seem more divisive than it really is," he said. "I think this year's Board is more rational and can see that it's a homophobic attack from the radical right."

Gov. Laura Silver, one of two LBGA governors, said that this publicity, along with other recent negative publicity, would damage the BOG's credibility.

"At a time when the Board's [public relations] is at an all time low, to pass this proposal would be devastating," she said.

Silver also said that students will not tolerate institutional harassment. Also, Student Trustee Angus McQuilken has suggested that the LBGA sue the pair as well as the BOG for discrimination and violation of the code of student conduct.

Silver also said that statements by Maravelias, which continued to waste money despite the financial crunch. He criticized how state spending has increased by 92 percent in the past five years at three times the rate of inflation.

He added that Massachusetts has the sixth highest spending on social services and the second highest income tax rate in the country.

"This excessive spending is the result of Massachusetts being the most liberal state in the country where people expect social services — whether I agree with that or not," he said. "This has led to Massachusetts residents spending more in several do-gooder programs."

He said the $100,000 spent on the new Statehouse clock and $75,000 slated to build an art museum in North Adams are examples of excessive legislative spending.

"Question three will force the government to restructure to eliminate waste," he said. "It will give them no choice. That's the beauty of this legislation."

He said the University funding of $10,000 to lesbian, gay and bisexual issues was "a glaring example of spending waste."

"Where is it in the state constitution that public universities should financially support filth and immorality?" he asked the audience, who jeered at the comment.

The program reductions slated by the UMass administration are examples of how the state government prioritizes "middle bureaucracy" over services, he said.

"Duffey and Madson are responding to the deficit by cutting programs, not administration," he said. "The first rule of bureaucracy is to take hold and expand like seething cancer cells and CLT is the only way to hold them accountable," he said.

Student Trustee Angus McQuilken questioned Maravelias on what the motivation was behind a Confederate flag which was hung last week on the door of the office of the Republican Club, the Minuteman and the Young Americans for Freedom.

"What message were you sending to minorities on campus?" McQuilken said. Maravelias did not address the issue, questioning its relevance to the rally.

Jeff Turco, another Republican Club member speaking at the rally, said the flag was hung by one individual without the clubs' knowledge. He said that the Republican Club opposes the Klu Klux Klan and that he personally finds the Confederate flag "repulsive."

"On behalf of the Republican Club, I extend my apologies to those offended by the Confederate flag," he said.

construction work for the security forces.

A police spokesman in Dublin said the five men were arrested just across the border from the checkpoint near Londonderry, 65 miles northwest of Belfast, where five of the soldiers were killed and the civilian was reported missing.

The other soldier was killed at a security checkpoint in Newry, a village about 40 miles south of Belfast, police said.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was said to be "deeply shocked" by the bombings.

Hospital officials said the injured included six members of the security forces, all of them seriously hurt.

Both checkpoints are on the border between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic. The Newry station is located on the main road between Belfast and Dublin. Both posts have been attacked by the IRA several times in the past.

The missing civilian at Londonderry was believed to be the driver of the car carrying the bomb, police said.

At the Newry checkpoint, police said a 65-year-old man drove up in a van, jumped out and shouted, "There's a bomb in the van!" The bomb exploded before police soldiers and the driver had time to get clear. The driver suffered a broken leg.

The IRA claim of responsibility came in a statement to the British domestic news agency Press Association in Belfast. It warned that attacks could continue until Britain abandoned its "futile war in Ireland."

SGA debates restructuring of trust fund usage

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

A budget exercise, which suggested restructuring the usage of the Student Activity Fee Trust Fund to change how area governments, the Greek area and the Board of Governors are funded, came under fire last night at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

President-Chancellor Duffey recently asked each division of Student Affairs to pretend that they had to cut 22 percent of their budget by prioritizing programs and to submit the exercises to Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson by last Thursday.

"It was catastrophic planning so we could look at priorities," said Madson, who addressed the senate. "It was not to cut any particular fee but to decide what belongs in a mandatory fee and what needs to be funded in other ways."

The proposal was written last Thursday by Irene Carew, Sue Jean and Allen Brainerd of the Students Activities Office with input from SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot and Dan Chesnika, the speaker of the senate.

The primary goal of the exercise was "to eliminate the residentially based tiered system of governance as articulated in the current SGA constitution" and to make registered student organizations the "primary program priority for the SATF."

"My goal is a union of undergraduates," Chesnika said. "As the system is now, we segment the students' voice so that no one knows who to follow in a time of crisis."

Within that goal, the exercise recommended that the Board of Governors be reviewed and restructured as "... the BOG has been ineffective in carrying out its stated goals."

Mary Noone, BOG treasurer, said the exercise was unfair since she was not able to participate in the approval of the exercise through the Student Activities Trust Fund Planning Committee (SPC).

Talbot said the exercise was brought up at an SPC meeting last week, but since the exercise was not an official proposal, the SCP did not have the power to approve or oppose it, but only to give input.

The exercise also stated that on-campus residential area governments should be eliminated from SATF accounts and transferred to Housing Services' Residential Education Program.

"Area governments have a different role than the SGA," Chesnika said. "We suggested setting up a trust fund for each area government, by Board of Trustee action, which is autonomous from Housing Services."

Patricia Donaghue, co-president of Sylvan Area Government, said area governments have always conflicted with Housing Services policies and any sort of financial cooperation with Housing Services would threaten the power of area governments.

"They would ultimately hold our money back and we would lose our push," she said.

Chesnika said the exercise's statement to withdraw University recognition of the Greek system was incorrect. He said they wanted University recognition of the Greeks to end the undefined policies of the campus toward Greek housing.

'Women in Israel' making progress

EWC worker devotes sabbatical to Israeli women's movement

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Correspondent

Women in Israel are beginning to make strides in equality and more services are being provided, according to Sandra Mandel, the Everywoman's Center coordinator of referral and resources.

Mandel lectured on "Women in Israel" to about 35 students and faculty yesterday as part of the Women's Studies Brown Bag Lunch series at the University of Massachusetts.

Last spring, Mandel took a sabbatical to Israel in order to help organize the women's movement there.

"The purpose of my trip was to give coordinative and technical help to five women's groups in Haifa," Mandel said. "These five groups wanted to start making a difference in helping battered and abused women in the city."

Mandel said that before the trip she was excited about helping the women's movement and living in a non-Christian culture. She said she enjoyed being a Jew in a predominantly Jewish area of Israel.

The five groups that Mandel worked with were Isha l'Isha, which was like the Everywoman's Center, a battered women's center, a rape crisis center, the Municipality, which is much like a welfare system, and the Haifa Women's Center.

Getting these five groups to work together was quite a task, according to Mandel. She said that being an outsider helped her negotiate with the other women's groups. Most of the people working at the centers had also heard of the Everywoman's Center.

"Having the people know about the EWC gave me credibility with the Israelis," she said. "I spent a lot of time getting the groups to listen to each other and to work together."

Mandel said that the women's groups heard about the EWC through conferences in Israel.

"The EWC is internationally known and is an important model for the world. I only wish the administration would see its importance," she said.

After months of conferences and workshops the women's groups in Haifa opened one center in October, she said.

Candidate supports CLT

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Staff

Downsizing state government and reducing taxes are the only ways to get Massachusetts "back in action," said Gerald Gilbride, Republican candidate for state representative.

Gilbride, a resident of Ware, is running against Democratic incumbent Patrick Landers III in the first Hampden County District. He claims that businesses are being taxed out of the state, and strongly supports the Citizens for Limited Taxation petition, which would reduce state taxes to 1988 levels if approved by voters on Nov. 6.

"If I could vote 50 times, I'd vote 50 times in favor [of the CLT petition]," said Gilbride.

He said higher education is top-heavy and that people who claim the CLT petition would destroy it are "using scare tactics."

"I don't think it will hurt the schools at all. We can do without all those administrators," he added.

Gilbride expressed concern that ever-increasing taxes, even to support higher education, will be harmful to the state.

"What we'll be doing is educating people and then seeing them leave. They won't stay in a state that taxes them down the drain," he said.

According to Gilbride, state government has mushroomed because of the "tax and spend" policies followed for the last few years, and without changes there will eventually be a "taxpayer's rebellion."

On the issue of abortion, he said, "I am pro-choice. There's a lot of rhetoric thrown around, but who's going to speak for the unborn?"

Gilbride pointed out, however, that he is a supporter of gubernatorial candidate William Weld, who is pro-choice.

Gilbride, who is 54 years old and a self-employed contractor, has never held political office, although this is his second bid for the position of state representative.

He said his lack of political experience shows he is not "a professional politician who thinks he alone knows what is best for the people."

The first Hampden District includes Belchertown, Ware, Hardwick, Holland and Brimfield.

Window shattered by pellet

Police believe shots fired from Cance dorm

Compiled by PRESTON P. FORMAN

University police were called Tuesday night to Berkshire Dining Commons after a roof top window was shot out by a pellet gun fired from an adjacent residence hall, police believe.

Police said the window was shot out at approximately 9 a.m., sending glass cascading onto students who were studying in the building.

Officers at the scene attempted to locate the direction of the shot or shots by triangulating the shot. Police believe that the shot or shots were fired from the third or fourth floor of Cance Residence Hall.

While police were conducting an investigation in Cance, officers discovered a "bong" and seized it for destruction.

LARCENY

• A male John Adams resident reported to police Tuesday the theft of his room telephone. His roommate told police that he discovered the door open during the night. Housing Services estimates the cost of replacement at $156.

• A woman reported that her New York license plate was stolen from her car parked in Lot 22.

• A man reported that his vehicle parked in Lot 33 was broken into by smashing a window. A radar detector, $23 in cash and a flashlight were stolen. Police also said that heavy rain caused damage to the interior. The estimated damage is $180.

SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITY

• Brett staff reported to police Tuesday that a woman had been using the facilities for several days. Police located her and issued a trespass notice, since she had no affiliation with the University.

said that the proposal stated a general opposition to appointed seats on the Board, were untrue.

"Whether they choose to call it that or not," Silver said, "this is a personal attack on [about] 10 to 15 percent of the population — to say that we have no say in policy-making for the Campus Center and Student Union."

Sue Gordon, BOG chairperson, said Maravelias and Corrigan's decision to attack one group, rather than the issue of appointed seats, is a "fatal flaw" to the motion.

"I am very optimistic that the flaw in the motion will lead to its defeat," she said.

Other officers of the two student governing bodies, the Graduate Student Senate and the Student Government Association, said they did not know what action, if any, to take against the Board in the event of the motion's passage.

'Fringe' or the cutting edge of Zionism?

In the wake of the horrific massacre two weeks ago, not surprisingly, the Israeli government used the ensuing confusion and terror to announce six new settlement projects in occupied East Jerusalem alone. Foreign Minister David Levy retracted a commitment made to James Baker that there would be no further colonization and announced 15,000 new illegal encroachments, along with an aggressive plan for further settlements.

Hussein Ibish

Colonization in occupied Palestine takes place in two distinct manners. The first is quite straightforward: Land is confiscated (Israel has seized over 60 percent of occupied land) and housing is erected for the colonists. Meanwhile, land use planning restrictions limit any development by local Arab towns.

The second form of colonization, however, takes a very different and inherently covert path. This is the usurpation of already existing properties by small groups of 'private' individuals.

In Jerusalem these movements look to two main goals: the removal of all Arab presence in Jerusalem and the establishment of an exclusively Jewish ('Arabrein') city, and the destruction of the two mosques (the Al-Aksa and the Dome of the Rock) to make way for a new Jewish temple on the site. Indeed, it was the threat by one such group to actually lay the foundation for this new temple that led to the massacre.

The Israeli government, mass media and supporters have been quick to insist that these groups are 'fringe fanatics' who receive little popular support and no governmental support. The fact, however, is that these groups enjoy considerable support at the highest levels of Israeli government and from prominent private citizens in Israel and North America. Far from being a fringe group, they are the cutting edge of Zionism.

These groups are closely associated with the Gush Emunim West Bank settlement/terrorist movement founded by the late Rav Zvi Yehuda Kook. In Jerusalem there are three main settler groups of this type: Torat Cohanim led by Rabbi Petrover, the Young Israel Movement led by Rabbi Nahman Kahane (brother of Meir Kahane) and the Ateret Cohanim, led by Rabbi Shlomo Chaim Ha-Cohen Aviner.

It was this last group that gained international notoriety last April when they attempted to seize control of the Greek Orthodox Church's St. John's Hospice during Easter Holy Week. Initially, the government denied any involvement, but it soon emerged that this was an utter lie and that Housing Minister David Levy had funneled $1.8 million of government money to Ataret Cohanim. Indeed, The Jerusalem Post points out that the Housing Ministry has been secretly financing the sinister activities of this group since at least 1986.

The three main usurpation groups in Jerusalem, including the Ateret Cohanim, work together in a property consortium called Atara Leyoshna. This society receives considerable support from the Israel Lands Administration, and acts formally on its behalf when purchasing land, thus making it an arm of the Israel state. It also receives the cooperation of the Justice Ministry in locating targeted Arab property.

Individual support for this group and its publicly stated goals of an exclusively Jewish Jerusalem and the destruction of the holy Mosques begins at the highest levels of Israeli government. President Chaim Hertzog, who is constantly visiting and congratulating colonists and who refers to the Palestinians around the settlements as 'foreigners,' has given Ateret Cohanim diplomatic support in the United States, where most of its funding comes from. They are closely associated with the Housing Minister Ariel Sharon, himself a colonist. Foreign Minister David Levy, of course, funded them illegally, during his Housing tenure. All the government ministers from the Tehiya party, which is a member of the government and openly advocates the 'transfer' (expulsion) of all Palestinians from the territories, are naturally aligned with the group, particularly the Science Minister Yuval Ne'eman.

Deputy Foreign Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, who is one of Israel's main spokesmen abroad and who was quick to dismiss these groups as a 'small fringe group of fanatics,' was the keynote speaker at the group's 1988 New York fundraising dinner. Last November he was quoted in the journal Hotam as saying, "Israel should have exploited the repression in China when world attention focused on that country to carry out mass expulsions among the Arabs of the territories. Regrettably, there was no support for this policy, which I put forward then and still recommend." One of the strongest supporters of these groups is the Knesset Speaker Dov Shilansky, the Chief Sephardic Rabbi of Israel, Rabbi Mordechai Eliyahu. As for the wealthy supporters from the Diaspora, suffice it to quote Rabbi Marvin Hier, director of the Wiesenthal Center, who said of the Ataret Cohanim, "The who's who of world Jewry has poured money into this."

Such colonization attempts extend throughout the West Bank, for example, in the second largest occupied city, Hebron. The last two leaders of the settlers in Hebron were both jailed for terrorism, and have been implicated in plans to blow up the mosques, as well as other terrorism. The current leader, Rabbi Moshe Levinger, was jailed for three months after murdering an Arab shopkeeper during a shooting spree in Hebron's shopping district. He had told the court that he had been "privileged" to shoot an Arab and was carried to jail on the shoulders of his gun-toting supporters through the Casbah of Hebron.

Like the Ateret Cohanim, Levinger's Hebron Fund, Inc. is supported by the state and prominent individuals. After the murder, Minister Sharon called Levinger a "hero of our generation," and he was respectfully visited in prison by Minister Ne'eman. In a speech on his behalf, Rabbi Moshe Neriya (described by Ha'aretz as "the most senior of the religious-national educators") declared that "This is not the time to think, but to shoot [Arabs] right and left, as long as one disperses the murderers who rise against you."

I respectfully suggest that anyone who is aware of these facts will be forced to confess that the groups advocating not only colonization, but exclusively Jewish cities (particularly Jerusalem) and the destruction of the Mosques of Al-Aksa and the Dome of the Rock, are not at all the "small groups of fringe fanatics" that the Israelis contend. They may be small, and fanatical they certainly are, but with the kind of support that they clearly receive from those in power they must be seen as the cutting edge of Zionism.

Are 60s dissident gurus infallible?

On Tuesday, Oct. 23, Noam Chomsky imparted his views to an adulatory audience at Hampshire College. Chomsky has been long revered by many as a leader of U.S. dissent, as an intellectual, linguist and activist par excellence. Many in the South (so-called Third World) respect his brilliant critiques of U.S. policy, especially during the brutal Vietnam war and in Palestine.

However, his lecture left some people from the South upset and angered. Several key points made by Chomsky were elegantly stated and very insightful, especially his observations regarding the self-serving historical role played by the United States in the United Nations and his analysis of the strategic and economic motives that have converged to propel the United States into its role as self-appointed global policeman bankrolled by the Euro-Japanese powers — the New World Order.

An otherwise remarkable lecture was marred by some extremely disturbing statements that left some students from the South wondering whether Cold War and Vietnam era dissidents are utterly incapable of comprehending changed realities in a planet where the forces of secular, ethnic and religious nationalism are all grouping for a confrontation with an unified North.

But then again, it is heresy to question the omniscient genius of Noam Chomsky, especially in the United States. After all, the gurus of the U.S. Left would have us believe that they are the mentors for sane people from Calcutta, Beirut or Bogota.

We shall not dare to be so insolent. Instead we will respectfully present excerpts from Chomsky's lecture, and make a muted response at the end of each. For indeed, some of us can only rely on our limited experiences in the South and our instincts.

It* [economic aggression] was the justification offered [by Iraq] *for the invasion. Well, no sane person can accept such a reason.

Some may dare to hazard that Iraq also mentioned a historical claim to Kuwait as a justification. Regardless, it is clear that huge numbers of people residing in the region extending from Morocco to Indonesia see some logic in these claims and even support Iraq's contempt for colonial boundaries (the basis of the historical claim). But, maybe they have temporary insanity.

There is wide agreement, which I share myself, that Saddam Hussein ought to be gotten out of Kuwait. Aggression should not be permitted, in particular, aggression by somebody who really is a murderous gangster.

See muted response above.

When Washington says it is in favor of diplomacy that means something different from when, say, Europe says it is in favor of diplomacy. When Europe says it is in favor of diplomacy it means let's have negotiations and let's see what we can work out. The U.S. means first unconditionally surrender to our demands, after that, maybe we'll permit some talk.

Presumably this is strictly in the context of ongoing diplomatic feelers between Iraq and a few European nations like France. What about the astounding belligerence of Britain and other European entities?

There is a school of thought that judges Europe by its best and develops amnesia about European excesses — it is called Eurocentricism. As for the honesty of modern European diplomacy ask the New Caledonians about the French, the Angolans about the Portuguese or the Zairians about Belgium.

The choice* [for global affairs] *is, the guys who've got the guns take what they want, or else we try to have some system of world order, recognizing that it doesn't have any moral foundations; its foundations are that it exists. Now there was a system established in 1945, no moral foundations, but it existed. The system is basically that of the U.N. Charter. Sovereignty of boundaries and so on.

In their confusion some dare to posit other choices — such as redefining the order of 1945, dictated to them by the Northern victors of the World War. This order was imposed at a time when the South was struggling to break colonial shackles and come to terms with bizarre borders carved at gunpoint by European powers. Many in the South refuse to passively accept an immoral order.

Pratip Dastidar

In fact some are also armed and will challenge the guys with the guns who prefer to impose this order with force. They will also resist appeals to accept the status quo merely because it "exists." There is a word to describe the desire to protect the status quo — Conservatism.

The people who uphold it* [the U.N Charter] *are people such as the African states and the Third World and so on...the Third World has always supported the U.N. system. They want the system to be maintained because it gives them some kind of protection... Nothing else offers the hope of any improvement or even survival.

People of the South must thank this U.S. citizen for articulating the views of the Third World. Clearly, some don't agree and object to the depiction of all Third World people as cowering behind the shield of the United Nations. As to the lack of alternatives, see muted response above.

[Lebanon's leaders] are all a bunch of gangsters. Lebanon has been turned into a monstrosity.

Why do some Lebanese that have heard this lecture find these sweeping statements profoundly offensive? A beautiful land plunged into a bloody civil war is nonetheless a land of pride and beauty. It must not be denigrated as a "monstrosity."

The Third World soon will incorporate Eastern Europe. Major Western policy is to return Eastern Europe to its traditional role as Third World — A region for cheap labor exploitation, resource extraction, export of pollution and other normal Third World amenities.

One of the primary definitions of the Third World in addition to enjoying the "amenities" described above is based on total colonization: cultural, economic, military and political. No true Third World organization has ever advocated admitting any European nation (East or West) in to its fold. Eastern Europe has undoubtedly received the short end of Europe's grand larceny, but to equate this injustice with real colonial devastation betrays a lack of comprehension of the Third World experience.

What about the method of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait? Well, it was much like Panama, or Israel in Lebanon, or Turkey in Cyprus, or Indonesia in East Timor.

Perhaps not. Panama , unlike Kuwait, was not under the umbrella of Northern protection. Israel's invasion of Lebanon targeted the exiled Palestinian resistance, who surely cannot be equated to the oil-rich Kuwaitis. Turkey's intervention in Cyprus was a product of the entirely different dynamics of ethnic strife. East Timor, like Panama, had no Northern security umbrella.

My opinion is that an embargo is legitimate; an embargo on food and medicine isn't. However, an embargo is not an act of war in this case. You are overlooking one fact. Iraq invaded Kuwait. Once you respond to an aggressor you are not carrying out an act of war. If X attacks Y and there is a response to X, that is not an act of war, that's simple. You can ask whether it's right or wrong but it certainly isn't an act of war.

One might dare hazard that the Iraqi people, who are at the receiving end of this impeccable logic, might flatly disagree. Incidentally, this is the official State Department position.

Saddam Hussein represents nothing but violence, tyranny and oppression. He has created, maybe, the ugliest state in the world. I don't know if there is anything that compares with it. I mean this is the most tyrannical murderous state in the world.

While Saddam Hussein has unquestionably used large-scale violence, and does not brook dissent, one suspects that he represents more than this to the people of Iraq. If education and health care mean much to people, then Saddam and his Ba'ath party represent more than can be inferred from this statement.

Between 1977 and 1986 Iraq witnessed a 44 percent increase in primary school enrolment, and a 300 percent increase in the number of technical students. It has one of the best literacy rates in the South. It has a lower infant mortality rate than the United States and remarkable state-subsidized medical benefits.

As for being the most tyrannical and murderous state in the world, Chomsky seems to have forgotten his own remarks on such gems as the United States, Soviet Union, Israel and South Africa.

The rest of the lecture was excellent.

Point/Counterpoint: World in crisis

Fighting the war of words

I really did not want to do this. I didn't want to feel like I had to. But I've been watching, reading and listening to the political rhetoric flying back and forth on this campus.

And it's enough.

It seems to me the reason and truth have been utterly abandoned in the wake of the "United Struggle for Palestinian Rights."

Michelle Weinstock

Now, don't get me wrong, I am not against this goal. All of us, regardless of our origins, deserve the right to decide our own fates. I could go on, but on this campus, those who have engaged in the struggle do not want to hear what I have to say. To them, my words are as good as dust.

Why? Because I believe Israel has the right to exist. I am a Zionist. Because you see, the most basic definition of Zionism is a belief in and support for the state of Israel.

It is a belief, a value. In and of itself, Zionism does not advocate any single political direction. There are many kinds of Zionism. There are right-wing radicals and left-wing radicals. There are socialists, democrats and communists. There are a lot of moderates as well.

What is happening in Israel is a result of politics, not Zionism. Everyone makes decisions based on their political beliefs.

My point is, diversity of opinion allows for coherent political discourse. It seems to me, though, that because I call myself a Zionist, I am labeled a racist. People are convinced I am a racist because I believe Jews should have a homeland.

I have been made into something I am not, based on a political idea that has been misconstrued. I have been labeled the enemy, and I have yet to even open my mouth in protest.

What's happening in Israel is complex and distressing. I am pained by what I see, there are too many people dying in a nearly intractable situation.

I grieve because this is not the way it should be. But finger pointing is not going to help — no one person, or people, is responsible for this mess. I don't feel right about issuing condemnations (or accolades) from thousands of miles away.

So every day, I read the Collegian, and I see people fighting a war. It is not the war happening in the West Bank and Gaza. It's the war of the words, whose arrows are launched to attack people here. To try and convince people what side is right, who they should choose.

I don't want to choose, but I feel forced to do so. Somehow, I can't publicly support Israel and the right of Palestinian self-determination. Someone else has tried to tell me what I am.

That is wrong. It's wrong when I loathe to read the Collegian in the morning. It's wrong when I feel defensive and threatened on this campus for believing in something. It's wrong when an attempt is made to try to intimidate me.

I refuse to be intimidated. I demand to be listened to. If you want to make peace, you must talk with your enemies. I am no one's enemy.

We may not be able to win the war there, but we may be able to call a truce here.

Let's not forget humanity of issue

After reading about the deaths of 19 Palestinians, I was duly distressed and angry. What a frustrating and senseless loss of life it was.

It was, however, nothing new. For 36 months now I have been bombarded with equally atrocious stories. Some of the more graphic ones have been aired on national news.

It was what I had come to expect of the Israeli government. Bitter and hardened, I filed this fact away in the back of my mind, too. I thought it would come in handy as ammunition for the next time I got into an argument with a pro-Israeli.

Satisfied, I forgot about the whole thing until I read about the vigil protest in the Collegian ("Vigil protests, mourns killing of Palestinians," Oct. 10). It shamed me.

I realize now that my reaction, on a level no matter how insignificant, is why those 19 Palestinians died in the first place. It is exactly that sort of bitterness that fuels a crisis.

I personally had fallen victim to my own vengeance. That is, I had let it separate me from the human component of the crisis. The whole situation had become an abstract game.

The vigil, however, was to find peace. Thus, I write this letter of encouragement in the spirit of the candlelight vigil.

Let us treat Israel as a faithful ally, not a villainous enemy

Israel is and has been one of America's most faithful allies, especially in this politically unstable and volatile region.

Recent allegations against Israel's domestic policy have led some to try to demonize this friend of ours, diverting attention away from other hostilities in the Middle East.

Presenting the Palestinian situation as the other major problem in this region clouds over other more subversive movements currently in action.

Since 1987 the Intifada (uprising) has crippled Israel's domestic policy. The Palestinians justifiably want a homeland, but Israel is reluctant to provide one in the West Bank because it would create one more hostile neighbor to contend with and put the new Palestinian state within firing range of the coastal strip where 90 percent of Israel's population resides.

So it seems Israel's motives are basically for security and not because they feel the Palestinians don't deserve the homeland.

Indeed, according to recent polls, the Israelis want peace more than anything else.

Whether a new Palestinian state would create peace is questionable and could possibly create another war.

The hostile nations around Israel would enjoy seeing this nation wiped off the map and would probably supply the military support to a hypothetical Palestinian state to pursue this objective.

Instead of incorporating a peaceful diplomatic approach to the problem the diffused Palestinian groups have demonstrated with violence.

Frank Williams

They have refused to accept negotiations or any economic aid from the Israeli government so as to keep the younger population angry and volatile.

When the 3,000 protestors demonstrated in Jerusalem earlier this month, the supposed motive was a rumor that a radical religious group was planning to build a third temple on a holy Moslem site.

But actually it appears that Saddam Hussein, whom the Palestinians vigorously support, promoted the protest to divert attention from his aggressions.

It is no surprise that the protestors began to hurl stones and bottles at the worshippers assembled at Israel's most sacred site, the Western Wall.

As a reaction to the violence, the Israelis repelled the protestors and, in the process, 19 Palestinians were killed. The incident is a tragedy, as international politics culminated in the sacrifice of individuals supposedly reacting to a mere rumor.

Why is it that the death of these Palestinians is loudly clamored in the international media, whereas the stabbing death of an Israeli policeman by Palestinians a few months ago went unnoticed? (Also not mentioned are the violent deaths around the world that occur on a daily basis).

It seems that the political enemies of Israel are bent on demonizing this nation. By insisting the Israelis are a villainous group, they are attempting to divert support away from our valuable and reliable ally.

I am in no way excusing the deaths of the 19 Palestinians or the violence of any group.

But in this time of uncertainty in the Middle East, it is important to remember who our friends are.

Israel, created as shelter for the brutalized, is now brutalizer

Two massive forces are locked in eternal combat throughout world history: the oppressors and the oppressed. Beginning in 1933, Adolf Hitler imbued the oppressor class with a virulence and demonism never before seen.

Jay Allain

Employing the totalistic reach of mass media, a charismatic oratory and a state-of-the-art military juggernaut, Hitler molded the German people into a lumpen jello committed to him.

Into a Germany wracked with unemployment, inflation and political divisiveness, he offered the "Final Solution."

Six to 10 million innocents were exterminated before the plague of Nazism was finally contained.

After the war, the remnant of survivors who were Jewish forged the nation of Israel. A battered and traumatized people sought refuge.

With what hope and relief they must have established this nation.

With a powerful military that is buttressed by hefty U.S. support, Israel has become a world military power, an isolated fortress in an Arab region.

What is problematic here? The fact is that in encountering the anti-human crusade of Adolf Hitler, the Israeli Jews became infected by the will to power.

They moved from being the brutalized victims to the brutalizers.

Their forced intimacy with evil — as when a pathogen enters a healthy organism — caused the essence of fascism to pervade their body politic.

The United States has been infected, too. Reagan's war on the poor, now furthered by his protege, George Bush, the bristling military buildup of the 80s.

The domestic assault against dissent and deviance, the bully-boy invasions of Panama, Grenada and the Hitlerite manipulations of El Salvador, Nicaragua and the Persian Gulf are all symptomatic of a deranged nation-state.

When Israeli troops opened fire on rock-throwing Palestinians on Oct. 8, leaving a score more dead, the victims were no longer perceived as human beings.

They were "Them." Sub-human creatures which the tense and militarized ideology of modern Israel exempted from the right to live.

The beauty and wisdom of the Jewish religion has been eclipsed by state religion.

As in the United States, a beleaguered group challenges the dominant culture and its Machiavellian attachment to repression, military power and dehumanization of "the Other."

In both Israel and the United States, brave individuals risk being called traitors to express their belief in reconciliation and sisterhood and brotherhood for all peoples.

Armed only with the vision of a saner world and a sturdy faith in working towards it, they struggle on. They are vilified, imprisoned, denied jobs.

Who dares join them? It is not realistic.

U.S. chooses war over conservation

Prior to the Gulf crisis the defense of freedom, however self-servingly defined and selectively applied, was always an integral part of official justification for U.S. military deployment and force projection. So much so that in many cases the principles of non-intervention and non-aggression were readily violated in the name of defending of freedom.

Rashid Sheedfar

In the case of the Gulf this logic has been turned on its head. The United States has deployed its forces in the name of defending Saudi Arabia against Iraq and restoring the national sovereignty of Kuwait. But there is no talk of defending freedom because there in none in the kingdom of Saudi Arabia or the sheikdom of Kuwait. But there is plenty of oil and military contracts and sales packages to be saved.

To put the whole thing in perspective, and to address the issues raised by the proponents of maintaining international order, one wonders how the United States would have responded to the occupation of a small African country by another.

The main goals of the U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf are two: obtaining cheap oil and preserving the military-industrial complex.

Some proponents of U.S. policy have maintained that the primary U.S. objective in the Gulf is assuring a secure source of petroleum supply as opposed to obtaining relatively cheap oil. They argue that Saddam Hussein's control of Kuwaiti oil fields gives him control of over 30 percent of the world's proven oil reserves and the ability to disrupt the economies of industrialized countries by cutting off the flow of oil to the West. This is not an accurate description of the U.S. interest in the Gulf and its concern with the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait.

While the two factors of a secure source of supply and the oil price are interrelated, it is important to distinguish between the two. The oil-producing countries of the region have no alternative to selling their oil to the West as oil revenues are their only source of hard currency.

Temporary interruptions in the flow of oil can also be easily managed by the industrialized countries' vast strategic oil reserves. Then ultimately it is a question of the terms on which petroleum is obtained and that basically means the price.

This is particularly true of the United States. A secure source of supply in the Persian Gulf cannot be its main concern. The United States imports 50 percent of its consumption, of which only around 10 percent comes from the Gulf. The rest comes from Canada, Mexico and Venezuela.

The higher price of imported oil has the administration panicking. The Europeans and the Japanese are more dependent on imported oil than the United States, but they are also better prepared to deal with higher prices. They are far more efficient in energy consumption and have the trade surpluses to pay for more expensive oil. In contrast, the United States is by far the world's largest and least efficient consumer of energy. The adverse impact of higher oil prices on an already weak economy could mean the end of the Bush presidency.

The U.S. overreaction has greatly escalated the tension in the area and the chances for a bloody war. It is the result of a failure of the leadership and the system in this country. While the leadership abandoned conservation policies, the system encouraged conspicuous consumption and waste.

That is how the fate of the U.S. economy and its president have come to depend on maintaining the status quo and the survival of reactionary Arab kingdoms in the Gulf.

Let's advocate politically, economically and environmentally sound energy policies. Let's oppose war and say no to blood for oil.

A PLO publicity stunt in Jerusalem

If you were Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization and you were noticing that the world wasn't cooperating with your goals anymore, what would you do to recapture attention?

In recent editorials, Israel has been attacked for its actions against Palestinians at the Temple Mount on Oct. 8. The killings are a devastating tragedy. Very few, however, have stopped to think about the motives of the instigators, the Palestinians.

Consider this: Let's say the world was too busy condemning a certain Arab country (with whom your goals are aligned) for invading a smaller Arab country (rich with natural resources). How would you, a country which has vowed to the United Nations to renounce terrorist acts, woo reporters back to your side?

You could, conceivably, pick a major Jewish holiday and go to a place where Jews would be praying and police protection is high. The Western Wall on Sukkot? Perfect. It would also be convenient if 3,000 Arabs were nearby, gathered, for example, at the Temple Mount. Next, these Arabs provoke the Israeli police by throwing stones onto the praying Jews. The aim was not to hurt the Jews but to entice the police. Thus, the short-term goal is completed: The police try to disperse stone-throwers, by any means possible.

Don't be confused into believing the excuse that the Arabs were there to protect themselves from extreme Jewish religious groups. The Israeli courts had banned these Jews from demonstrating on the Moslem holy site, and orthodox Judaism doesn't allow Jews to set foot on the Temple Mount anyway. These facts, of course, have been downplayed.

The real losers are those who were killed. Those Palestinians, however, were sacrificed by the PLO in return for world attention. But in the long term the losing party is Israel. The PLO wanted world focus to shift from Saddam Hussein, oil prices and Kuwait, to condemnation for Israel. And, once again, it worked.

Palestinians being exploited by yet another Arab leader

The events of the past week in Jerusalem have been horribly unfortunate.

Sometimes it seems as though we'll never see the end to the wave of violence that constantly sweeps Jerusalem.

Harry Horowitz

But the events of that day at the Wall clue us in to some very important facts. The Palestinians are in a situation that is far graver than they can imagine.

Unless something is done to remedy their situation they will find themselves in a hole that will be inescapable.

What I'm referring to is the current leadership within the Palestinian community. The Palestinians constantly look to people that lead them to violence rather than peace.

Never before have Arafat, Gaddafi or Hussein made any attempt to suggest peace to the Palestinians. Their suggestions have always been toward violence.

This violence came first in the form of terrorism and then in the form of the Intifada.

What is especially sick about the Intifada is that Arafat would send teenagers in front of live ammunition and make them believe that they die for a just cause.

And the most recent event is just as sickening. By encouraging the Palestinians into further violence, Hussein is setting back any sort of peace process that might have been in motion.

So with Hussein's finger on the pulse of this begrudged community, he pushes the Palestinians into an unwinnable, bloody battle.

When I left Israel in August, pictures of Hussein were being rallied around in the West Bank. I fail to see what possible good Hussein can bring about.

He has proven in the past to be an extremely unstable and violent man.

He brutally murdered members of his own population with chemical weapons.

He plunged his country into a brutal war for a decade in which over a million were killed on either side.

Right now he is one of the most hated men in the free world.

Fear of a chemical war runs rampant around the globe. This is the man that the Palestinians look to for a leader.

The future is incredibly predictable for the Arab majority of Israel. When Hussein is through using the Palestinians, he will leave them in the dust, just like all the Arab leaders have.

Hussein claims that his reasons for invading Kuwait are based on the oppression of the Palestinians.

What's happening is that Hussein is using these people, sending them against gunfire, to justify his annexation of Kuwait.

If the Palestinians believe this, they can expect much more death and much more bloodshed.

It's time they opened their eyes and took control of their lives, rather than be directed by some outside maniacal force.

My advice for the Palestinians would be to find some leadership that is willing to stand up and say that they are tired of dying for someone else's cause and that they're sick of the killing.

In doing this, they will have made a major step toward peace and the dignity that makes a mass a people.

PLO and Saddam brothers in blood

If anything positive came out of Saddam Hussein's latest sadistic exploit, it is the true color of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

In spite of the repeated assurances given by Western media and liberal emotionalists, that Yasser Arafat is a "Prince of Peace" and the PLO is composed of "missionaries for charity," the PLO has once again displayed its tiberian motives by siding with the most radical forces in the Arab world. Any doubts? Read the congratulatory message sent by the not-so-chosen son of the Palestinian people to the butcher of Baghdad.

When Mr. Arafat had to choose between bankrolling the House of Sauds or the Iraqi despot, he chose the latter. He even called the despot "first and foremost among Arabs."

Arabism is dead. There is no such thing as Arab brotherhood.

It is wrong to judge a people by its leaders. Either due to loyalty for the Kuwaiti Al-Sabah family or due to the basic Arab (world-renowned) civility, Palestinians are engaged in a defiant struggle against the occupiers. We are with them all the way.

Abu-Abbas, a member of the 15-man PLO executive committee headed by Arafat, issued marching orders to his terrorists, "Kill Americans and Jews. Open fire on the American enemy everywhere. Quake the earth under the invaders and collaborators."

Do Palestinians want a state run by deceitful leaders and sadistic killers or live as equal citizens in the Eretz Israel?

This time it is the Arabs and Palestinians alike who have come to face the truth — sinister intentions — of the PLO and should rightfully condemn it to the trash heap of history.

Self-serving military a danger to nation

The initial explanation for the United States military deployment was the need to defend Saudi Arabia against Iraq. In retrospect, it is now clear that Iraq had no intention of attacking Saudi Arabia, as it missed its best chances for doing so in the first few days when U.S. troops had not yet been deployed.

James Bosman

The administration insisted, however, that it could take no chances with Iraq and decided to go ahead with deployment. Some observers have pointed out that in the absence of U.S. forces the Iraqis, without resorting to an invasion, could have intimidated the Saudis into agreeing to their terms for oil production.

In any case, the magnitude of U.S. military presence has far exceeded the level required for defending Saudi Arabia. To demonstrate its commitment to defending it, the United States could have deployed a token force of 10 to 20,000 marines.

The marines' tactical nuclear capabilities, combined with multicultural forces and various other military options available to the United States, would have made it inconceivable and practically impossible for the Iraqis to mount a successful attack against Saudi Arabia, while the severe pressure from economic sanctions and naval blockade would have forced them out of Kuwait.

A large scale U.S. military deployment in the area then is not necessary either for defending the Saudis or driving the Iraqis out of Kuwait. The argument for putting psychological pressure on Saddam may be countered by pointing out the pitfalls of such a foolhardy action. Building expectations for an imminent military action and heightening tensions in the area which could lead to the short-circuiting of the time required by economic sanctions.

Massive U.S. deployment may be explained in other ways. General Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in a recent interview with Insight Magazine, said, "We have got something that is so good right now. Just look at those NBC clips every morning of those young men and women out there in the desert. You don't produce that overnight. It took us 10 years to get that. Don't take it apart in one year by suddenly asking for major reductions between Oct. 1 of this year and Sept. 30, 1991."

To justify its existence in the post-Cold War era, the military has jumped at the opportunity by the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. Encouraged by the Arab, Japanese and European contributions, the military has deployed a force of more than 200,000 troops with plenty of armaments in the area.

Here, the logic is that, since others are paying for it and the more you deploy, the more they'll pay, throw in as much as you can. This, along with the profit motive on the part of the defense contractors who are the main beneficiaries of huge military spendings and have had traditionally close ties with Republican administrations, go a long way in explaining the U.S. military strategy in the Gulf.

The result is we are becoming a mercenary army for rich states to hire. The dangers are many: neglecting our industrial base and economic productivity to successfully compete with Germany and Japan, and getting into needless wars which would involve enormous loss of human lives. The costs would be even higher in case of a military confrontation in the Gulf.

We will be stuck with most of the war bill because our allies have agreed to pay for the deployment but not combat costs, and much higher oil prices — all with drastic consequences for the economy. The responsibility for this lies with the leadership in this country which is dominated by cold warriors with imperialist mentalities, and the military-industrial complex which is too entrenched and influential to allow the United States to easily cope with the requirements of the post cold war order.

Violence engulfs Pakistani elections

By KATHY GANNON
Associated Press Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Polls opened yesterday amid fears of widespread violence in a bitterly contested national election widely considered a referendum on the dismissal of Benazir Bhutto as prime minister.

Tens of thousands of heavily armed soldiers, paramilitary troops and police patrolled throughout the country. It was feared the election could be the bloodiest in Pakistan's 43-year history.

Just hours before the polls opened a candidate of Ms. Bhutto's right-wing opposition was gunned down along with five companions, news reports said. Earlier this week, several of Ms. Bhutto's party workers were killed.

Police refused to link the latest killing to the elections, but the prime minister in the army-backed caretaker government, Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi, suggested that Ms. Bhutto's party loyalists were involved.

The victim was contesting a rural seat in Punjab province, where 60 percent of the country's 102 million people live and where the vote is expected to be decided. He and his companions were killed by gunmen who fired on their vehicle during an 11th-hour tour of his constituency.

Ms. Bhutto claims her Aug. 6 dismissal amounted to a "constitutional coup" by President Ghulam Isaq Khan, and that abuse of power charges filed against her are baseless slander.

The government, which is controlled by Ms. Bhutto's foes, filed a seventh abuse of power charge against her just hours before the polls opened yesterday.

But the campaign to destroy the 37-year-old Bhutto politically may have backfired. It halted the steady decline in her popularity and helped galvanize the disgruntled rank-and-file within her party. Analysts predicted yesterday's vote would be close.

Yesterday's general elections were just the fifth in Pakistan since its 1947 inception, and never before has the military been out in such large numbers during polling.

In hotly contested areas in Ms. Bhutto's hometown of Karachi, voters lined up outside the polling booths three hours early.

The longest lines were in the sprawling slum district of Lyari, where Ms. Bhutto's jailed 38-year-old husband, Asif Ali Zardar, is a candidate.

Some senators criticized Chesnika and Talbot harshly for not getting more students' input into the exercise.

Ted Maravelias, a senator, called Chesnika a "traitor" and said he would move that both Talbot and Chesnika be impeached at next week's meeting.

Chesnika said he made sure provisions were placed in the exercise to protect the senate's access to the SATF, but warned the body that the SATF could be legally taken away from the senate by the Board of Trustees if a proposal cannot be reached soon.

Mandel lecture

It was designed to give counseling to battered and neglected women in the area. The center has a hotline open 10 hours a week.

Mandel said that women were allowed to go to a segregated section of the Wall (the remaining wall of the second temple) to worship, although only in silence. The women have been protesting this injustice by singing and praying out loud at the Wall, causing even more turmoil.

Negotiations are now being conducted between some women and religious leaders to define the women's role in prayer. Mandel said the future for women in Israel is looking brighter.

On Saturday, there will be a related talk by Marcia Freedman, who started two of the women's groups in Haifa. The talk will be at 1 p.m. at Smith College.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A business relationship that starts out oddly could grow and flourish. Clever ideas help you advance at the job. Your co-workers seek your advice; give it to the best of your ability.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Guilty a tendency to say too much at work. Keep your plans to yourself while working out the details. Travel is indicated for some. Take good care of your health. Exercise regularly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Refuse to worry about trifles. Do things right the first time and you will accomplish more. Be positive with what you are not so what they can get from you. CANCER (June 21-July 22) Loved one's idea bears fruit, thanks to your energetic response. Key alliances are subject to strain; act cautiously. Domestic obligations should come before social pleasures tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You start out in high gear today but may lack the incentive to continue. Push yourself to beat a deadline. Forge new alliances. Business contacts at a distance can make your night supreme!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your reputation could be jeopardized if you act too hastily in business. Make certain your every move is well-thought out. Sharing a secret with a close chum is a good idea.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Travel fast and work toward a well-defined goal; persistence will help you succeed. A newcomer could be an excellent source of information. Use whatever you learn to your fullest advantage.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) Romance is what you get doing fabulous today. Charitable acts can make you a star today. Identify what you have to keep secret. Bickering will likely cause valuable contacts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Widen your mind to learn and achieve. Let it explode with something that will benefit all of your loved ones. Be selfless. Devote intelligent work habits. Daydreams today spell disaster.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The agenda you set for today could be deadened by circumstances beyond your control. Keep your cool and you will avoid any mishaps. Social events require careful planning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Where there have been sharp differences in the past, there could be new disagreements today. Take pains to smooth things over. Attend to your family's needs.

PICES (Feb. 19-March 20) The personal satisfaction you get from obtaining positive results is rewarding enough. Financial planning is favored. Working overtime will put you at the point-of-some disappointing ones. "I guess I'll always remember winning the A-10s for the first time my first year here," Fagan said. "And I'll always remember the loss to Northeastern that same year to end the season, because we had such a strong team, and to go down with the feeling that we should have won was tough.

"I'm gonna miss the friendships that I've created here," she said. "When I think back on the teams that I've played on — they're all different — but we each grow close in our own ways, and I'm gonna miss all the different people that I've met."

Fagan has been on good teams before, but has never won the NCAA tournament. Like most collegiate athletes, her dream is to win a national championship.

"I'd love to beat Old Dominion in the finals because I've never beaten them," she said.

Fagan was one of the many who stood at Nickerson Field last year as Old Dominion ousted the Minutewomen in the quarterfinals, 2-1. She knows the lonely feeling of defeat, and would like to taste the thrill of victory.

Maybe this is the team to do it.

Cross country teams prep for N.E. Championships

● Women at full strength following strong A-10s

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday the University of Massachsetts women's cross country team will compete in the New England Championships, its biggest meet of the year, at Northfield Mountain, 20 minutes north of campus.

UMass appears to be in good shape and is coming off of a strong third-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Championships last weekend.

Providence College favored to win New Englands this year. The Friars are ranked No. 3 in the country and No. 1 in New England.

Boston College should be able to take home second place, but does not have the talent to compete with Providence, LaFreniere said.

"Providence is by far the best team in the region," said UMass coach Julie LaFreniere. "No other team in New England is in the top 20 nationally."

UMass will be in a battle for third place, competing with arch-rival Connecticut. The race looks to be extremely close: UMass' and UConn's times match up almost exactly, according to LaFreniere.

"It is too close to call," said LaFreniere. "They are a very good team, but we are just as good. It is going to come down to whoever wants it most."

UConn beat UMass earlier in the year 69-57 in the worst meet of the year for UMass.

UMass is hoping to get another superlative performance from Kelly Liljeblad, who last week finished seventh in

● Men head to Boston with eye on top five

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team will compete in the New England Championships at Franklin Park in Boston on Friday afternoon.

Coach Ken O'Brien hopes the Minutemen, who placed third in the Altantic 10s this past weekend, can finish among the top five teams at the New Englands.

"Our teams have consistently finished in the top five over the past few years," O'Brien said. "I think realistically we can finish fourth or fifth if we run the way we're capable of running."

Providence College, Boston College and Boston University, are the favorites this weekend; each has each won this meet during the last three years.

O'Brien said he expects the battle for the next four spots to be between Connecticut, UMass, Northeastern and Vermont.

"It would take a great effort from our entire team to try to take a top three finish," O'Brien said. "I hope that we'll be able to climb to the top of that second group, however, and finish fourth.

"New England is a very competitive region for cross country running," O'Brien said. "You won't find too many weaknesses in any of the teams in this meet."

O'Brien said he sees the Minutemen as a team on an upswing. He said that he is happy with the way the team has begun to close the gap between the top five runners.

"I think there's still room for improvement on our team," he added. "There's no doubt in my mind that we'll be even better this week than we were last week.

Field hockey's Fagan reflects on three years at UMass

Kerri Fagan

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Win or lose, Sunday is going to be a sad day for Kerri Fagan. When the University of Massachusetts field hockey team hosts the University of Maine, the senior sweeper will be playing her last game ever at Totman Field.

"It's gonna be really weird taking the field for the last time, [field hockey] has been a real big part of my life," Fagan said. "When you're doing something that you've been doing for eight or nine years of your life, to think that you aren't gonna be doing it any more, it's sad."

Fagan transferred to UMass from South Eastern Massachusetts University, a division three school. Three years later, she has developed into one of the finest players in the country. Last year she received second team All-American honorable mention honors.

Fagan has been a solid contributor for coach Pam Hixon. "When I saw her play [at SMU] I really felt that Kerri could contribute to a division one program, and she's shown that she has," Hixon said.

"Kerri probably used to be one of the most nervous players to ever set foot on my field," Hixon said. "I can remember her the first time she played Old Dominion two years ago at home. Kerri was shaking, I thought she was gonna throw up before the game. She has really overcome that fear of failure and nervousness to become a picture of confidence on the field."

Fagan is the last player the opposition sees before getting to the goalie. If the goalie is the head of a body, Fagan is the neck, maybe even the spine.

"She really directs the defense, and controls the game more than any player on the field," said Tracy Barclay who plays opposite Fagan on the right. "She's taught me a lot about discipline. In the beginning of the year, she'd push me out of the way, or yell at me to get back on my man, she's really helped me out a lot."

"She's a very hard working player, an intense competitor, she doesn't give up easily," said Kathy Phelan who plays opposite Fagan on the left. "She controls the whole field just by talking."

Tournament time is about one week away, and no one knows better than Fagan that it will take a total team effort for UMass to come away A-10 Champs and maybe even national champs.

"I think we have a real good shot at winning the A-10s," Fagan said. "I'd like to say that we have a shot of winning the NCAA tournament, but it's a little early, we don't know the seeds yet. We have a real good team and we'll just have to see what comes. I think we can play with the top teams in the country."

When Fagan leaves UMass she will be taking with her some fond memories, and

V breaks streak, beats BC

By FELICE COHEN

Can you dig it? The UMass Volleyball Team did 34 times. 34 digs that is. Creaming Boston College, now 12-14, 15-7, 10-15, 15-6, 16-14, UMass finally proved to all of us die hard fans exactly how they're capable of playing.

Blocking, serving, spiking. Is this the same team that is 4-19? You bet. "UMass came up with some very impressive stats. A total of 10 blocks, 13 big service aces and a whopping 50 kills.

"We played better than they did, we deserved to win," beamed Coach Carol Ford. "These kids come back to work every single day. Finally we played good volleyball and won."

"Everyone wanted to win," breathed a tired Sharon Panoff, who had a game high 17 kills. "This was the best game to win."

UMass lost to BC twice this season. "They [BC], usually come in thinking they can beat us," added Captain Nancy Sullivan, who was next in line with 11 kills, "but it took everyone on the bench and on the court to win. This was definitely the turning point in the season. We showed everyone that if we work this hard, we can do it. I'm in awe." She's not the only one.

"They [UMass] came ready to play with fire in their eyes," said a rather upset BC coach, "[UMass] scrapped like crazy, they've obviously been working their tails off. Carol's done a great job with them."

I think Sullivan summed it up best, "We did it!"

Hey, UMass Volleyball, we knew that you could!

STROKE BY STROKE — The UMass Women's varsity boat came in 27th of the 30 at the Head-of-the-Charles-Regatta in Boston last weekend. Coach Deb Fine said she was proud of the boat's performance and attributed placement to its young squad. She added that physically they are in great shape and just need more experience. Senior Jen Blum coxswained the varsity team with seniors Rachel White, Susane Maloney and Jenn Geary along with sophomores Deanna Cook, Ann Budreski, Jen Lambert, Courtney Harold and Mary Breslin. The team will compete in Philadelphia this Saturday as will the Men's varsity 8.

There'll be no little schoolgirl running off the side of your television screen on the nights of October 30 and 31, there'll be no box cars, bears, statues of liberty, no rod iron cooking pot or families singing about adverbs. Oops! Well, not exactly. There will be a family singing for you, though.
The family is more than 20 students from the University of Massachusetts Music and Theatre Guild. Since the end of September they have been throwing heart, soul and youthfulness into rehearsals for the stage adaptation of Schoolhouse Rock. Practices have occupied their lives five nights a week, but that's ok, for this cast. It will all come to fruition during the last two evenings of this month.
Peter Kasperowicz said the cast bonded really quickly.
It was really amazing how fast we all became friends. There were about two people who had known each other when we first walked in for rehearsals. We've had a lot of fun, too much sometimes, but it has been a blast.
Basically, Kasperowicz explains, the show will be similar to Godspell in that no one has only the following role and the leads switch off during most all songs with everyone participating.
Director Bill Larkin said he got the idea while working on a show in Chicago about three years ago and so he called ABC for the rights to the videos of Schoolhouse Rock, was denied, but was given permission to perform the songs in public. Larkin proceeded on a hunch that ended in the bookstore of Boston University where he found the video tapes of the popular 80s blurbs and firmed his conception of a show at once reminiscent and hopefully successful.
Since none of the music was written, it all had to be transcribed and the man for the job, assistant director Kelly Hines said, was Pete Fernandes.
"He's been awesome, really patient and super hard working.
Energy and joy in the rehearsals is unmistakably contagious.
Hines said when she walks into the rehearsals it's like walking into a huge hug.
We have such a wide cross section of people here that it's just simply amazing. There are people from fraternities and sports teams to almost any group that you could think of," she said.
Hines, as well as members of the cast, credit Larkin with keeping spirits up, which — by the way — doesn't seem too difficult as Elise Schild explains.
"Everyone here is themselves, we get together and it's like we're eight years old again.
Larkin said the cast will perform Schoolhouse Rock for students at the Wildwood Elementary School in Amherst tomorrow.
I'm completely psyched about that.
Adam Putnam, bassist in the pit band for the show, said he was thrilled when he found out that the show would use a pit band.
I began listening to the tapes of Schoolhouse Rock with a friend last January and since then, I've been really caught up in the nostalgia. When I was walking by the Campus Center Concourse last month and heard the music, I couldn't believe it.
A last week push to publicize the production entails traffic jams outside the Hatch and on the Concourse as members of the cast silly stand, sing and generally grab the attention of passersby any way they can. It might even include a query of, "Excuse me, but what's your favorite ice cream flavor?"
Flavor?
Oh well, o.k. Thanks, and be sure to see Schoolhouse Rock next week.
Schoolhouse Rock will be presented by the U Mass Music and Theatre Guild Oct. 30 and 31 in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for Five College students and $5 for the general public.

Entertaining political satire

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

Everyone knows the story of the perverted old miser who wants to marry a young girl the age of his daughter, and get his own daughter married off to an older man closer to his age — all for his only lust, money, which he enjoys merely withholding from others.

The Miser has reached a new climate, culture and level of political satire in Carlos Morton's recent play. Set in Mexico in 1910, just prior to the Mexican Revolution, it has only been produced twice before — in El Paso, TX and California where it was performed in Hispanic communities. (The script contains a lot of Spanish household words and expletives.)

This is the first production in a more mainstream community, and the director Michael Birtwistle worked directly with the playwright to develop the script for its current incarnation.

"Perhaps I'm putting in the political background that Hispanic audiences already understood," Birtwistle explained. "I like the edgy, peculiar, seeing beneath the appearance."

The excellent set design by student Alec Hammond is both efficient and evocative; the desert sand of the peasants creeps seditiously over the wealthy ranch house, a corner of the tiled floor curls up like dry parchment and the stage tilts down perilously toward revolution.

The character of the Miser (who is actually modeled after the historic Minister of Finance) is developed more as a dangerous power baron in the corrupt Mexican government, than a mere hoarding creep. Analogies to the Savings and Loan crisis are inevitable.

This critic was privy to a dress rehearsal, and can report that, on the whole, a well-matched cast combined the comic opera of love with burlesque social satire, for an entertaining evening. The play is 100 minutes without intermission, but it has good pacing and flies by before you know it.

For those who have bothered to read this far, however, I will interject some tentative criticism. Much of the acting is good (Lara Sao Pedro as the daughter Elisa and Nick Finklestein as her brother Clemente are examples) and all of it is good some of the time, but none of the characters are focused enough for my taste.

I didn't see a final commitment to any one characterization or style, which might have both raised the ironic tension, and been ultimately funnier.

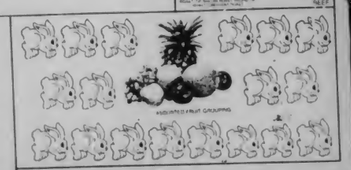
One moment the maid (one of the well-drawn minor roles along with the Generalissimo) would be hitting people in the face with her broom in perfect slapstick, and the next there would be a quasi-serious discussion abut love and money.

The Miser Don Profundo (played mincingly by Ben Turner) was never quite either a tragic hero or a buffoon, but he vacillated between them in a way found confusing.

The staging, too, was so open, that sometimes it was difficult to suspend one's disbelief when one actor was supposed to be deaf or blind to another actor, who was really only a few feet away during some of the more complicated comic bits.

It will be interesting to see how these details get ironed out in production.

Where's my moloko?



Deep in the bowels of the Campus Center, diligent students toil for countless hours to bring to you the paper whose ink is coming off on your hands as your read this enthralling piece of literature. As the night drags on, these faithful workers must seek an escape from the tedium of news and Mountain Dew that engulfs their sad lives. A combination of creativity and insanity, the FILLER was born from this mass of amorphous tissue. Each day, especially on Thursday, you bear witness to the results of this madness. From the sleep deprived minds of Seth, Mike, Terry, Danielle, Sharon, Jenna and Jody, the graphics staff, present these, the FILLERS, for your amusement and wonder.

UM music professors to perform

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Chamber Players, composed of four music professors from the University of Massachusetts, will present their opening concert this Sunday in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Mozart's Sonata for violin and piano, K 454 in B flat Major will open the concert.

The Shostakovitch Piano Trio Op. 67, a major 20th century work, will also be performed.

Brahm's Horn Trio, Op. 40 is set to close the performance.

The group was originally a trio composed of a violinist, cellist and pianist, but expanded in order that they might play a larger repertoire.

Professor of piano Estela Olevsky, who has been with the music department since 1969, said, "We try to select programs with a combination of piano and strings and wind to make it more interesting."

The French horn will be played instead of the viola, an instrument that is normally a part of the group.

Laura Klock, a guest player, is being brought in to perform with the group.

Olevsky, who will be playing piano, has toured throughout the United States, Latin America, New Zealand and the Middle and Far East.

Violinist Charles Treger, who has been with the music department for four years, has been playing for 36 years with more than 3,000 concerts to his credit. He has toured with pianist Andre Watts as part of the "Treger-Watts Duo."

Leopold Teraspulsky was principal cellist of the Pittsburgh Symphony under Fritz Reiner, member of the Aspen Festival Quartet and member of the Pro Musica Trio.

Slated for retirement at the end of this academic year after a long time association with the music department, Terapulsky has recorded for Columbia, Coronet, Pro Musica and Orion Records.

Klock, French horn player, is in her 17th season with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra. She has also performed as principal horn with the New Hampshire and Portland Symphonies and with the Rhode Island Philharmonic.

"The highlight of the group is that it is of international stature in the chamber music scene," Olevsky said. "We are lucky enough to all be on the same faculty. It is a terrific opportunity to be able to play with one another.

"The exciting part is the interaction. Stimulating and coaching each other. We always feel we are improving each other's careers."

Chamber Players have performed together for three years. This will be their only performance this semester.

"We try to play on different campuses because one of the professors teaches at Smith College also," Olevsky said.

Wartime offers sane advice to an insane society

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

It all seems like some sort of crazy nightmare.

Day after day, the media bombards you with something new to worry about — recession, the Middle East crisis, the environment, AIDS, racial tension, the drug war, Dan Quayle.

It becomes more disparaging when you go outside and observe the people around you. They seem apathetic and comatose. You witness the massive decay engulfing the world around you. You feel overwhelmed.

You ask yourself, "Where does it end? When does it get better? How can I cope?"

Henry Rollins has found a way to help you cope. It's called Wartime.

According to Rollins, Wartime is an understanding that can help you deal with the world and not only survive, but prevail. It can help you keep your head together while everyone else is losing theirs.

Wartime is also the title of Rollins' latest project, an album that he put together with Andrew Weiss when they found some extra time to devote to this side project last year.

"We sent tapes out to everybody and their dad," Rollins said in a recent interview with Paper Magazine.

The tape attracted the attention of Chrysalis Records, who then agreed to release the album. This was not the first major label deal for Rollins, as he released a spoken word track entitled Sound Bites from the Counterculture on Atlantic Records, but this was a first for Weiss.

"As far as getting shit happening, this is a nice change," Weiss claimed in the same interview with Paper Magazine. "With smaller labels, it's not that they don't want to get shit happening, they just don't have the capabilities like these guys do."

Rollins added, "Everything they say they're gonna do, they do. It's been a really human experience so far, and they seem to truly like what we're doing 100 percent."

Both Rollins and Weiss admitted that this project takes a direction away from the material they produce with their current band, aptly named Rollins Band which consists of Rollins on vocals, Weiss on bass, Simeon Cain on drums and Chris Haskett on guitar. Weiss described the lyrics, penned by Rollins, as extrospective and the style as having a monogroove sound. Rollins added that Wartime offers a positive message and compared the listening experience to "a high power trip in times of a low level existence.

"The groove is severe, but hey take a look around," he said.

If the name Henry Rollins sounds familiar, that should come as no suprise. Rollins was once a member of the vanguard hardcore group Black Flag. Through his involvement in Black Flag, he obtained cult figure status in the underground scene. Four years ago, he formed Rollins Band with Weiss, Cain and Haskett. Aside from his involvement in Rollins Band and the Wartime project, he has also kept himself busy with critically acclaimed spoken word tours and a literary publishing company.

Rollins said that he feels he has been rewarded for his efforts. As he told Paper Magazine: "You've really got to love what you do. Otherwise, it's just too fucked to deal with. Success is a funny word. For me, I feel very successful because I get to go rock out. Some people see success as dollar signs. I never really thought of it that way."

"I truly believe that at the end of the day, you'll get what you deserve," Weiss added. "You just can't think in terms of dollars or units or any of that shit when you're making music, unless that's the kind of music you want to make. That's got to be the furthest thing from your mind."

Rollins Band will play Katina's on Sunday. Local thrash band Doom Patrol will open for them. Show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Super New Styles!

A brief, bone chilling tale about Danzig

Seething, evil machismo.

These three words could aptly describe Danzig.

Consider, if you will, these basic facts about the band. First of all, front man and founder, Glenn Danzig, has an intense intellectual interest in Satanism. Secondly, one could say that the names of his fellow band members, drummer Chuck Biscuits, guitarist John Christ and bassist Eerie Von, are likely to send shivers up and down one's spine upon mention.

Thirdly, this is a sample of the lyrics from "I'm the One," off of their latest album Danzig II — Lucifuge: "I was a snaked-eyed boy/and at the age of five/ I made love to the howl of the wolves/with a dark haired girl/so if you wanna hear evil/come a little bit close."

Lastly — their sound, a grungy, slow but power driven groove, is reminiscent of what one could find playing at a nearby Hell's Angels' hang out. So with these facts presented, it is safe to assume that the above mentioned description is fitting.

Glenn Danzig, former front man for the The Misfits and Samhain, hand picked the members of Danzig to obtain the paramount fruition of his ideas. They released a self-titled debut LP in 1988 and the follow-up, Lucifuge, this summer.

"We offer more than rock 'n' roll and killer songs," Danzig said about his music. "We understand drama, powerful imagery and powerful words. We're not saying stupid stuff."

Danzig, with special guests the Cycle Sluts, will play Katina's on Friday. The all-ages show will start at 8:30 p.m.

UM service employees union oppose all layoff proposals

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The local union of University of Massachsetts service employees decided at a meeting Wednesday to oppose all layoff and furlough proposals, and mailed a letter containing this decision to the administration yesterday.

Dick Coach, president of AFSCME local 1776, said the union opposed the proposal because there was no provision in their contract for across-the-board furloughs and "the administration has not given [them] a guarantee that this will not happen again."

"The administration calls its proposals retrenchment. We perceive it as being lock-out, for we're getting no other choice," he said.

Last week, President-Chancellor Duffey outlined a three-point proposal that would include a fourlough for the campus' approximately 5,200 employees without pay for up to five days this acedemic year. Duffey said the unpaid fourloughs would save the University $750,000 a day.

Duffey said if the unions do not agree to the proposal there will be "mid-year layoffs across-the-board."

Coach said the administration has called for a five-day furlough for all service employees sometime within the next two months.

However, the administation been vague as to how it would affect such important issues as employee cash flow and vacation credit.

The furlough proposal would save the University about $450,000, said Coach.

Coach added if furloughs did become necessary, the union would insist on furloughing employees on a superiority basis as is stated in their contract regarding layoffs.

Coach also criticized the administration for not negotiating directly with the union.

"The University, instead of sitting down and discussing the furloughs, has negotiated through the media. [We have therefore] filed for unfair labor practice on the grounds that the University has violated collective bargaining laws," he said.

Coach said that along with the present negotiations concerning the current budget cuts, the union is continuing its one-and-a-half-year-old negotiations with the Board of Regents concerning a new contract.

He said union members have not received a raise since June of 1988 and are frustrated because "the administration seems to go through the motions of negotiating, but won't talk in terms of dollars and cents and working conditions."

The AFSCME local 1776 union consists of Physical Plant, Food Services, Farm and Security employees at the University of Massachusetts.

Professors: no deal on furloughs, layoffs

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors released a statement yesterday claiming administrators have not looked into other ways to avoid furloughs.

In their weekly board meeting Wednesday, the MSP voted unanimously that they were "opposed to a pay cut in the form in the form of "furloughs" or "layoffs."

According to the statement, administrators, faculty, and other staff must sacrifice every "business as usual" activity before the furloughs are considered.

The MSP will "demand that every dollar of unnecessary administrative overhead be cut before staff members are asked to accept a pay cut."

BOG votes to table amendment to eliminate LBG seats

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

After five and a half hours of heated debate, the Board of Governors voted to table a proposed constitutional amendment that would eliminate the two Lesbian Bisexual Gay seats from the Board.

Many of the meetings participants were "disgusted" and "outraged" by the evening's outcome.

"This is a farce. I don't want to go through every meeting with an ax hanging over my head," said Laura Silver, one of the two LBGA Governors.

"This whole evening was moronic. A nightmare of bureaucracy and double-talk," said Chris Thomas, an LBGA governor.

Approximately 35 LBGA members and supporters sat in on the meeting and were invited to participate in the debate, which at times became so heated that Chairwoman Sue Gordon had to use her gavel to keep order.

Debate centered around the fact that the Third World Caucus, Abilities Unlimited, and Stockbridge seats which are also non-elected seats were not targeted for elimination.

Governor Ted Maravelias and BOG Vice Chairman Ed Corrigan, the co-proposers of this motion, did not agree on the reason behind this motion.

Corrigan argued that the Third World Caucus might need help understanding democratic or Western culture. He said he did not feel LBGA members had this same need for representation.

"I don't see any special needs for gays, which is why I'm singling out the LBGA," he said.

Protests quickly erupted at Corrigan's argument. Members of the Third World Caucus said they were insulted by his implications they only represent foreigners.

Governor Maravelias, on the other hand,

Local pigeons make a mess

By STACY NEALE
Collegian Correspondent

A health hazard has been causing a stink in the Amherst Town Hall and it must be corrected with Amherst residents' tax dollars, according to Amherst town officials.

The attic windows of the Town Hall were recently repaired, however, only after pigeons had occupied the attic for some time and left a considerable mess behind. This pigeon debris is not only unsanitary, but also a health hazard and must be cleaned up.

"The pigeon droppings are not considered toxic, but they are a health hazard," Laurie Benoit of the Town Hall Manager's Office said.

"Pigeons are carriers of many diseases and when droppings are inhaled these diseases can be transmitted and cause illness in humans," Benoit said.

Freedom reigns

Man reflects perilous escape

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

An Amherst man has gone from running for his life through the jungles of Cambodia to the stability of janitorial work at the University of Massachusetts.

Sokha Mao's story began in the small Cambodian village of Toaopanchan. Now, almost 30 years later, he recounts the events that have brought him halfway around the world to the University of Massachusetts.

Mao, 30, came to the United States nine years ago, after a "harrowing" escape from the Communist regime in Cambodia. After stop-overs in both Thailand and the Phillipines, he made his way to Amherst, which he now calls home.

"At first it was very difficult," says Mao of his first years in America. "We didn't speak any English, and it seemed that the people weren't very friendly."

But life in America was nothing compared to his journey through the Southeast Asian jungle, he said.

argued he was singling out the LBGA because he was "trying to minimize the impact on the Board."

"Although I am right, some people may perceive what I am doing as wrong which will cause the BOG negative publicity. I don't want to be to blame for the BOG being dissolved," he said.

The overall feeling at the meeting last night was that this incongruity between Corrigan and Maravelias would cause the failure of their motion.

Lynn Vickery, a member of the LBGA, said at the meeting, "Ted's digging his own grave. There are huge holes in his argument and he's disagreeing with Ed."

At 11:30 p.m., Governor Mike Volmar asked the motion be called to a vote. Maravelias, in turn, asked the motion be tabled, at which point a vote was taken to decided if it should be tabled. The results were 13-11-1 for tabling it.

World in Brief

Campus crime bill passes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill awaiting the president's signature will compel colleges and universitiews to tell students how many major crimes are committed on campus.

The "Student Right-to-Know and Campus Security Act" would require federally-aided colleges and universities to report campus crime statistics each year to students and employees. Covered crimes include murder, rape, robbery and auto theft.

The measure was merged with another bill requiring institutions to release graduation rates of all students and students on sports scholarships. Schools would also have to make data available on athletic department revenues and expenditures, and on racial composition of scholarship athletes.

University of Massachusetts administrators generally approved of the aims of the bill when the bill was in committee.

Dukakis will vote for Silber

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Dukakis says John Silber may be argumentative, contenious and opinionated, but the Boston University president has his vote for governor.

"He's argumentative, he's contentious, he's opinionated, but he also believes very strongly that governors are elected to do things," Dukakis said in an interview published Thursday by The Patriot Ledger of Quincy.

Last week, in an interview with WBZ-TV, Dukakis said he would vote for Silber.

Brandeis diversity chief resigns

WALTHAM (AP) — An administrator hired to help minority students adjust to Brandeis University has resigned in frustration. He says university officials lacked commitment to creating a racially-diverse campus.

"It was during the rainy season that we decided to leave," he said. "We didn't know where we were going, but we knew we couldn't stop. We had to keep moving to avoid being shot."

He added, "There were bodies everywhere, and all I could here were the sounds of machine gun fire. It smelled of death but we didn't have any time to care, we just had to get out."

After escaping Cambodia, Mao found employment in Thailand, were he spent the next year of his life. It was there he met his wife, and made his decision to come to America.

He said he came to America to the United States because "I just wanted my family to have a better opportunity than me, I wanted to start over."

After a period of adjustment, Mao, his wife, and more recently his three children, began feeling more comfortable in their new surroundings. He was able to find employment at the Crocker Farms School in Amherst, were he trained as a janitor for a three-month period.

"It was there that I was able to learn a lot of English," Mao says. "It was through interacting with different people and listening to them, that I learned the language."

In 1986 he began working with the University, as a janitor in Dickinson Residence Hall, a position which he still holds. Although he may not always enjoy the work, he loves speaking with the students, and learning from them.

"In my first year here, I didn't like it because the people were acting like I owed them something," says Mao. "But now it's better, everyone is very friendly, and at Christmas time I even get presents from some of the students."

He said his life in America has not always been easy, but he is thankful that he has had the chance to provide a better life for himself and his family. Mao and his wife recently became American citizens, and this past summer became the proud owner's of their first house.

Mao wants to return to his country someday, but for now is content with being in Amherst.

"I've been away from my hometown for 22 years now, and I'd really like to go back soon," he said. "Although I've been in this country for almost 10 years, I'm still a little homesick."

Angry voters say "None of the Above"

Local residents start drive to show political frustration

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

It might not be the American way, however, Massachusetts voters who are fed up with the lack of good candidates for local and statewide offices can harness their dissatisfaction by not voting for anyone.

The Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign are encouraging voters to write-in "None of the Above" for every race in which there is no candidate they want to vote for, to protest private contributions to campaigns for public office.

The NOTA (None of the Above) drive has been started in Amherst, Northhampton, Pelham, Wendell and Shutesbury by local residents and University of Massachusetts students. They are distributing NOTA stickers for voters to place on their ballots.

"We want to establish a truly representative government with one person, one vote — not one dollar, one vote," said Dennis Kelly, a campaign member.

Ideally, if enough people vote NOTA, then the two undesirable candidates would be thrown out and the election process would start over again with new candidates, he said.

"A fair number of people are dissatisfied with politics as usual and want a comprehensive reform of political processes," he said.

Kelly said although some voters are turning against incumbents this election, he predicts incumbents will win by majority because they are more financially equipped to campaign from Political Action Committee contributions.

In the 1988 state senate elections, Kelly said 97 percent of winning candidate were incumbents who were 91 percent financed by PACs. In the State House of Representatives, 88 percent of all incumbents' campaign financing came from PACs, he said.

He said PACs give to incumbents because incumbents sit on House committees where many decisions are made before the body's approval. Those PAC contributions will put more incumbents back on Beacon Hill than ever before, Kelly predicted.

"There may be an anti-incumbent feeling this year, but incumbents sit in ivory towers because of all the PAC contributions in their campaign warchests," he said.

Election registrars in Massachusetts are not required to tally NOTA votes, but Kelly said the registrar of Wendell has agreed to count NOTA votes and that he is presently negotiating with other registrars.

Kelly said a growing number of NOTA voters can help change the negative campaign tactics that many candidates are opting for this term.

"If they knew that we had the ability to reject both of them, then the candidates would change their behavior," he said.

Young artists to strut stuff at Band Day

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Junior high and high school musicians and color guard members from 39 schools will step onto the field with the University of Massachusetts' Marching Minuteman Band this Satuday in conjunction with the Sixth Annual Band Day.

Approximately 2000 students, will arrive in Amherst early in the morning and spend three or four hours rehearsing with collegiate instructors before the game against Northeastern University.

"We really give the high school students and the junior high students a flavor for what it's like to be involved in a marching band on the university level," Thomas P. Hannum said, the band's associate director. "It's a very positive experience."

"We send out invitations throughout the New England area at the end of May. The invitation isn't selective but open to anybody, mostly high school," explained Hannum.

The students will appear in their own uniforms, representing schools from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York.

In light of the current budget crunch, Hannum said he was surprised at the large number of schools attending this year.

"I thought people might not have the money for buses this year," he said.

"The program has amazingly continued to grow," Hannum said, "When we started out we had three bands."

"Band Day is great for the [Minuteman] band as well as for the Music Department, and the high schools get to experience the excitement of a collegiate football game."

Legislators: want to curb further cuts

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Faculty members yesterday riddled two area legislators with questions about further cuts, tuition hikes and fee increases as protests over the recent proposal to cut and reduce 14 University of Massachusetts departments grow louder.

State Senator John Olver and Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) addressed the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday, assuring faculty members they would continue to try to curb further cuts to UMass and other state colleges and universities.

When asked why the state could not come up with $2 million to save the 14 departments slated for reductions and eliminations, Rosenberg said there was no justification for the state's lack of money.

In light of recent events in Eastern Europe, the falling of the Berlin Wall and successful democratic movements in East Bloc nations, Rosenberg said it was hard to justify reducing the Slavic and Germanic language programs.

"During a major crisis in health care, we're cutting public health programs," he said. "Education needs to be brought up on the [state] agenda even if it means eliminating some of the things the government."

Rosenberg said despite his many speeches about the importance of sparing public higher education from cuts, many senators who have received education through the private sector still believe students who go to UMass come from relatively the same income bracket as students who go to private colleges and should pay more for their education.

Endorsing Democratic gubernatorial candidate John Silber's recent proposal to raise UMass tuition up to $5,000, Olver said with the funds going directly into the campus, administrators would have more control over how and where to cut.

Silber's proposal would gauge tuition at a student's family income, subsidizing tuition and fees of low-to-moderate income families.

Two weeks ago, the administration announced its plans to cope with the most recent 4 percent across-the-boards cut. Fourteen departments were slated for reductions and eliminations, while a five-day furlough program, fee and tuition hikes and pay cuts were proposed.

The senate and the faculty union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, have 180 days to review the proposals.

Campaign reaches out to newspapers

Form-letter project gives students a say in hometown media

By LESLIE MENCHER
Collegian Correspondent

MassPIRG is sponsoring a letter-writing table in front of the Student Union mini-store today to inform people of the Citizens for Limited Taxation petition.

Their project, in which students sign form letters to send to their hometown newspapers regarding current ballot issues, took place yesterday and continues today from 10-6.

This endeavor follows up their voter registration project which attracted 2,500 UMass students. Scott Powers, a senior member, said, "We did that, now we have to educate people."

According to member Aaron Rome, yesterday some 126 students signed form letters addressed to 53 newspapers.

MassPIRG does not have a number-related goal, instead they are looking to inform as many students as possible.

Member Preston Holmes says, "I'm just hoping that people take the opportunity to let people in their hometown know how they feel."

Another of their goals is to cover as many hometown newspapers as possible. Powers explained that they hope that residents of the hometowns will be supportive when they realize that people they know will be affected.

Rome said, "The idea is to branch out across the state. Local newspapers are a way to get the information across."

They are asking out-of-state students to sign a generic letter to either the Globe or the Herald. "Everything has to add up," Powers said.

"Basically our voter registration project is over, but we want people to make informed decisions at the polls. It is not better to have uninformed students to vote than to have not vote at all," according to member Jenifer Wood.

Powers said, "You can't just vote," he says, "you have to know what you're voting about."

Mass. Independents struggle to pass question 4

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Independent Massachusetts parties want to make state election laws easier for minority parties through the passage of ballot question four by voters in the Nov. 6 election.

Question four, called the Fair Ballot Access Initiative, would change state election laws to allow minority parties and independent candidates easier access to the electoral process, while maintaining reasonable minimum requirements, according to the Committee for Fair Ballot Access who sponsored the initiative.

The Massachusetts Republican State Committee opposes question four because its passage would allow independent candidates, with no real measure of public support, access to the general ballot without requiring them to the same rigorous campaign policies demanded for Democratic or Republicans.

The petition would effect petitioning and registering in these ways:

- Allow voters to register under an independent party, if a minimum of 50 voters wish to do so, rather than registering Democratic, Republican or "unenrolled" as the system stands now.
- Allow any group to qualify as a political party if one percent of total voters register under that political designation or if 3 percent of voters supported a candidate from a certain political designation.
- Lower the signature requirements from 2 percent to 1/2 percent for gubernatorial candidates, a reduction from 40,000 signatures to 10,000 signatures.
- Permit voters to sign the nomination papers of any number of candidates for the same office before campaigning begins.
- Require all petitions to be a uniform, standard size for copying purposes and to allow signatures on exact copies.

The Fair Ballot Access Committee spokesperson said Massachusetts has the sixth strictest ballot regulations nationally while 42 percent of registered voters are independent.

Thus, the "monopoly" which majority parties have in elections has alienated many voters, particularly minorities and students, which accounts for low voter turnout nationally, he said.

Independent parties supporting the initiative range widely on the political spectrum, he said. The Libertarian Party, the Socialist Workers Party, the New Alliance Party and the Rainbow Lobby all support question four.

Mark Emanatian, the Socialist Workers Party's gubernatorial candidate, said question four would give voters the opportunity to "to express their disenchantment with the Democrats and Republicans" by voting for a third party if election ballot laws were loosened. The SWP was not able to meet the requirements to get on the ballot this election, he said.

The statement cites that members of the MSP have already made enough sacrifices including:

- No pay raise in the past two years.
- A mandatory 10 percent increase in the cost of health insurance premiums.
- An increased work load as the result of the attrition of over 140 faculty/librarian positions in the past two years.

The administration's proposal for the furlough would include four days in late December and one day in late November when the University is not offering classes.

The MSP statement states "quiet acceptance of a "furlough" on the day after Thanksgiving, Christmas Eve and the three days following Christmas does nothing to help the Massachusetts taxpayers, and does nothing to help Massachusetts taxpayers understand the irreparable damage being done to this University."

President-Chancellor Duffey proposed the furloughs last week in an effort to offset three 4 percent across-the-board cuts to the University's budget.

The MSP said they would not break the individual contracts of faculty and librarians by accepting the furloughs.

question 4

"Over the years, the Democrats and Republicans have tightened their political monopoly because it's too hard to get on the ballot," he said. "They run the statehouse and pass the election laws. The referendum question is good because it gives people a chance to make their own decisions."

Although the Republican party will not devote any resources to fight question four, a spokesperson for the party said Republican think question four could undermine the seriousness of the election ballot if groups with "narrow interests and small followings" are given access.

"If a group has enough of a following, then they should be able to reach the requirements which are a measure of public support," said Ted Frier, the communications director for the Massachusetts GOP.

He said both Republican and Democratic candidates for statewide offices "have to go through a rigorous gauntlet of requirements," such as a petition of 10,000 signatures and winning 15 percent of delegated support at their party's primary. He said since Independents do not participate in primaries, they should have stricter petition requirements.

The Town Hall is occupied by most of the town officials and employees of Amherst and the problem poses a potential health risk to them and others who enter the building.

Under Chapter 149 of the Massachusetts General Laws, the Town of Amherst has sent out 32 bid specifications to contractors all over the state. The interested contractors will send their bids to the town and then Amherst will decide whether to honor the lowest bidder to do the job.

"It is not a cut and dried procedure," said Benoit. The money may not be appropriated from Town Meeting because the bid may be too high, or the Town may not agree with the proposed cleanup procedure.

"A year ago money was appropriated for an Amherst school which had the same problem with pigeons," Chet Penza of the Building Commissioner's Office said.

The cost of the attic cleanup is estimated at about $155,000, Laurie Benoit said. This money will come from Amherst residents' tax dollars.

"Who else could do it?" Micheal Miller, an Amherst resident asked. "the money has to come from taxes, it's the town's responsibility."

"It is impossible to determine when the cleanup will be finished. "The money has not even been appropriated yet," Benoit said.

"If we don't do it now it'll cause more problems in the future. It seems like a lot of money, but it may be necessary for health reasons," John Garber, an Amherst resident said. "It could also cause structural damage if it's not taken care of."

"I haven't been here long enough to know why it wasn't done 25 or 30 years ago, if that's even how long it's gone unnoticed," Benoit commented.

Band Day

Pieces scheduled to be played at the performance include "The Thunder"by John Phillip Sousa, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the 50s tune, "Hey Baby."

Upcoming events for the band include playing halftime for the Patriots/Buffalo Bills game at Foxboro Stadium on Sunday, Oct. 28.

"Then we hustle over to BU to perform in the MICA festival," Hannum said.

The MICA (Massachusetts Instrumental Conductors Association) exhibition consists of 30-35 high school bands.

"We are the featured event at the end of the exhibition. It's a great chance to get out in front of the right people. They are the next round of recruits."

"November 10 is the final home game. The way things are going, it looks like we could possibly be going to New Hampshire," said Hannum.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writers or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian, or the University unless otherwise noted.

Life a great educational obstacle

Erin is a senior Communications major.

Erin is applying to law school. All applicants to law school are confused. Some graduates are confused. All graduating students are scared. Erin is taking a prep class for her LSAT that cost her $700.

From the above passage what MUST be true?

Erin is a basket case.

Erin Martin

This rationale is actually quite obvious in comparison to some of the Logical Reasoning examples I spent four hours on last night. I left my test center brain dead and ready to hit my head against the wall. . .many times! What does the LSAT mean? Law School Admission Test? NO! It means Logical Stupidity And Torture.

The fact that I have waited so long to take my LSAT is a result of my over paranoid self. It seemed as if everywhere I turned, I met someone with a high LSAT score. These test masters would terrify me with examples, and feed into my fear that if I didn't take a prep class, I didn't stand a chance at a good score. So, for weeks I have been working two jobs to pay off the debt on my Visa card. A $700 purchase that includes sample tests, a tape center and a pencil that tell other students "I am prepared."

The question is not my decision to take this prep course. I am paying out the nose, and I am determined to get the most out of it. My question is, will a good LSAT score be enough to get me into a good (ok — I'll settle for decent) law school?

I wanted to go to law school before I saw Susan Dey on LA Law. I was brought up in a household where the law was always an issue. My father is an advocate of the law. Since I was born, my father has been a city police officer. And eversince I can remember, being a lawyer was always in my mind.

But now, practicing law seems to be on the agenda of many students. Some are taking the LSAT to keep their options open. Others want to be public defenders. The enchantment of lawyers in our society, and the development of the "ME" generation has made this an occupation open to almost anyone.

The LSAT and the law schools play into this fact. With the overabundance of applications, admission is continually being denied to students who really want to pursue a legal education.

The figures are astounding. When I look at a school, I look at the LSAT score and GPA that is recommended. Then I look at how many were accepted from UMass last year. Then I look at the essay questions on the application. Here is where numbers don't come into consideration.

So how do I guarantee my acceptance? What sets me apart from any other applicant?

At this point in my life, I am being bombarded with pressures from every angle. I am constantly stressed. Between my courses, my jobs and all else, how can I possibly find time to write an essay that explains my character?

If I could only relay my concerns to the admission counselors at these law schools! Give me a minute to pull them aside and tell them what I am going through! Do they understand that I am an emotional wreck and have become unbearable to live with? Are my lack of sleep and constant migraine considered in the decision process? Does the fact that I have two jobs make me a better candidate? Is my Visa bill from this LSAT prep class an economic hardship?

Doesn't my life in general constitute an educational obstacle?

These factors may all be irrelevant. Am I falling victim to the fallacy of ambiguity? Or is it the tu que quo fallacy?

Whatever it is, I'll keep my fingers crossed and hope for the best. For myself, and others out there like me.

Erin Martin is a Collegian columnist

"NO, SAM!"

What being a Resident Assistant is all about

A recent edition of another publication listed several questions which would indicate whether or not a student might be appropriate to serve as an R.A. It occured to me that an alternate set of questions that a bit more accurately conveyed the role of the R.A.'s here, at the University would be in order:

WANT TO BE AN R.A.?

1. Do you enjoy helping other students resolve personal problems and academic problems, providing guidence and counseling and referring them to other sources of support?
2. Are you interested in supporting the development of a community which portrays values such as compassion, respect, and cooperation?
3. Do you want to learn how to mediate disputes between roomates, sponsor programs which entertain and educate, and enable controversial discussions to occur in a safe and civil manner?
4. Are you willing to be involved in life-saving activities including responding to suicide attempts, endangering behaviors, fire alarms and potential acts of violence?
5. Would you be interested in helping students discover leadership opportunities, encouraging them to get involved in student government, RSOs and community service activities?
6. Will you accept the challenges that come with the responsibility for maintaining community norms on your floor: enforcing campus policies, confronting inappropriate behavior, and documenting violations?
7. Do you love it when students are having a good time. . .sharing each other's company free of chemical stimulus, open to honest expression of difficult opinions, and celebrating the wonders of this campus and its terrific people?
8. Do you want to see students from every race, religion, ethnic and cultural background, sexual orientation, and other human characteristic interact in a mutually supportive and appreciative environment?
9. Do you want to be part of a team which measures its success by the quality of life we create for our students?
10. Do you want to be involved in one of the hardest, most satisfying and most important jobs on this campus?

BE AN R.A.!

Larry Moneta
Associate Director, Housing Service

On Oct 24., the Editorial page ran a letter entitled "Political agendas rule BOG," written by Amy E. Lesen and Laura Silver. Under Ms. Silver's name, we listed Hillel. It has come to our attention Ms. Silver resides in the Hillel House in Amherst but is not an official representative of that group. We apologize for any inconvenience or misunderstanding this may have caused.

End the one-sided coverage of issues

Responsible news reporting requires giving the news, not just a one-sided interpretation.

The Oct. 23 edition of the Collegian dedicated a front-page article to the rally at the Student Union protesting U.S. involvement in the Middle East. Nowhere in the article was there mention of the counterprotest occurring simultaneously. Mixed within the crowd were several people holding an American flag and pro-involvement placards.

The Collegian tried to portray this demonstration as a mass protest by using the subtitle "Over 200 gather to protest U.S. intervention in the Middle East." Sounds like a lot of people, especially since the headline read "'Books Not Bombs' packs SU steps."

Does this vast number of "over 200" include only those who were protesting involvement also? Just how many were protesting? Furthermore, with a student body of 25,000 and only 200 students protesting involvement, is the Collegian justified in its attempt to imply there is an overwhelming movement on campus to pull U.S. forces out of Saudi Arabia?

How about a more recent article: "Students rally against CLT again." This was also a front-page article, so, of course, being on the front-page, it must be important that a rally attended by "some 20 University of Massachusetts students," was held.

This article was just another of the Collegian's lopsided anti-question three articles. How many more will we have to see before the November election? (Only nine more printing/question three-bashing days 'til election.)

I voted "no" on my absentee ballot, but that was because I read the question on the ballot, not because some newspaper has been spouting bad press on the question.

Instead of laying a one-sided view of the question everyday, maybe the Collegian could print the questions and let the students decide for themselves how to vote.

If the Collegian decides this is not worthy of print, I encourage everyone to go to the post office and pick up a copy of the ballot questions free of charge. Read the questions and decide for yourself.

That would be responsible voting.

Graduate employees must say Union Yes

We, as members of the Graduate Caucus of the Anthropology department, endorse the Graduate Employee Organization/District 65 UAW in the upcoming union election.

The ongoing fiscal crisis, coupled with the advent of a more reactionary state government under either Weld or Silber, make it all too obvious that we as graduate employees need a collective voice. As the only group of employees on campus not represented by a collective organization, we would be most vulnerable to impending budget cuts, and the group least able to fight them.

Decisions are soon to be made as to which 10 departments at the University will be phased out. It is more than likely that tuition and fees will be increased astronomically should question three pass or if the proposed 300 percent tuition hike becomes more than pre-election rhetoric.

The freezing of acquisition budgets for the library, the crippling of vital services like the Everywoman's Center and cuts in non-academic programs campus-wide have already seriously decreased the quality of our education and tarnished the reputation of this University, resulting in the lowering value of every graduate degree.

If we as graduate employees choose GEO/ District 65 to represent us, the administration will have to include us in negotiating any further changes in our working conditions and hence the quality of our degrees. Without GEO/District 65, the impending changes, like those that have already come, will be dictated to us.

We as graduate employees of the University of Massachusetts are GEO/District 65 and already have successfully negotiated with the administration. Our hard work won curriculum fee waivers the last two semesters. Our determined energy that negotiated those concessions from the University must not be cut off. We must win this election.

We as graduate employees of the Anthropology department believe that we can best represent ourselves as GEO/District 65. We intend to therefore "VOTE YES" today, Oct. 26, and encourage our colleagues, all graduate employees of the University of Massachussetts, to do the same.

Jazz great Taylor performs

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Get ready, folks. Next Wednesday — Halloween night — at Hampden Theatre in Southwest, pianist Cecil Taylor will play with his quartet. And he will blow you away.

Actually, "play" is not the right word. "Perform" is not much better. Maybe hyperbolic cliches like "make the heavens collide" or "make the universe stand still" actually apply here. But any sort of verbal description — never mind the word "jazz" — seems inadequate. Neither half-baked mysticism nor dry pedanticism can describe Cecil Taylor's music, and he probably prefers it that way.

Cecil Taylor is this century's quintessential musical iconoclast. He received his initial education by day at New England Conservatory and by night at jazz clubs around Boston. He began his recording career in the mid-50s, enlisting such musicians as tenor sax powerhouse Archie Shepp, soprano sax ascetic Steve Lacy and cataclysmic drummer Sunny Murray. With his first few albums, he launched a wholesale expansion of the jazz vocabulary that even predated the innovations of Ornette Coleman and John Coltrane.

Taylor's music eschewed traditional notions of key center and rhythmic meter, replacing them with atonality/pantonality and a breathing rhythmic flow. His concept of piano playing is one of the very few substantial advances since Thelonious Monk — one of his admitted influences. He is acknowledged as an innovator by just about everyone (outside of the current neotraditionalist scene), though I can think of only three or four pianists whose playing shows his influence.

While Taylor's recorded output has been fairly steady, and he has won numerous critical accolades, his lack of performance opportunities has at times forced him to take menial jobs just to stay alive. More recently, academia has accepted him; he has held various college faculty positions. But elsewhere, his music has been met with misapprehension, skepticism and outright antipathy.

Critics and ivory-tower types are apt to lump Taylor's music with "contemporary

Struve explores her soul

By LEAH ARINIELLO
Collegian Correspondent

Could it be the intense satisfaction a person feels when others view their artwork that led Matisse to leave his life as a lawyer, Gauguin to leave stockbroking, and Carol Struve to leave a full-time career in nursing to pursue her artistic abilities?

At the age of 28, Struve started taking art classes. She believes it may have saved her emotionally, from the fulfilling, yet at times depressing, nature of working with the elderly and seeing so much death. Now Struve only treats students, part-time, to allow herself the freedom for graduate studies in painting at the University of Massachusetts.

Presently, the artwork she created in 1989 and 1990, is being shown at the Forbes Library Gallery in Northampton.

Small Works-Big Spaces consists of 17 pieces of mixed media and collage-type work, that explores color and spatial relationships. Remnants of cut and torn watercolor paintings, drawings and paper, make for artwork that goes beyond verbal definition.

In some works, Struve incorporates color and texture to give glimpses of landscapes. Several small pieces convey tremendous feelings that vary in translation from viewer to viewer.

Struve explained that at first, she experienced a lot of anxiety because it's her first solo exhibit, but she received great feedback and is very happy about it.

"To have yourself on exhibit, and have people appreciate you is a wonderful, wonderful experience."

Struve believes that although a career may be more lucrative, it is not as emotionally satisfying as being an artist.

"Art is your creative and spiritual self, your sharing self," Struve said.

A reason many, with the ability, leave more stable majors and careers to pursue it.

Carol Struve's work will be on exhibit at the Forbes Library in Northampton until Oct. 27.

collegian dining out fun

Where to dine out when you can't bear to dine in

What do poor UMass students do when they cannot stomach another portion of the Dining Commons' turkey divan or the ever tasty mystery meat?

What do they do when they were struggling so hard to do that last homework problem that they completely missed the dinner hour?

What do they do when the last box of pasta is gone from a barren apartment cabinet?

They go out, and preferably to some place cheap.

The potpourri of area restaurants cater to the needs of students:

- Pizza, Mexican food and hamburger joints for those with large appetites but little time (or money)
- Rich, ethnic foods from a variety of cultures for those who want a little something different
- Fancy, upper-crust restaurants for the people who want to impress that someone special, and
- The popular ice cream/frozen yogurt spots for late-night study snacks.

Dining out has become a UMass tradition — to escape from the rigors of DC eating and to let someone else do the dinner dishes. (And for many students who have yet to learn to eat properly — like Raman noodles, canned soup and frozen food for dinner every night — it is a chance to get some nutrition).

But dining out in the Amherst area is tricky. Mother will not approve of Charlie's and Father will think Fitzwilly's is too geared for the "college students." ("Well, Dad, there's a lot of students in the area.")

So what's the University of Massachusetts' paper of record recommend? Well, here is a handy tearsheet to the best restaurants in the Amherst area, conveniently divided into three categories: Parent, visiting siblings or the best friend from home.

You are on your own picking a proper restaurant for a date.

Hunan's buffet, quick and spicy

Compiled by Collegian Staff Reports

It was their appetites that led three friends to partake of the Mandarin and Szechuen cuisine at Hunan Garden. And they weren't disappointed.

First, a waitress approached us and asked if we would like the buffet. The buffet proved to be a very good deal, served from 5-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, it was laden with noodles, broccoli, dumplings, spicy chicken, pork fried rice and an array of plum, mustard and soy sauces.

Arriving just before the rush, we were seated and finished the food on our plates amidst the faithful re-fillings of glasses by a woman who said, "I don't like to see empty glasses, I always like them full."

One person who ordered "Strange Flavor Sliced Chicken with Chinese Vegetables" said it was extremely spicy rather than sour, but was happy to see it arrive to the table within three minutes.

Sour and spicy was a mainstay during this meal, as the waitress knew her menu better than we did when she suggested "Sour/hot soup?" — which came with the buffet selection.

We dipped into the soups, though a bit spicy for our palates that evening, and turned to the buffet. We filled our plates two times over, as did most patrons in the restaurant that evening.

The meal definitely fulfilled our hunger cravings and the talkative atmosphere encouraged discussions ranging from the apolitical to the nigh-political and everywhere in-between. We, however, were overcome by the desire to eat.

Pink motif surrounds the inside of Hunan Garden and dim lighting pervades, allowing for a relaxing night.

With competitive prices and decent food, the Garden is an enjoyable and quick meal.

Chowder House: just simple, cheap seafood

By DAVID MELNICK
Collegian Staff

The first thing I realized when I walked into the Chowder House, located at 65 Main Street, South Deerfield, was that I was overdressed. My new wool sweater, beige pleated slacks, and Bass loafers seemed to stand out in a place where t-shirts and jeans were the obvious norm.

The other thing I noticed was that the silverware was actually plastic.

I was a bit skeptical about eating here, but my friend convinced me to enter. We were told to seat ourselves and that the waiter would be with us shortly. My friend and I sat down in an amply-spaced non-smoking section of the restaurant and began our ferverous search through the menu.

As I scanned the menu, I was amazed to see the wide variety of seafood offered — they served salmon, swordfish, scallops, trout, shrimp, and much, much more.

But the reason why I was there was to crack the tail and break the claws of the greatest crustacean of them all — the lobster. Knowing that there were probably not too many lobsters in the Quabbin, I asked the waiter if the lobsters were fresh.

"It is the only way we serve them," he said.

And he was right.

We began with a stuffed clam appetizer served in two large halves. My friend and I grabbed our plastic forks and began to divulge into a truly delicious dish. The halves were sufficiently stuffed and served piping hot. The appetizer initiated our hunger into a deep anticipation of what was about to come. . .

The main course came about 10 minutes later — again the dish was served on a paper plate with more napkins and plastic forks. I ordered a lobster dish which came with a large portion of steamers, mussels, corn, and rice. I also ordered a cup of New England style clam chowder.

I started right away with the steamers and mussels. The quantity was very generous and the taste was delicious. The chef cooked both for just the right amount of time and was served hot in yet another paper bowl.

I began to roll up my sleeves in order to eat my one and a quarter pound broiled lobster. The lobster was well cooked and its fresh taste was very pleasing to the palate. Though, what I enjoyed the most was the clam chowder, with whole clams, a hot, creamy broth, and a unique taste made this dinner almost complete.

The cold Amstel Light topped it off.

My friend enjoyed a wonderfully prepared broiled scallop dish cooked cajun-style, with a side of zucchini and broccoli. The scallop dinner was cooked with a light cajun spice that had a nice kick to it. This spicy, yet great tasting meal, was well complimented with the broiled vegetables and rice side dish.

The total cost of this delicious meal was about $33, with tip.

This place is not very fancy nor elegant, so do not expect to mingle with the social elitus here. But the attitude is simple — they give you good service and great tasting food at a reasonable price.

And they promise you that the fish is fresh and the beer is cold.

Watch the dueling Goten chef

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Restaurants in this area have a distinction of either being plain-Jane (or plain-Jack) or artsy.

But they all consciously pander to the College Student, the one with the burning itch to spend money on food not prepared by oneself or served on a tray.

If the above stereotypes hold true then the popularity of the Goten of Japan, which actually resides just off Route 116 in Sunderland, is unexplainable.

This small restaurant, which can serve up to 100 persons at a time, prepares its lavish seven-course meals in the traditional Japanese steak house style directly in front of the customer on a large, sizzling flat grill.

And though many escape to a restaurant to get out of the kitchen, at the Goten the kitchen is your table. And depending on the skill and experience of the chef, preparation of your chicken, steak, shrimp or scallops, may be a dazzling show of knives as the entree is cooked.

The Goten, which also has a regular menu available, has a full alcohol license, for those old enough to imbide.

One of the waitress at the restaurant, who asked not to be identified, said she feels the Goten's intimate, warm environment is one of the best qualities of the restaurant. She said the individually cooked meals also lend an air of home that many students crave.

"Each of our dinners is cooked on the table, everything homemade that night in front of you," she said.

She also noted that, like home, recipes are carefully followed and "fussed over," leading to a superior meal.

"Our steak is very juicy and tender because we cook it on a hot grill in a special, homemade sauce dressing," she said.

The restaurant is handicapped-accessible although the rest rooms are not accessible.

Most entrees are $10-$18. The Goten offers a "student" special — two dinners of steak and chicken for $15 or two dinners of shrimp and scallops for $18 — every night except Saturday. A daily special is also offered.

Reservations are welcomed and recommended. The Goten opens Tuesday through Saturday at 5 p.m. Open Sundays at 2 p.m. Closed Monday.

'Friendly' cheese: good as it ever was

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Every time I walked into Friendly's when I was a kid I was psyched to be able to sit down, have a grilled cheese and peppermint stick ice cream cone and slurp at the end of my milk glass all the while staring at some tacky checked wall paper.

Well, since Friendly's changed their atmosphere several years ago, I could no longer slurp at the end of my milk glass, and alas, they had rid their chains of peppermint stick ice cream. What was a kid to do? Strike out and try something new.

What I discovered was that vanilla and black raspberry suited me just fine and to my great relief, I could still get a melting, piping-hot grilled cheese with the krinkly french fries.

After high school, we'd head to the Friendly's on Belmont Avenue in Springfield and satiate hunger pangs inexpensively and successfully.

Then, Friendly's changed their menu and put a man with a yellow sweater on the front cover flirting with some girl [who could be no more than 12] over his shoulder. What was I to expect when I opened this new thing but new food everywhere.

They hadn't rid themselves of the vanilla or black raspberry ice cream flavors and sure, I still couldn't slurp at the end of my drink, but worse things were to happen.

The prices had increased, o.k. I adjusted. Then . . . I noticed that the picture of my beloved grilled cheese had been drastically altered (actually, it was my friend Karen who made note of this). Even the fries had had cosmetic surgery.

No more krinkles, the cheese was grilled on sourdough bread and I was shocked. [Really].

So . . . I decided to try it. What could it hurt?

I waited patiently while they grilled this new specimen. And I waited. Then I saw it coming at me and I figured it's only food, why be so antsy? The waitress lowered the tray and queried, "Grilled cheese and fries?" O.k. slap it down.

There it was — boring and mundane looking. I tasted it slowly and well, to my embarrassment it was still great. Krinkle-less fires? Not so pleasing, but they held the salt well and were bigger.

After waitressing a summer at Friendly's, I decided I liked grilled cheese just as much as ever, and just hope against hope that they don't change my favorite sandwich — again.

Noho 'landmarks' hit the spot with exceptional dishes

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

For two truly "unique" dining experiences in Northampton, Fitzwilly's and La Cazuela represent two opposite ends of the spectrum.

Fitzwilly's, on Main Street, offers appetizers, drinks and main courses from $4.95 to $13.95, although a few selections seem overpriced.

Chef's at Fitzwilly's have a unique cooking style, offering seemingly bizarre combinations of food that are a treat to the palate.

One dish in particular, "Raspberry chicken" is not your run-of-the-mill combination, but tastes very good.

Joy Ramsey, the manager at Fitzwilly's said they specialize in "innovative" American fare, and they have been called a "landmark" in Northampton cuisine.

"When you've been around for 15 years, people begin to think you're a landmark," she said.

She added that they are one of the "hot spots" in Northampton for meeting people.

La Cazuela, on Old South Street in Northampton, another Noho hotspot, offers wonderful cuisine from Mexico and the American Southwest.

According to Assistant Manager Lauren Ostroff, La Cazuela offers diners from about $5.00 to $9.95.

La Cazuela is currently offering seasonal fall specials, they also offer a number authentic Mexican drinks and appetizers.

One dish the restaurant is noted for is their exceptional "Chmicangas Aquacantes," which is chicken wrapped in a tortilla with an advacado sauce. The service is usually quick, except for busy Saturday nights.

Ostroff describes the atmosphere as "clean and bright." They also feature seasonal art, "like an art gallery."

She added the manager changes the decor every seasonal as well and in the warmer months they offer outdoor dining.

Staff member Meredith O'Brien contributed to the story.

Hot stuff cookin' at Panda East

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The diverse menu and attentive staff at Panda East restaurant at 103 N. Pleasant Street in Amherst has earned a steady patronage of Chinese food lovers for the last three years.

The atmosphere of the restaurant is pleasant with many windows and tasteful, modern decor. Customers are quickly seated and served by quick moving waitresses and hosts who attend to details.

For people who enjoy hot Cantonese-style dishes, there is never a problem with quenching a hot tongue as the staff makes certain that every water glass is full to the brim throughout the course of the meal.

For appetizers, Panda East offers a variety of treats which appeal to those who do not care for fried food. The steamed dumplings, which are tasty inside, and the wontons in sesame sauce come highly recommended.

The main menu, which ranges in price from about $6 to $15 dollars, provides enough options to please everyone.

A favorite unusual dish is cold sesame noodles which are succulently seasoned yet never greasy.

On the hot side, the garlic chicken — a combination of chicken breast strips, broccoli spears and baby corn stir-fried in a light, hot garlic sauce — is delightful.

Another garlic lover's delight, Empress Chicken, is similar to the garlic chicken dish except the chicken breast strips are fried. None the less, either choice is superb, as is the House Special Chicken — deep-fried chicken breast in a hot pepper sauce.

No one should fear the word "hot" at Panda East as the chef will change the degree of spiciness for each patron.

The restaurant offers either brown or white rice with a dinner order and has a fully licensed bar.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be a bit thin-skinned today. Do not let a sensitive mood influence your business affairs. A financial breakthrough may be linked to events at a distance. Attend a gala tonight!

TAURUS (April 20-May20). A good time to fill your calendar with social engagements. Be the diplomat if family disputes arise. A new partnership could reward you in unexpected ways. Count your blessings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20). Be philosophical. A good deed you do now will be repaid many times. Someone you meet today could be an inspired matchmaker. Take a chance on a blind date! Happy days lie ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A very creative period begins today. You cannot always accept your first impulse as the right one! An interesting task or hobby gives your spirits a much needed lift. You feel truly inspired.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) There should be no hitch in carrying out your plans when they are well-thought-out. Squelch an urge to argue this afternoon. Take a calm, practical approach to a recurring problem.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) Lend a helping hand to someone trying to get away on a business trip. A friend asks for financial advice or assistance. The situation could be embarrassing. A loved one's health seems better.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct. 22) You have things going on that you do not want others to know about. Concentrate on making a dream become reality. Save some time for yourself. Solitude recharges your batteries.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) Curb a tendency to be overly critical. You sense that major financial changes are necessary. Your partners need time to clarify their feelings about you. Try to be patient.

SATGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) Store important documents in a safe place. Improved health is linked to better eating habits. Take steps to enhance your working environment. Important weekend for rekindling old flames. Accept a last-minute invitation this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You feel more in control of your life now. A career move arouses your interest in an exciting new field. Good follow-through is the key to success. Say "no" to someone who intrudes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb 18) A relationship is going through a period of transition. Others are amazed by your productivity. You may soon be drawn into the public eye. Start a moderate diet-exercise program if overweight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Do your best and others will, too. Regular exercise will help you look and feel better. Work details take on added significance. Support the people who have backed you in the past.

Taj Mahal belts out the blues at the Horse

By TEDRIC EISEMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Taj Mahal
Iron Horse
Tuesday, Oct. 23

Taj Mahal ducked out of the soft Northampton rain, shook hands all the way to the dressing room, and left me sitting there wondering where he'd just come from. Eventually, his famous wide-brimmed hat bobbed out and headed over to the stage with him under it.

"Another crazy day in a crazy life," he said, laughing.

Then he got right down to what he does best. Just like he sings it, he's the man who "loves to sing the blues," and it shows. With a myriad of expressions and voices, the 500-year-old gypsy delivered his tunes. Like a musical doppelganger he summoned dozens of styles and personalities.

REVIEW

"Like in the days of old," Mahal told the crowd, "the performer is a catalyst for a group experience."

This meant audience participation. People shouted, "Boogie!" with hoarse throats. Calls and responses, moans and groans and howls and hoots were provided, and Mahal stood up there shaking his head and loving it.

He played a great rendition of "Stagger Lee" and Robert Johnson's "Kitchen Blues." He put Lanston Hughes to music. He shined the piano bench with his tailbone.

His songs were peppered with local names and places. The legendary "Fishin' Blues" took place on the banks of the Deerfield River. He used to be in the School of Agriculture here at UMass, so he knows the area.

The show was short and sweet, with the emphasis rolling toward "short." It was over just a little too soon and he didn't play the harmonica, but what he did do was polished and cool.

Carroll depicts both the personal and universal

By DANIEL TOWAR KANDEL
Collegian Correspondent

In this decade of warning labels, "ENTER AT YOUR OWN RISK" looms appropriately over the entrance to Charles Francis Carroll's exhibition in the Student Union Gallery. With this collection of found objects, mixed media and collages, Carroll — local poet/artist/scholar — offers the Valley a visual fragment of America depicting both personal and universal concerns.

The participation of the viewer is essential. The first piece, "I Am Your Twin," seems to suggest a holographic skull mounted next to a mirror, both enclosed in a wooden frame. Its companion piece, "The Last Laugh," depicts a photograph of the artist and an earth-encrusted skeleton mounted on a board. The third in this series of portraits is "The Strange Case of the Captive Wolf-Woman: A Dream," which is a wolfish head with human breasts viewed through burlap and chicken wire and introduces the final essential element of the exhibit. The three work as an interesting unit: the viewer, the artist and the wolf establishing the artistic language of this collection.

At the center of the exhibit lies "Sacred Books Series 1-3," suggesting a variety of present social concerns: a bible with a warning label, a blood-stained Koran and a hatchet piercing Chegyam Trungpa's book, Cutting Through Spiritual Materialism.

The viewer is again encouraged as an active participant with "Androgenous Form –1," a found tree trunk fragment. A caption suggests, "touch me."

Most compelling is the central piece, "A Field of Anuses, Just Like A Pack of Wolves." Here, the repeated image of the anus forms a visual landscape across which a wolf transverses. The image of the wolf is something that metamorphosizes throughout the exhibit form "Wolf as Christ Crucified on a Bomber" — a collage of Christ upon a bomber upon a cross — to "Urban Aquarium, or Wolf Cross Dressing as Eel" — a mixed media depicting Manhattan as an aquarium with the protagonist wolf attempting to penetrate the "aquatic city" disguised as an eel, his hind legs and torso visible outside the picture frame. At another point, the wolf image is itself liberated from these artistic landscapes altogether with "Wolf Escaping From Art Zoo," the wolf figure mounted alone on the wall.

In a like manner, the various concerns that the other works such as "Liberty in a State of Perpetual Revolution" or "Many Rays" suggest are equally irresistible.

Finally, "NOW WHAT DID YOU RISK" hangs over the exit leaving the viewer with a pleasant sense of uncertainty.

What is particularly interesting about this collection of Carroll's work is its accessibility. There are no pretensions here, but rather a pervading sense of spirited playfulness in his visual commentaries. For instance, the humor and perverse ambiguity of the wolf figure appearing in various forms throughout. This exhibit is something not to be missed — liberating, intelligent and fun. Carroll's work is a refreshing incorporation of dadaist and pop art elements escaping the derivative quality of much of post-modern art via the unique personal mythology that this exhibition creates.

The exhibit is on display through October 31 in the Student Union Gallery. Carroll will also read his poetry at Doctor Neutopia's "Evening of Poetry and Prophesy" on Halloween night at 8 p.m. in the gallery. All are invited.

classical" composers like John Cage and Elliot Carter, and they cite his conservatory training as justification. Yet he resists this categorization (as he has said, "I like hell am classically trained") and insists that his music be seen in the context of the African-American continuum. He substantiated this point in 1979 when he played an historic series of improvisatory concerts with drummer Max Roach in New York: Roach, indisputably known as a tradition-based musician, communicated with Taylor on his level, and thus firmed up his ties to the tradition.

Taylor will perform next Wednesday night with bassist William Parker, drummer Tony Oxley and percussionist Henry Martinez. Expect to be awestruck by his limitless, relentless outpouring of energy — he plays every concert as if it were his last. He is constantly digging deeper and wider into his music, as if in frantic search of who-knows-what somewhere on the other side. Do not expect to "understand" it; it would be a waste to even try. Instead, allow yourself to be drawn into the music emotionally. You may love it or hate it — there is no middle ground — but you will be blown away.

Cornerback Don Caparotti and lineman Steve Brothers are out again Saturday, and linebacker Matt Tulley is doubtful.

Meanwhile Northeastern (1-6) is playing without a quarterback. Fullback Bill Barrale started at quarterback in last week's 59-7 loss at New Hampshire because there was no one left at the position; four previous Huskie QBs are out with injuries. Barrale will likely start again Saturday.

Last year, UMass yielded 22 first downs in a 31-27 win at Parsons Field in Brookline.

Game Notes: The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM and WTTT 1430 AM . . . Wilkos is expected to fly up by air ambulance, and attend the game.

Ford knows the the chances of her team pulling off the upset are slim, but said they "will do the best job they possibly can. We want them to respect us."

After tonight's match, UMass will travel to St. Bonaventure for a Saturday afternoon match. The Bonnies, 2-3 in the A-10, have maintained an solid overall record at 17-10.

Despite St. Bonaventure's strengths at setter and middle blocker, where UMass will be keying in on, Ford is confident of her team's chances in the match.

"There is no question we are going there to beat them," she said. "If we play our game we can beat them."

Going into the weekend, UMass will be a little thin in the setter position. Angie Paolucci performed well with a sprained wrist on Wednesday, but if it gets any worse and she will not play. Backup setter Cathy Smith went down with a sprained knee in practice this week and is not expected to return this year.

"We're in real serious trouble if Angie can't play," said Ford.

Minutemen put unblemished record on the line

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

It seems odd to be talking about a team that is undefeated, in first place in its conference, ranked No. 7 in the country, and coming off its best win of the season as unsettled.

But for the University of Massachusetts football team, there are some questions that need to be answered Saturday when the Minutemen play Northeastern at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Kickoff is at 1:30 p.m.

UMass, 5-0-1 and alone in first place in the Yankee Conference, will be looking to fill a void at quarterback. Starter Gary Wilkos is out for the season with a fractured first vertebra at the base of his neck, suffered in the third quarter of last Saturday's 17-3 win at Delaware.

Sophomore Tom Fasano and Junior Paul Tornatore filled in last week, with Fasano running the option and Tornatore in when the situation called for a stronger arm. Neither was able to move the team, however; UMass mustered two first downs after Wilkos went out.

Though neither had emerged by mid-week to claim the starting job, coach Jim Reid said that this UMass team is built toward a run-oriented, option offense, which favors Fasano.

"We don't have, and have not recruited, great pass blockers and a stable of wideouts," Reid said.

The Yankee Conference picture will come into focus Saturday, too. Northeastern is the last non-conference team UMass plays this season; key dates with Richmond, Villanova and second-place New Hampshire loom in the next three weeks.

"If we can keep people healthy on defense and find a quarterback, then I think we'll be able to take a good, legitimate shot at it," Reid said.

UMass is ranked No. 1 in the Yankee Conference in total defense (270.5 yards per game) and rushing defense (75.3), and turned in its best performance of the season last week, despite missing several starters because of injuries.

Women take sunny road South; men the cold road North

● Women's NCAA tournament bid at stake

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Jim Rudy is in an odd situation. In the two final games of the regular season, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team is scrapping for a NCAA bid and this weekend's results will decide it.

Aside from Florida International University (4-9-2), the Reds will face Central Florida (8-3-1), Rudy's former team, in Orlando, Fla., this weekend.

"I'm sorry that the season has to come down to this, to playing my former team and good friends, good coaches," he said.

That is not all he will be up against.

FUI, unranked nationally and young, looks to be the lesser of two road-trip evils. Its wins have been against Wisconsin-Green Bay (2-0), Mercer (3-0), St. Joseph's (5-0) and Missouri-St. Louis (3-2). Scoreless decisions have been against George Washington and SUNY-Stonybrook.

Rudy cited freshman Catherine Liller as one of his recruiting projects, now a starter for FUI. She has eight goals and one assist for 17 points, the leading scorer for the team. Sophomore Randi Ross and freshman Sonia Marinello each have six points, and are the closest in points to Liller.

Senior Donna Jean Enright has been the only goalkeeper FUI has relied upon. She has five shutouts and 88 saves to her name, but 30 goals with a goals against average of 1.84.

Central Florida is now ranked No. 20 in the nation, which would not be too threatening if UMass had not dropped to No. 13. The teams pose similar records, but Rudy said his team's confidence level is up, and so is his.

UCF has shutout Wisconsin-Green Bay (6-0), Barry (2-0), Rutgers (1-0), N.E. Missouri State (4-0), Radford (2-0) and Savannah (13-0). In case you did not recognize some of these schools, it reflects the weakness of its schedule. It has been abused by Santa Clara (3-1), Cal.-Berkeley (4-2) and George Washington (2-0). Its ties have been to George Mason (0-0) and North Carolina (2-2).

The team's potent shooters are junior Leslie Suder (13 goals, 4 assists, 30 points), senior Liz Young (5-5-15) and sophomore Tina Theis (3-5-11). Senior goalkeeper Karen Richter has let only 13 goals in 13 games and has 41 saves.

● Men hope to upend No. 4 ranked Rutgers

By KEN MAGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, winless in its last twelve tries, will travel to Piscataway, N.J. to take on No. 4 ranked Rutgers (12-2-2), tomorrow night at 7:30.

After losing 2-1 last Friday to a weak St. Joseph's team, the Minutemen (2-10-3), hope to rebound.

"Last Friday they didn't come to play," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We have to come with intensity and win some key matchups."

These matchups include senior tri-captain Pete McEvoy moving from sweeper to midfield to go against Rutgers playmaker Dan Mueller.

"If we can win that battle, its going to be a key because its in the middle of the field," Gettler said.

UMass defensive backs Darren Stone and Matt Bearce will matchup against the high-powered offensive duo of Steve Rammel and Lino DiCuollo, who together have scored 52 goals in 39 games for Rutgers.

"If we can win those matchups, I can't believe that we won't be in a position at the end of the game to win," Gettler said. "We've always played them well.

"It might finally make a statement that this team knows how to win."

Nearing the end of a disappointing season, Gettler said he is not looking ahead to next year but is concentrating on upsetting one of the best teams in the nation. Rutgers made it all the way to the Final Four last year.

While the UMass' defense kept them close in every game this season, their inability to put the ball in the net has cost them, Gettler said. They have averaged only one goal per game and have been shutout five times.

"If you play great and don't score you are not going to win," Gettler said.

Game Notes: Gettler is expecting a lot of fan support in Piscataway because there are six Minutemen from New Jersey; Randy Jacobs, Justin Edelman, Todd Kylish, Steve Armenti, Kevin Hall, and Carl Hanks.

Volleyball to take on Penn State

By LIOR BEN-AHARON
Collegian Correspondent

Coming off a big win over Boston College on Wednesday night, the University of Massachusetts volleyball team does not have any misconceptions of what the upcoming weekend holds in store for it as the Minutewomen prepare to face St. Boneventure and Penn State.

"We feel good," said coach Carol Ford after the BC match. "We proved what we are capable of doing."

The win was the fourth for the Minutewomen in 25 tries, and was a huge confidence booster. The boost in confidence could not have come at a more convenient time as tonight UMass faces Penn State, one of the best volleyball teams in the country.

Penn State brings a 5-0 Atlantic 10 record and a monsterous 27-0 mark overall into the match.

Field hockey tames BU Terriers 1-0

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's field hockey game saw the University of Massachusetts field hockey team run their winning streak to six games with a 1-0 win over Boston University.

Less than four minutes into the game, UMass forward Jean Salisbury scored one of her patented tip-in goals off of a Dawn Trumbauer penalty corner shot.

After Salisbury's goal, UMass dragged their sticks and cleats through the mud at Totman Field, and held off a lethargic BU team for their 13th win of the season.

"We came out flat the first 15 minutes of the game, so I was really disappointed with the team," said BU coach Sally Starr. "I thought the second half was a real good hockey game, a real even hockey game. It was a game of midfield hockey, neither team really had a lot of chances."

"Its been tough, we've been outside practicing in the wet, and it really takes a toll on your legs," said UMass coach Pam Hixon. "We looked fatigued, it's been a tough week for everybody."

The Terriers had very few scoring chances, they had no shots on goal in the first half and only two in the second.

"You have to credit UMass' defense, they were real tough," Starr said. "We had opportunities to execute a little bit better than we did, but we weren't patient enough."

"We didn't give up a lot, but we didn't create a lot either," Hixon said. "BU played us smart, they played our forwards really tight and being a little slow today, it was tough to get to the ball, they intercepted a lot.

"We were just hoping for a win, bang it down the other and just pray that they miss it," Hixon said.

This was a game that BU really wanted, according to Starr. The Terriers are fighting for a spot in the NCAA tournament. They started the week ranked 13th, and a win over number eight UMass could possibly have carried them into the tournament. Now the Terriers must win the rest of their games, and hope that a team in front of them gets knocked off.

UMass has a busy weekend ahead. Saturday they trek to UConn, and Sunday they host Maine (Totman Field 1 p.m.), in the regular season finale.

GAC seeks to impeach Talbot

By KELLY CONGDON
Collegian Staff
and ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondent

The Government Affairs Committee, charging that SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot has failed to perform her duties, will seek Talbot's impeachment.

According to Government Affairs Chairperson Allen Van Tassel, a motion for impeachment will be filed at noon today based on "several" of Talbot's actions.

The alleged violations include a failure to meet the SGA's constitutional by-law obligation of providing $50,000 toward the concert fund, and underfunding the Area Government's budget appropriations by $17,000.

Monies allocated for student Area Governments have not been distributed to them by Talbot, a direct violation of the SGA constitution according to SGA Senator Kevin Newnan.

The SGA constitution provides each area government a base allocation of $10,000 and $2.00 per student per year, or a base of $5,000 and $1.00 per student per semester.

"The area governments only received a $5,000 base and $.50 per student this semester, according to Newnan. "[The other $.50 per student] was just never allocated and it sits in the Student Activities Trust Fund reserves," he said.

"It is $17,000 we're dealing with, which, in the relative scheme of things is not a lot, but it's that [the Treasurer] is ignoring her duties," he said.

The misappropriation was discovered by Government Affairs Chairperson Alan Van Tassel, who informed the Student Senate at last week's meeting.

Van Tassel told Talbot she had until 5 p.m. Friday, Oct. 26, to fill the accounts or a motion would be filed in the Student Judiciary forcing her to do so. According to Van Tassel and Newnan, Talbot failed to file the necessary paperwork.

Talbot could not be reached for comment.

Once the Student Judiciary is petitioned, Attorney General Adam Scales will issue a writ of mandamus, which will force Talbot to provide the additional funding.

Although the Student Judiciary can compel Talbot to give the Area Governments the $17,000, she can only be impeached by a two-thirds vote by the Student Senate, said Scales.

"The language of the constitution is unmistakably clear about the Area Government allocations," Scales said. "I am at a loss at how the mistake could have appeared. The writ will force her to provide the rest of the funding that she apparently ignored."

According to Van Tassel, the impeachment proceedings culminate several violations by Talbot.

"The focus of the SGA impeachment proceedings is not

Smith students occupy hall

Seven student groups demand space for multicultural center

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Students occupying College Hall at Smith College since Friday, demanding space for a multicultural center, met with Smith President Mary Maples Dunn yesterday and got "vague results."

Seven student groups have occupied the building since Friday afternoon, demanding more space be given to the campus' minority student organizations. Dunn met with the students yesterday to "reiterate" the school's commitment to opening a multicultural center.

Students claim Dunn will give no concrete date or location of space to provide for a center.

"We're tired of memos, we need something that will be recognized as legal to get space by a particular date," Anuradha Aiyeugar, a member of the International Student's Organization, said.

Vivian Chang, a member of the Asian Student Association, said there are more than 600 minority students at the College, and the groups that represent those students have no office space.

"We're sick of empty promises, we just want something concrete," she said.

Chang said part of the College's recruitment includes an Institutional Diversity program, which has failed to mention a lack of space for multicultural organizations at the school.

Students began the take-over of the building on Friday following a rally, and will continue the take-over through noon today, organizers said. The students said they will continue petitioning the administration for the space until they get "definitive answers."

The rally was sponsored by the Asian Students Association, Korean Students at Smith, EKTA for South Asian Students, the International Students Association, the Black Student Alliance and Nosotros for Latinas. The Black Student Alliance and Nosotros are currently the only multicultural groups that have office space on campus, in Lily Hall.

Sutton awakens after weeks in coma

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

After spending over a month in a coma, Lorenzo Sutton, the all-time leading scorer in University of Massachusetts basketball history, is now conscious, but remains in serious condition in the Bay State Medical Center, hospital officials said yesterday.

On Sept. 23, Sutton, 25, sustained severe head injuries as a result of a hit-and-run accident on North Pleasant St.

The woman who drove the car which struck Sutton was UMass junior Jean Kokoszka. She was cited for leaving the scene of a personal injury accident and operating to endanger.

"Lorenzo is doing real well," his mother, Zenee Sutton, said yesterday.

His mother, who has been by his side since the day of the accident, said Sutton has been riding around in a wheel chair and holding onto her arm.

"He's talking, almost walking, and he can almost hold himself up," she said.

Sutton's former teammates and UMass basketball coach John Calipari visited Sutton on Friday. Calipari told the Springfield Union News, "I asked him [Sutton], if there's anything I can do, let me know and he said 'get me out of here.'

"He does understand [what's going on] and recognizes, which is important," Calipari told the Union.

"We're just hoping and praying for Lorenzo," his mother said. "I know he's gonna be 100 percent."

Sutton played at UMass from 1984 through 1988, and scored a school record 1,718 points.

GEO charges admin. with disruption

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Officials of the Graduate Employee Organization have charged University of Massachusetts administrators with trying to disrupt this week's union representation election for graduate student employees.

On Friday, ballots were sent to approximately 2,500 teaching assistants, research assistants and graduate interns, requesting approval of the GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers, as the union representative for graduate student employees.

Enclosed with the ballot was a four-page letter signed by President-Chancellor Duffey, Provost Richard O'Brien and the deans of the University's 11 schools. In the letter the administration discussed "alternatives to GEO representation," and the "implications of GEO representation."

The letter said that GEO representation will yield few gains for graduate student employees: "We believe your focus and ours should be on working together, without the involvement of third parties. Representation by GEO will, in our view, foster divisiveness at a time when we sorely need to work together as a community."

College leaders join forces against cuts

Compiled from Collegian Staff Reports

The presidents of the state's 13 community colleges will join administrators from the University of Massachusetts Monday to discuss how the Amherst campus and the community colleges can work together more closely.

Administrators plan to discuss transfer issues, collaborative efforts between community colleges and the University, and possibilities for community college faculty to pursue graduate degrees here.

Recently, higher education officials such as interim Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery have proposed stronger links between community colleges and state colleges and universities as a way of reducing costs and overhead.

A press conference will be held 3:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 804-808.

the result of this one issue, there are many issues involved," said Van Tassel. "The proceedings will occur whether [Talbot] gives back the money or not."

Aside from the Area Government allocations and the failure to provide for the concert fund, Talbot has also bypassed input by student leaders in crucial budget exercises, Van Tassel said.

"Basically, the budget exercise procedure was sent to Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson before it went to the trust fund planning council. That budget appeared as if it were from the council when in reality it was not received by the council until it was given to Madson for consideration," he said.

Newnan rejected the suggestion that the underfunding of Area Governments was an honest mistake.

"If it was a mistake," Newnan said, "It could have been easily, simply rectified. The Student Activities Office has to go over this whole process. For them not to pick up on this error is ridiculous.

"In a large corporation, if someone made an error of this magnitude, they would be fired, plain and simple," Newnan said. "The SAO should have caught this easily because their processing is immense. Their payroll is $500,000."

Newnan said it is a dangerous sign that neither Talbot nor the SAO caught the error.

"The fact that the error got this far along to the point where someone had to discover it, and it was not SAO or Talbot, is at the very least indicative of an extreme and dangerous degree of incompetence in the financial allocation process," Newnan said.

"But it's probably more than that," he added. "This was a deliberate act to short fund the area governments and retain money in the SATF reserves, therefore in control of SAO."

"We have a two-tier level of screwing up here, which is just too suspect," Newnan said. "First, that the treasurer could make this mistake is farcical. For it to go to SAO and to then get through there, is just not the way it works. We may not be dealing with an error, we may be dealing with a conspiracy."

"She's violating her job by going above the constitution. She has to give that money and she's not doing so, and until she does there is a very gross ongoing violation," Newnan said.

While the College's space committee is currently analyzing all space needs on campus, a report is not expected from the group until February. Sophie's Terrace, a small building on Bedford Terrace, has been offered as a temporary site for the center.

Chang said the building is too small to suit the needs of a multicultural center and added the organizations would prefer space in Lily Hall.

She added the seven groups, dubbed the Unity Coalition, have received support from many other campus organizations.

"We've had a lot of support from the groups on campus, we've also gotten support from off-campus and other Five College groups as well," she said.

Furlough alternatives proposed

SEIU proposes 'deferred salary payment' plan in response to cuts

By KELLY CONGDON
Collegian Staff

A union at the University of Massachusetts has offered several alternatives to the employee furloughs recently proposed in response to the current fiscal crisis.

The Service Employees International Union Local 509 is suggesting a "deferred salary payment" plan for its members in which employees would lose some pay this year, but be reimbursed in the future when the state is in a more secure fiscal position, according to a statement released Friday by the SEIU.

The administration already approved proposals to allow 31 SEIU members to retire early or reduce working hours to avoid layoffs earlier this month. The proposals, which have to take place by this week, will save approximately $400,000 this fiscal year after UMass pays $113,000 in one-time costs for early retirement bonuses, union spokesperson Patty Roper said.

President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey has proposed a furlough for Nov. 23, Dec. 24 and Dec. 26-28 for the campus' 5,500 employees. The administration is negotiating the plan with unions, which have been asked to respond by Nov. 7. The Board of Trustees will discuss the proposals at a meeting in Boston slated for Wednesday.

"A five-day furlough will save the University $750,000 a day for a total of $3.8 million to counteract budget cuts," Roper said.

According to Roper, the union will not respond to the University's furlough proposal until it is given access to the University's financial records and all other relevant information.

"We are not having the cooperation of the administration and we're not sure why," Roper said. "Until our concerns are addressed we're not going to decide one way or the other."

If the university administration's proposed furlough of up to five days is implemented, Roper said it must contain several "conditions."

"The furlough would have to be spread out over a long period of time, such as one less pay hour per week, rather than five days," Roper said. "Also, it must be progressive, with lower paid employees losing fewer days than higher paid employees."

UMass professor researches to save whales from extinction

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts professor is researching the northern right whale in an attempt to save the species from extinction.

Jack Finn, a professor of wildlife management at the University, has been examining trends in population dynamics of the northern right whale in an attempt to help prevent the species, which once numbered in the tens of thousands, from becoming extinct.

With the population of the northern right whale estimated at only 300, action is necessary, according to Finn.

"The whaling industry took, over a period of about 30 of 40 years, about 10,000 whales a year," he said.

The northern right whale got its name because of its tendency to float well after death, making it the "right" whale for the whalers to go after.

In addition to the already low number of northern right whales, there is an added difficulty in the low rate of births among the population. Only five to 10 calves are born each year.

"There are plenty of available females, but they can't get pregnant; the males can't find them. The numbers are so low that the males and females have a hard time finding each other when they're ready to mate," he said.

"The reasons for that may be pollution, or annoyance by boat traffic. I think that pollution is a reasonable guess because of the way these things act."

Finn, who graduated in 1970 with a bachelor's degree in Biology from Georgetown University and received his PhD. in Ecology from the University of Georgia in 1977, has been at the University for 12 years. He has been researching the northern right whale for the last two years.

Right wales feed on plankton, but also may feed on material close to the ocean's surface, including plastics and dangerous chemicals. Finn said these pollutants get stored by the whales into their fat reserve, which later reaches the bloodstream, giving the whales a dose of poision.

Finn would like to see two "critical habitat" areas set up off the coast of Massachusetts. The first would cover most of the eastern part of Cape Cod Bay. The second would be in the Great South Channel shipping lanes where the whales usually feed, Finn said.

A petition for a "critical habitat" designation for those two areas was recently submitted to the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Such a petition will take one to two years to be decided on, a wait that Finn said will not appreciably affect the current northern right whale population.

"The population is changing so slowly that it's not even possible to tell for sure whether their number is increasing or decreasing," he said.

SOM professors analyze towns' use of local aid

By DANIEL BOUCHER
Collegian Correspondent

In a report released in August, two professors from the School of Management at the University of Massachusetts analyzed how effectively cities and towns make use of local aid.

The study, produced by Dr. Agha Iqbal Ali and Robert A. Nakosteen, both from the School of Management, is unique because it applies a system called Data Envelopment Analysis.

According to Ali, DEA takes into account "the particular fiscal and economic characteristics of a town," unlike the current method of determining local aid. Nakosteen said he believes they are "the first ones ever to use this technique with regard to the operating efficiency of cities' and towns' government."

Mount Holyoke College begins $15.3M library project

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

SOUTH HADLEY — The library at Mount Holyoke College has begun a $15.3 million reconstruction that will expand the facility and make it more accessible to Five College students, according to the head librarian.

The library received a $1 million grant earlier this month that enabled it to kick off the $15.3 million library reconstruction and expansion project.

The grant, by the Kresge Foundation of Troy, Michigan, is one of only five such grants this year and the largest grant the Mount Holyoke College has ever received from the foundation.

According to Anne C. Edmonds, the fourth head librarian at the Mount Holyoke College library since it was founded in 1837, the grant "will be an incentive for people to donate money to complete the library."

When complete, the library will emerge as a three-building information complex with space for 770,000 volumes, an increase of 25 percent.

The renovation plans also call for climate control to help preserve books and manuscripts, a three-story main entryway, and a Five College link up that will allow students in the Valley access to more than three million volumes.

University of Massachusetts students borrowed 2200 books through direct loan and about 200 books through the inter-library loan program, according to Edmonds.

Last June, the GEO and administrators signed an interim agreement calling for "neutrality." The agreement specifically outlawed department or school meetings called to discuss the union election. The agreement did not impose neutrality on higher administrators.

Renee Heberle said that though it was not a direct violation of the agreement, the GEO questions the use of state funds to send the letter. She said the organization also suspects that a third party drafted the letter.

"It is a violation of the spirit of the agreement but not the letter of the contract," said Heberle. "Given what we have seen in the past from the administration, this is typical of the blatant anti-union campaign the administration has run."

Duffey declined yesterday to comment on the charges.

The GEO has been attempting to form a union to represent graduate student employees on this campus for several years. In 1979, the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which certifies unions in the state, decreed that graduate students on this campus could not form a union because of the potential conflict in academic freedom.

The GEO, a group of about 1,400 members, last semester led several protests against the administration in an attempt to insure a union election.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

UNION YES ✓

After a long and often tense struggle with the University, graduate employees will finally be able to vote on whether they will be represented by the Graduate Employee Organization, an affiliate of the United Auto Workers, District 65.

For three years, GEO has run an impressive organizing campaign. In the face of anti-union activity by the University, the union has shown determination in working for graduate employees' rights. GEO's work in winning fee waivers is an example of this.

Not surprisingly, the administration has made its opposition to GEO clear. As ballots were mailed out last week, the University sent out a letter discouraging union support. The letter distorts GEO's record and the challenges facing graduate students.

During times of financial crisis, the state has tended to try to balance the budget on the backs of its employees. This practice results in inefficient and lower quality services. The University is no exception.

Stipends and other necessities of a graduate education are notoriously insufficient at UMass. As a result, many talented people go elsewhere. Our reputation as a research university, the value of our degrees and the quality of our education all suffer.

Graduate employees have borne a steadily increasing responsibility for the education of undergraduates. Fifty percent of an undergraduate's contact with an instructor is with a graduate employee. If graduate employees continue to be subject to arbitrary decision-making, everyone's education will suffer. The protection of a union contract is the only way to change this.

Graduates are the only campus employees, with the exception of hourly workers such as work-study, that lack a union. The only way to fight the dismantling of the University by more budget cuts is through organization. For employees, this means a union.

The United Auto Workers has a long history of successfully fighting for workers' rights. It is widely admired for its internal democracy and dedication to its members.

We urge graduate employees to vote "Union Yes." It's important for you. It's important for all of us.

Rape must be dealt with

Our University has not adequately addressed the issue of rape. We, sisters and friends, need to mobilize and demand effective protection. One practical step towards security would be the permanent expulsion of students convicted of rape.

Perhaps it is surprising, but there are convicted rapists among us. After a suspended semester or two, during which they were not banned from campus, they have again enrolled at UMass as full-time students.

The Office of Student Affairs, which publishes the Code of Student Conduct (CSC), doesn't like rape, either. However, they've chosen to sweep it under the rug. Rape is ugly public relations. Tour guides can't breathe a word about it to prospective students.

Nowhere in the CSC is "rape" even mentioned. Rather, it is referred to as "Sexual Assaults or any other uninvited behavior of a sexually explicit nature."

In the CSC, "Care of Property" has its own paragraph, but rape is slipped under Civility, Safety and Environmental Health.

The code is more specific about our rugs and CDs than our biggest fear, rape.

In fact, it isn't possible to get a rape conviction through the University judicial system because it isn't explicitly stated as such in the CSC. A case must be prosecuted under the stated terms of the CSC.

If one in four of us is raped before we graduate, isn't it clear that this system is failing us on all sides? We owe it to ourselves and our sisters to change it, because if it doesn't work for women, then it simply doesn't work.

Currently, there is a petition being circulated on campus which calls for a "No-Tolerance Policy" on rape. This would entail two major changes in University bureaucracy. Firstly, the CSC would explicitly state that rape is a violation of University policy.

Secondly, a student convicted under these terms would be expelled from the University. We should not have our mobility limited because of the random violence of a misogynist or the failure of the University to protect us.

Sign the petition, call the Dean of Student Affairs and force the administration to address the issue.

No one will do it for us, sisters.

The Jewish identity has held together throughout history

A friend of mine, talking to a woman at a party, once asked, "What ethnicity are you?"

"Well, I'm part German, French and Danish." My friend was confused because her facial features did not reflect those origins. She had the dark eyes, hair and skin which were more characteristic of those countries closer to the Mediterranean Sea.

Finally, she clarified, "Oh, I'm Jewish."

Explanation complete. Her roots do not originate from the roaming groups of Gauls, Visigoths and Nomads who populated central and northern Europe, for she is Jewish. Therefore, her original answer was misleading, as her facial features do not reflect the human adaptations to a cold northern climate.

Whereas not every Jewish person has distinguishable features, Jewish history and existence are very distinguishable. The Jewish leader, King David, established a Jewish capital in Jerusalem approximately 1000 BCE. One millenium later, between the years 70 and 200, life for the Jews at the hands of their Roman conquerors became unbearable. Their Temple was destroyed and at least half the Jewish population was murdered with the remaining half fleeing what they believed to be their G-d given homeland of 1,500 years.

This is referred to as the dispersion of the Jewish people, the Diaspora, or Galut (exile) in Hebrew. From that time on, the Jews continued to keep a tight community retaining their religion, culture, language and nationalism — separate from whichever country in which they resided. Jews still celebrate holidays tied to the ancient Hebrew calendar, remember historical events in pre-Christ Israel, and read Jewish texts in the original Hebrew spoken by those who lived under the reign of King David.

Adam Stein

In no matter what country the Diaspora Jews resided, they experienced a different existence than that of the majority. A Jewish person may say that s/he is "Russian" or "German" instead of stating his/her Jewish identity. However, this would actually be a distortion of their heritage. Jewish existence in Russia and Eastern Europe was confined to the shtetls (small Jewish villages) where there was little contact with the majority culture. Jewish experience in Germany and Western Europe was also confined to segregated areas, but their urbanization placed them in a walled ghetto. Jewish life continued to exist as the little Israel of their ancestral roots. Besides keeping the same holidays, Hebrew evolved into Yiddish to become their everyday form of communication. Their system of justice was based on Rabbinic tradition rather than European tradition. Even their nationalism was different. The Jews did not pledge allegiance to the kings, emperors and czars of Europe, but instead, prayed for a return to the land of Israel (Zionism).

Where the American Jew likes to refer to their religion as separate from their ethnicity (holding to the tradition of "separation of Church and state"), Judaism cannot be defined in this manner. If one is Jewish, then obviously it is their religion; yet it is also a description of their heritage. Thus a Jew of a Russian background cannot claim that they are Russian and their religion is Jewish, because historically, the Russian culture didn't mix with their Jewish world. Currently, a Russian Jew's passport reads not "Russian" but "Jewish" under nationality.

Israel, the Jewish homeland, was not borne of a religious Jewish movement, but of a nationalist Jewish movement. Where the founders did not pray or keep kosher, they were Jews. They did not identify with their "mother country" which considered Jews non-citizens, forced Jews to live in segregation and initiated 1,000 years of anti-Semitic massacres (pogroms). Thus, for 82 percent of Israelis, the "nationality" on their passport reads "Jewish." Being Jewish is a lot more than just a religion, it's about being a part of Am Yisra-el, the people of Israel. To overlook this part of Judaism is to be blind to its beauty.

Looking at Israeli foreign relations

Elliot Monteverde Torres, in his Oct. 23 column ("From Gaza to Guatemala," Multicultural Affairs), expresses his frustration with Israel's foreign policy. He lists 32 countries with whom Israel has relations, and points out that Guatemala uses its military trade with Israel to oppress the Mosquito Indians.

Where this unfortunately may be true, I would be curious as to how many dozens of other countries also strengthened Guatemala's rightist government. Much has been said about Israel's connections with the racist government in South Africa, yet nothing is said of the Arab oil which keeps that racial system going.

Israel is made an example, whereas other perpetrators are constantly ignored as it doesn't seem to fit in people's political agenda to criticize them. It fits into the Arab agenda to single out Israel. However, Mr. Torres doesn't mention is "where the Galil, or Israeli weapon, has been the standard rifle" of the Guatemalan government, Israel was supplying leftist guerrillas with the same rifle.

Unlike the United States, which manipulates foreign aid to send arms to a Third World country based on a moral judgment of who is "right" and "wrong," Israel approaches aid without bias and as a means of economic survival. It is the only country in the world where the desert is shrinking and alive with vegetables and fruit trees. But because many of the other Third World nations, will not trade with Israel, it is forced to sell the commodities the world powers will buy, namely weapons.

Hopefully, the day will come when all countries will ... mangoes, dates and tomatoes from Israel inste... Until then, don't point fingers at Israel, struggl... vive, but at the nations who forced it into the weaponry market.

Coverage incomplete

I was upset to not see an article in last Monday's Collegian on the murders in Jerusalem of three Israelis which occurred on Sunday, Oct. 21.

The Associated Press article in Oct. 23's Collegian ("Israeli police set up blockade to bar visitors") barely mentioned those murders, but did manage to paint a picture of "Israeli oppression" as Jerusalem was closed off to prevent further violence of the kind.

Had the Collegian promptly reported on the killings, the average reader would have been better informed as to why Israeli police blockaded the city to visitors. By not printing an article in Monday's issue, and by printing Tuesday's AP article, the Collegian has done a great disservice to the community which it is supposed to serve as a news-reporting organization.

Stone Zoo closes due to budget cuts

STONEHAM (AP) — A 1,200 pound polar bear called Major will lose his home next month. So will elderly orangutan Stanley and Betty, and a skinny Siberian tiger named Sahsa. The 85-year-old Stone Zoo is closing because of state budget cuts.

"You can't help [but] develop attachments to the animals," said Mark Goldstein, the zoo's director. "You think of them as individuals."

The zoo in this Boston suburb was already running on a shoestring, when its budget was slashed by 30 percent from last year because of the state's financial problems. Zoo officials decided to close Nov. 12 rather than house the animals in shoddy conditions.

"There are things worse than no zoo, like a bad zoo," Goldstein said.

About half the zoo's 200 or so residents will find homes at the Franklin Park Zoo, the larger of the two facilities run by MetroParks Zoos. Some will be moved to other zoos around the country.

The two spent over a year to complete their original report, but now that this system is in place, future studies can be completed in less than a month, Ali said.

The study shows which communities have a critical dependency on local aid, and it signals which ones should be examined more fully for waste. According to their report, Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Ayer, Brockton, Lowell and Somerville are all critically dependent, with Worcester and Springfield's need for local aid still growing.

Boston, however, relies on local aid more than any other city in the state, and Nakosteen said he thinks it would have to declare bankruptcy without it.

Pittsfield, on the other hand, will require more time to study because it has higher operating expenses and substantially lower receipts than other cities, such as Worcester, he said.

"What we're saying," Nakosteen said, "is that Pittsfield either cannot or will not tax itself as much as Worcester does. But it seems to want to spend as much, and it seems to want local aid to make up the difference."

Soccer loses

By KEN MAGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

Any thoughts of an upset by the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team over no. 4 ranked Rutgers Friday night were quickly dispelled as the Minutemen (2-11-3) lost 3-0.

After only five minutes of action in the first half the Minutemen found themselves down 2-0.

"It was ugly. It was cold and windy. We just couldn't get the ball out of our own end in the first half," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler.

Jeff Carsters scored first as he took a pass from Dave Mueller and knocked it by UMass goalie Steve Armenti, and 41 seconds later, Carsters scored again.

Rutgers made it 3-0 just minutes later, as Maurice Madzozchi slipped one past Armenti.

"We were prepared but they came out smoking," said junior tri-captain Dan Lawrence. "We had trouble staying with them off the ball."

Though UMass played well after the early set backs, they didn't get many good opportunities to score, Lawrence said.

Lawrence said UMass had plenty of fan support from friends and relatives of several Minutemen who are from New Jersey.

"We were really excited to play. I just wish we had a better showing," Lawrence added.

The Minutemen hope to end their disappointing season on a winning note when they travel to Fairfield college on Wednesday.

ARTS & LIVING

Sing along with Ed's

By AL ARPAD
Collegian Staff

There's this band, see. At Sheehan's tonight. Ed's Redeeming Qualities, and it's free.

They came to New England from San Francisco for a few shows, so everybody should go see them because they're a lot of fun and they probably won't be back soon. They aren't easy to describe, but Ed's Redeeming Qualities is good for what ails you.

So now I have all this space left, and I already said what you need to know. I usually don't write for arts, but this is important, and none of the regular arts people has heard of Ed's Redeeming Qualities.

If they thought about it, they might remember hearing a song called "Lawn Dart" on the radio a little over a year ago. It depends on what station they were listening to. The chorus went like this:

A kid was pegged in the head with a lawn dart.
Her dad didn't see her, that's the worst part.
Pe-egged in the he-ead with a lawn dart
So they're now off the shelves at the K-Mart.

"Lawn Dart" sort of suggests something about Ed's Redeeming Qualities, except that some people probably thought it wasn't sincere, or that it was supposed to be funny. If they had seen Dom and Neno and Carrie and Dan singing "Lawn Dart" with tears in their eyes, those people wouldn't think it was funny. You could probably come see them all sing "Lawn Dart" tonight, except that Dom died last year.

The picture of him is my humble attempt at a tribute, so I hope the editors don't cut it out. If Dom can see this, I hope he doesn't mind.

After Dom died, Ed's Redeeming Qualities moved to San Francisco and kind of started over. That was hard for me, because they are my favorite band and I'd only seen them play a few times, but I guess it was harder for Dom. I listen to their tapes just about every day, and I think everyone else should, too.

If you are under 21, I would like to apologize on behalf of the pig-headed government that won't let you go see this important show. Everybody else come to Sheehan's tonight, but leave room for me in case I'm late.

A Landmark Event!

Apple introduces the Macintosh Classic.
Trying to stretch dollars when you're computer shopping doesn't mean you're willing to make sacrifices.
That's why you should consider the new, affordable Macintosh® Classic® computer.
It has everything you need—including a monitor, keyboard, mouse, 2 megabytes of RAM, and a 40-megabyte hard disk. Just plug everything in and the Macintosh Classic is ready to run, because the system software is already installed.* And, thanks to the Macintosh computer's legendary ease of use, you'll be up and running in no time.
Like every Macintosh, the Classic can run thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way—so once you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. Grogan can't save Pats

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Buffalo didn't need another strong finish to make sure New England got off to its worst start in 20 years.

The Bills won their previous three games with fourth-quarter comebacks. By the time that period arrived Sunday, they were cruising to a 27-10 win over the Patriots.

"We had to come from behind even though we played well," in the past three games, Buffalo coach Marv Levy said. "We knew we had to get off to a good start" on Sunday.

Don Smith scored on a 1-yard run on the Bills' first possession. Thurman Thomas, who rushed for 136 yards, scored on a 3-yard run on their third possession, midway through the second quarter.

The Bills (6-1) led 14-3 at halftime and 27-3 after scoring on three consecutive possessions in the third quarter.

Each team split its first two games, but the Bills have won their last five and remained tied with Miami for the AFC East lead. The Patriots (1-6) have lost their last five and are off to their worst start since 1970.

"It serves no purpose" to discuss that poor start, New England rookie coach Rod Rust said. The Bills "did what they wanted to better than we did what we wanted to."

Much better.

For the first time in six games, the Bills never trailed.

They outgained the Patriots 353 yards to 262.

The memory of last year's 33-24 loss in which a poor Patriots' team scored 20 points in the last nine minutes, spurred the bills on Sunday, Levy said.

"This team was very aware that last year's game slipped away," he said. "We're not taking anything for granted."

"Thomas had a very good game," said quarterback Jim Kelly, who completed 14 of 20 passes for 208 yards for a touchdown. "The offensive line gave me time to throw."

Jason Staurovsky's 32-yard field goal 12 seconds before intermission cut the lead to 14-3, but the Patriots didn't score again until they trailed by 24 points.

"We're asking too much of the defense," New England offensive tackle Bruce Armstrong said. "We're asking them to stop the other team time and time again and that's not fair."

Thomas, who missed most of the previous game, a 30-27 win over the New York Jets, with a right knee injury, fell short of his season-high of 214 rushing yards.

Leading 14-3, the Bills punted on their first possession of the third quarter, then scored on two 35-yard field goals by Scott Norwood and a 20-yard pass from Kelly to Keith McKeller.

The Patriots made it six consecutive games with just one offensive touchdown when Steve Grogan, who missed the previous four games with a neck injury, threw a 19-yard scoring pass to Sammy Martin with 3:19 gone in the fourth quarter.

The teams were very evenly matched physically, but UCF lacked good intentions. They were there to put UMass through the ringers. The game stayed scoreless to the half, with even possession time. But UCF exploded in the second half and began to dominate play. Both teams showed breath-taking offensive chances but neither were able to capitalize.

During the scramble in the UCF box, Kater connected with senior Sue Gaudette, who netted the ball in the top left corner with 14 minutes remaining.

Freshman Briana Scurry completed her third shutout of the season in net. She finished the game with four saves. UCF's Karen Richter had one save for the game. The Lady Knights got off 13 shots, while UMass got off nine. The British referee let a lot of fouls go, as UCF had 15 compared to UMass' nine.

"We kept our composure," Rudy said. "Our kids deserved this [win]. I hope we get in now [to the NCAAs]." The NCAA will announce tournament bids, dates and locations today.

Saturday's action against Florida International University seemed to propel UMass to win Sunday. The Reds brought down the Golden Panthers in a 2-1 decision.

FIU was not as physically fit as UMass, but their scrappy play constituted a challenge.

Cheap fouls, typical of Southern play, were frequent. Yellow cards were issued to FIU's Alison Hayman and sophomore Kerri O'Sullivan in the second half as they committed more fouls 15-7.

FIU's freshman Catherine Liller connected with the ball unassisted 21 minutes into the first half.

UMass sophomore Skye Eddy was replaced by Scurry in the net before play resumed. The score remained 1-0 to the half.

With 12 minutes remaining, Woodside lobbed one to Gaudette who tapped the ball to the bottom left corner of the net, finishing the scoring at 2-1.

UMass got off 10 shots to FIU's four. UMass had eight corner kicks to FIU's one. Scurry finished the game with one save, and keeper Donna Gean Enright finished with four.

Reds sweat out two wins

Wilkins injured in Reds win at Florida

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

ORLANDO, Fla. — In a game of opposites, everything is played out on the field, and only the results count. This one counted for much more than a win, it counted toward a bid to play in the NCAA tournament.

Yesterday the UMass women's soccer team defeated the Lady Knights of Central Florida, 1-0 on a well-manicured green field, with temperatures in the low 80's; but not without some bumps and bruises.

Freshman defender Paula Wilkins received 15 stitches above her right eyebrow at Winter Park Hospital, a 20 minute ride from the University.

The Central Flordia clinic did not treat Wilkins because they would not accept the UMass insurance policy, according to trainer Pam Leopard. The emergency room at the clinic required $150 up front, an amount not feasible for Leopard nor Wilkins.

"The hospital was really good to us," Leopard said. "They squeezed her inbetween some people and treated her as soon as they could."

Wilkins and Leopard caught up with the team at the airport. Wilkins wanted to talk about the game.

UCF senior Rena Creighton and Wilkins collided during a header, which Wilkins won, in the first 15 minutes of the game.

"At first I thought the sweat was coming over my brow," Wilkins said. "Then I saw my hand. I could feel the blood gushing out. I just dropped to the ground."

When Wilkins went down, UCF junior Leslie Suder was heard to say, "Suck it up, b " Red senior April Kater told Suder to shut her mouth, took one look at Wilkins and motioned to the sideline for medical attention.

Senior Kim Montgomery said she was surprised Wilkins was bleeding. "I looked over to see if she was OK and I could see into her head," Montgomery said.

"The nurse looked for my skull but it wasn't that deep," Wilkins said.

Suder's comment to Wilkins was typical of the verbage used by UCF on the field. They were also very sore losers.

"The better team didn't win today," said UCF coach Bill Barker. "I didn't think they were that good."

Coach Jim Rudy left the Men's and Women's soccer programs at UCF for UMass women's soccer in 1988. The majority of the players on UCF were Rudy's

Hixon posts 200th win

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Saturday afternoon University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon posted career win number 199. Sunday at Totman Field Hixon won her 200th as the Minutewomen defeated the University of Maine 4-0.

After the game, Hixon was surrounded by players, splashed with sparkling cider, and given roses and balloons.

"It's been funny because everyone knew it was close, we were getting down to the wire," Hixon said. "I certainly am not real superstitous, but superstitous enough where we weren't gonna make a big deal about it until it was over and done with. I'm real glad its out of the way, and we can just get on with business."

Saturday UMass beat a tough University of Connecticut team 2-1. Sherlan Cabralis scored her first collegiate goal to put the Minutewomen up 1-0, and then Kerri Fagan blasted a shot into the corner that gave UMass a 2-1 victory.

Yesterday's game in the rain was not nearly the contest that Saturday's game was. Jean Salisbury's slapper from an almost impossible angle caromed off the inside of the far post and into the net to give UMass a 1-0 lead.

Three minutes later, Dawn Trumbauer scored on a penalty stroke, as she lifted one past Maine goalie Debbie McSweeney. Still in the first half, Trumbauer scored her second goal of the game on yet another penalty stroke, that put the Minutewomen ahead 3-0.

For all intents and purposes, the game was over at halftime. All that remained to be seen was the celebration, and a second half goal by Susan Bernegger that upped the score to 4-0.

It was the last home game of the season for UMass, and the last home game ever for seniors Beth Thornton, Lisa Berardinelli, Kerri Fagan, Mara Frattasio, Nancy Philbrick, and Elise McDevitt, all who were honored before the game in a brief ceremony. Now it is on to Penn State for the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"Today as a whole was just great for everybody," Hixon said. "Great for the seniors, certainly a real thrill for me. There was a lot of support here, which makes me feel great."

Minutemen rush past NU Huskies, 28-21

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The numbers say the University of Massachusetts dominated this game. The numbers lie.

In Saturday's 28-21 UMass football win, Northeastern was never really out of a game in which it gained 152 yards on offense to UMass' 500, notched 3 first downs to UMass' 28, and held the ball half as long (20:27-to-39:33).

Awkward as it was, the non-conference victory improved UMass' overall record to 6-0-1, and with Boston University upsetting New Hampshire 41-24, the Minutemen remain alone atop the Yankee Conference at 5-0. UNH dropped to 4-1.

Without Gary Wilkos, the UMass offense mustered four scoring drives of at least 50 yards, but sputtered in spots. The Minutemen were penalized nine times for 71 yards, lost two fumbles, punted five times, and trailed at the half (14-7) for the first time this season.

"I thought we came together at halftime," said quarterback Tom Fasano. "We came back because the leadership on this team from the fifth-year seniors is amazing."

Fasano, a sophomore, started at quarterback and engineered the option adequately (7 of 12, 57 yards and one TD passing, 44 yards rushing), but yielded to junior Paul Tornatore in passing situations.

Offensive Coordinator Bob McConnell, who switched QBs nine times during the game, said "we had a situation that was kind of funny I'm sure to look at from the stands. It's just a matter of putting the best personnel on the field for the situation. . . I think you'd rather settle on one, but I'm not sure that we're going to be able to."

Quarterback Tom Fasano stepped in for the injured Gary Wilkos in Saturday's 28-21 UMass win. Fasano split quarterbacking duties with Paul Tornatore, as the Minutemen rolled up 500 yards on offense.

The one constant was the rushing attack. Freshman tailback John Johnson carried 36 times for 188 yards and a touchdown and caught six passes for 43 yards, and fullback David Mitchell (18 rushes, 93 yards) added two touchdowns, including an eight-yard gallop late in the third quarter that tied the game at 14-14.

"The offensive line is awesome," said Johnson, who earned Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week Honors for the third time this season. "The holes, you could drive trucks through them. . . the field was muddy and sloshy, but the cuts were there, and the line kept its footing."

The Huskies stayed close, however, with three big plays.

Quarterback Bill Barrale, a converted halfback who is the fifth signal-caller the Huskies have used this season, scrambled 67 yards along the right sideline to setup the first Northeastern touchdown.

After UMass responded with a 60-yard scoring drive, Northeastern's Rotell Searcy ran back a kickoff 96 yards for a touchdown to put the Huskies back on top, 14-7.

And in the fourth quarter, with the Minutemen out front by two touchdowns and the Huskies unable to come from behind via the pass, tight end Rico Rowell picked up a fumble and raced untouched 40 yards for a touchdown, closing the Huskies to within 28-21.

Fasano then scrambled for a clock-killing first down on fourth-and-six from the Northeastern 30 yard line.

Wilkos, who took in the game from the press box, was on the minds of several players. "I'm tired, I feel terrible, I'm hurting...but I feel great because we did it for Gary," Johnson said.

Runners sixth at N.E.

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

In what coach Ken O'Brien described as a sub-par performance from his team, the University of Massachusetts men's cross country team finished sixth in the New England Championships on Friday. Going into the meet O'Brien said that he had been hoping to finish among the top five teams but he knew his entire team would have to perform well in order to achieve that goal.

"I felt we would finish anywhere between fourth and seventh in this meet, but sixth and seventh were the low points on our totem pole." O'Brien said.

Providence College took first place in the meet with 41 points. Boston University placed second with 52 and Boston College finished third with 79.

O'Brien had expected Providence, BU and BC to be the top three teams in the meet. He also expected the fight for the next four spots to be between Connecticut, UMass, Northeastern and Vermont. That's how it was, although the finish was not exactly how O'Brien had hoped it would be.

The University of Connecticut finished fourth in the meet with 119 points. Northeastern scored 134 to take fifth and UMass scored 163 for sixth. Vermont finished seventh with 181.

"We had one of our poorer races of the year," O'Brien added. "Only three of our top seven runners ran well."

One of those Minutemen who did run well was senior Tom Degnan. Degnan led UMass with a ninth place finish overall.

Degnan was followed by fellow seniors Jon Corso in 19th place and Joe Milette in 36th place. Freshman Craig Cormier was the fourth UMass runner, in 45th place and sophomore Pat Reed completed the UMass scoring with a 54th place finish.

"This was one of the poorest meets of the year for us." O'Brien said. "I'm disappointed because it came on the heels of one of our best performances of the year (a third place finish in the Atlantic 10 Championships Oct. 20)."

The Minutemen now have two weeks to prepare for the IC4A Championships Nov. 10.

Volleyball spiked again

By LIOR BEN-AHARON

It has been a tough season for the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team and it did not get any better over the weekend as the Minutwomen dropped two matches to Penn State and St. Bonaventure.

On Friday the Minutewomen were swept in three games by an awesome Penn State team.

"It was an experience," coach Carol Ford said after her team was overcome by a far superior team.

UMass started out well, playing aggressively on both offense and defense, but lost the first game 8-15. Penn State, previously unbeaten in twenty-seven matches, then turned it up a notch and easily won the next two games 1-15, 2-15.

"They're amazing," said Ford.

UMass faced St. Bonaventure on Saturday and like the match the night before, the Minutewomen lost in three games.

The match differed, however, in that UMass played much stronger. The Minutewomen actually jumped out to an 11-3 lead in the first game, but then fell apart and lost 13-15.

"I was pretty mad," Ford said referring to the first game. "There was no reason for us to let them come back."

After the demoralizing first game loss, UMass played a "horrendous" second game, where the team just could not do anything right, losing 4-15.

The Bonnies of St. Bonaventure closed out the match winning the third game by the tight score of 15-13, in what Ford labeled a "dogfight."

With the win, St. Bonaventure improved its record to 18-10 overall and 3-3 in the Atlantic 10 conference.

According to Ford, the main reason for the Bonnies success this season has been the play of freshman sensation Susan Kennedy.

"The rest of the team can be beat," Ford said, but in order to win, Susan Kennedy has to be beaten.

In practice this week, the Minutewomen will work hard on putting the ball away, a problem the team has been having all season long, especially in "crunch time."

"Our system is good," said Ford. "We just need to get confidence."

Looking ahead to upcoming matches, UMass volleyball (4-21) will travel to New Haven, Connecticut to face Yale on Tuesday night.

Congress passes tax bill

Tax increases on the rich, purchases, alcohol approved

WASHINGTON (AP)— The tax bill that Congress passed over the weekend will touch nearly every segment of the American public.

Most Americans will pay higher taxes, but on their purchases rather than on their earnings. The bite will be relatively light for all but the well-to-do. Those with incomes over $200,000 a year will see their federal tax liabilities rise by an average of 6.3 percent.

Many of the 70 million couples and individuals with incomes under $20,000 will get a slight tax cut, thanks to expansion of the earned-income credit for poorer, working families with children.

The National Taxpayers' Union, a nonpartisan organization that campaigns for lower taxes, estimated the bill will boost the taxes of a $30,000 household by an average of $109. The union, which figured all households in a certain income bracket, regardless of size, said a $40,000 household will pay $166 more. At $50,000, it will pay an extra $214; $70,000, $277 more; $100,000, $542 more, and households at the $225,000 level will face an average tax increase of $3,572.

Here are major provisions, most of which will take effect January 1:

GASOLINE: Raise the 9-cent gasoline tax to 14 cents a gallon and the 15-cent diesel tax to 20 cents on Dec. 1. A motorist driving 10,000 miles a year in a car that gets 22 miles per gallon will pay about $23 more.

ALCOHOL: Effective Jan. 1, double the beer tax to 32 cents a six-pack; raise the $12.50-a-gallon tax on 100-proof liquor by $1, or 20 cents a fifth; raise taxes on most wines, including table wine, which will go from 3 cents a 750-milliliter bottle to 21 cents.

TOBACCO: Raise the 16-cent cigarette tax by 4 cents in 1991 and another 4 cents in 1993. Snuff, cigars and other tobacco will face 25 percent tax increases each year.

AIR TRAVEL: On Dec. 1, raise to 10 percent the 8 percent tax on airline tickets, which had been scheduled to drop to 4 percent at year end. The average round-trip ticket, which costs about $300, will increase by $6.

TELEPHONES: Make permanent the 3 percent tax on local and long-distance phone service, which otherwise will expire Dec. 31.

LUXURIES: On Jan. 1, impose a 10 percent tax on the portion of the price of cars above $30,000; boats above $100,000; jewelry and furs above $10,000 and private planes above $250,000. A $40,000 car, for example, will face a luxury tax of $1,000.

TAX RATES: Effective Jan. 1 (for tax returns to be filed in 1992), raise to 31 percent the 28 percent top income tax rate paid by the $600,000 couples and individuals with the highest incomes. That will raise taxes on singles making more than about $125,000 a year and couples with incomes above the $200,000 range.

Cut to 31 percent the 33 percent rate that as many as 4 million upper-middle-income people pay on part of their earnings.

Some 26 killed in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — At least 26 people have been killed in more Black factional violence, including 16 gunned down in what appeared to be revenge killings in the Black township of Soweto, police said yesterday.

Also yesterday, nine African National Congress members were charged with terrorism and the illegal possession of weapons in a case that could further strain relations between the government and the ANC.

One of the nine, Mac Maharaj, is on the ANC's National executive committee and also is a top official in the closely allied South African Communist Party.

The nine, all in detention since July, were not asked to enter a plea at the Druban Regional Court. They have accused police of torture and threatening them with death.

Mohawk Nation tells U.N. of strife

Editor's Note: This is part of a multipart series examining the Mohawk Nation in Canada. Ric Oliveria is a Collegian staff member currently in Kahnawake, Canada.

Last July, when 100 Surete De Quebec police officers unsuccessfully raided a Mohawk barricade, they touched off a war between the Mohawks and the Canadian Government which drew Canada into world attention.

On October 24, the United Nations committee heard a panel of Mohawks, condemning Canada's actions against the civil and political rights of the Mohawk people.

"This is a war against sovereignty," said Alex McComber, a Mohawk and a resident of Kahnawake. "This is a war by the Canadian government and its ventriliquests' dummy, the Quebec government against native sovereignty."

He is also the principal of the Kahnawake Survival School. During the crisis he helped extensively in the smuggling of food and people in and out of the Reserve by boat over the St. Lawrence River. Amro Elzeki, a science teacher at the Survival school, was on the outside.

Elzeki, through communications with the Kahnawake Peacekeepers, set up a network for delivery of food and the evacuation of people.

"All that happened to put it simply is that non-native staff from Survival school and the primary schools got together at a house near the docks," Elzeki said. "We spread through friends a plea for support, and through friends we got money, commitments and food."

Elzeki and the group with the help of other non-natives raised $5000 plus food in 48 hours.

With the risk of attack by the Solidarity Chateauquay, Elezki said they had to all carry cellular phones. "People would call us to warn us about busloads of Solidarity Chateaguay who were looking for us. So when these Chateaguay people were coming we said, 'alright we will change the place.'" Besides his group, Elezki said many

UMass students, administrators expect a quiet Halloween

By MICHELLE MUCCIACCIO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Masschusetts is gearing up for Halloween parties of all shapes and sizes tomorrow night, although students and administrators are predicting a quiet holiday this year.

"There have been no problems so far," said Joseph Zannini, Director of Housing. He anticipates none Wednesday and also stated that "in the past several years, there have been no major problems."

The security policy in the dormitories stands as it did last year, with all guests needing to be signed in at building security, hosts being responsible for their guests, and a limit of two over night guests per resident. Guests are allowed to stay for a maximum of three days and two night, Zannini said.

Although most of the parties occurred last week, many activities are planned for Wednesday. Jerry Jolly of the Pub said that their annual Halloween party will be held.

South Hadley's Katina's has "Heavy Metal Halloween" planned for Tuesday (featuring Trouble Tribe and Rapid Symphony) and a UMass fraternity costume party will take place Wednesday.

Pearl Street in Northampton has its usual gay night with a costume contest featuring a $20 prize for the best disguise.

Many students are also becoming more aware of the need for careful celebrating. Tom Daniell, a resident of Southwest who is planning to stay in with his floor, saying that he doesn't want anyone to "go out intoxicated and get seriously injured."

Costumes are one of the oldest traditions of Halloween, originating from beliefs that spirits roam the earth on the holiday and that in order to avoid being possessed or harassed by them, people needed to resemble them.

A representative of Faces in Northampton said that this year people are quite original and tend to be "doing their own thing." Their best-selling items have been

Asian conference addresses ethnocentrism

By ELLIOT MONTEVERDE TORRES
Collegian Staff

Focusing on Asian ethnocentricity and American attitudes toward Asians, Asian students at the University of Massachusetts culminated the first formal Asian Awareness week in a conference last Saturday.

"We do not live in the world. We live in our heads which are full of arbitrary concepts and imaginary fabrications of the world," said Taitetsu Unno, a professor of religion at Smith College, explaining ethnocentricity.

Unno said ethnocentricity is a result of "the tendency to trust only those people of the same group, feel that one has nothing in common with other groups, that one has nothing to learn from others. In all an unfounded sense of superiority."

"With the current Middle-East crisis Western ethnocentricity in the U.S. media have again employed stereotypes as propaganda against the Arabs," said UMass history professor Richard Minear. He spoke on the prevalent Western "gringo-honky" attitudes about the "so-called Third World."

Minear, citing examples from comic books, commented on themes such as, "the American infatuation with Asian women," that "all Asians look alike" and the portrayal of Asians as "irrational and uncapable of governing themselves."

Minear asked the audience whether "these distorted attitudes from such comic books, the media and Hollywood have changed." Unno replied that it has not changed. He said "the attitudes have now shifted to the Arabs and that although President Bush plays golf at home he acts as a green beret."

Wendy Duong, a Washington D.C. attorney, speaking on social issues affecting the Asian family, defined the "immigrant phenomenon" where, in order to gain acceptance into the new society, people deny their cultural and ethnic roots. For example, Duong said the popular custom of speaking the native language at home "creates a generational gap within the family because the younger members of the family become resentful and deny their language."

On the other extreme, Doung said that "some parents deliberately impose Western heritage upon their children so that they can become happy Americans.

Sally Habana'-Hafner of the Center for Organizational and Community Development at the UMass School of Education said that ethnocentricity is a sense of pride of cultural identity, that it's often used to prove one's cultural superiority over another." Habana said that "ethnic groups must recognize that ethnocentricity is a form of a prejudicial attitude that is inevitably translated onto another ethnic group."

Unno summarized ethnocentricity as 'rooted in mistaking mental constructs for reality." Thus, when the term 'Asian' is used, people conjure up all kinds of images based upon media distortions, unquestioned presumptions, and ignorant stereotypes.

Unno said such a view of an 'Asian' fails to see another human being; rather, it shows the ignorance of a person harboring such a view, a reflection of one's own dirty conceptual lens. "In fact," he said, "people who spew negative stereotypes of group or class of people are simply revealing some negative aspects of themselves."

Amherst residents defer civil rights policy proposal

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Local residents voted last night to table a civil rights policy proposal for further review by the Civil Rights Review Commission after a long and heated debate at the Amherst Town Meeting.

The proposed policy, Article Three, attempted to establish an official town position regarding discriminatory behavior which is "collectively disapproved of."

The article cites "violations of another person's civil rights through hostile of discriminatory behavior based on that person's race, age, gender, sexual orientation, religion, national origin, ethnicity, mental or pyhsical disability, health condition, economic or educational status, previous military service, or for any other arbitrary or unlawful reason."

After several amendment proposals, the majority feeling of the voters was that although the motive behind the article was well-intended, the Town Meeting was an inappropriate forum to revise such legislation and that more extensive review was needed on the part of the CRRC.

The article was proposed in response to a racial incident involving Black and White youths on the Amherst Common last summer.

Members of the CRRC expressed regret at the decision of referral.

"It is a sad day for Amherst," Jack Tager of the CRRC said, "No matter what document we came up with, the town meeting would have been unhappy with it."

Paul Rogers, a member of the CRRC, called the proposed article "a broad, ethical, philosophical statement [which trys] to suggest to everyone in the town that a community can be developed in which all of the 'isms' would be eliminated."

"The article tries to show that the CRRC is an aggressive body who will advocate for people who have experienced racial discrimination," Sue Lee, also a member of the CRRC said.

Arguments against the article centered around what one resident termed its "general vagueness" and that it was "out of context with current civil rights legislation."

Elisa Campbell of the Town Select Board advocated the proposed article, saying, "There are many people who feel excluded. I think we need to think about the people . . . who are the daily victims of discrimination and assault."

Tager termed the article educational stating, "it is not a legal document which tells the community what to do, but rather suggests behavior appropriate in civilized society."

Lewis Mainzer, a town resident who was against the article, said, "[The CRRC] owes us a report . . . What they gave us was not up to speed."

Office of the Chancellor

Dear Graduate Student:

In a few days, you will receive a ballot asking whether you wish to be represented by the Graduate Employees Organization, an affiliate of the United Auto Workers/AFL-CIO, in negotiations with the University Administration. As you decide how to vote, there are a few issues we think you should consider.

Stipends—Graduate Student Increases Significantly Outpace those for Unionized Employees.

Salary increases for unionized University employees and stipend increases for graduate students are determined in different ways. For unionized employees, like the faculty, increases are determined by the Governor's Office of EmployeeRelations (OER). The unions lobby OER directly; the University administration plays virtually no role in determining the size of the increases. Stipend increases for graduate student assistants and associates are, on the other hand, determined independently by the University administration on the basis of our budget request to and allocation from the legislature. The results of these two processes, summarized in the chart below, have been very different as well. In the five years from 1984-85 to 1989-90 (the most recent year for which complete figures are available), negotiated salary increases to unionized faculty totalled 31.5 percent, while average TA stipends increased by 60 percent and RA stipends by 68 percent.

These dramatic increases are still, in our view, inadequate. The campus administration has identified graduate student stipend increases as our top priority in every annual budget request in which we have been allowed to indicate priorities. In fiscal year 1986 we asked for $1.5 million and received $1 million, in 1987 we asked for $270,000 and received $194,000, and in 1988 we asked for $815,000 and received $700,000. In 1989 we asked for $1 million and in 1990 we asked for $2.4 million for graduate stipends; we received no new money for stipends nor for anything else in either of those years.

Layoffs—Only Students Are Unaffected

The campus budget has, since the beginning of this fiscal year in July, been reduced by approximately $16.6 million. As a result, the administration has notified every union on campus that there will be layoffs this year and is currently considering a plan under which all unionized and non-unionized employees will be laid off (with no pay) for up to five days this semester. The only group unaffected will be student employees. This decision was made unilaterally by the administration; GEO made no proposal for exclusion and has had no discussions with the administration on this subject.

Alternatives to GEO Representation

We have found it very helpful to be able to discuss issues related to graduate student employment directly with graduate students. We firmly believe that we have a common interest in improving the situation of graduate student employees. We further believe that we can accomplish far more in this area by working together than by investing our time in countless hours of adversarial "negotiations". If GEO does not prevail in this election, we intend, therefore, to conduct another election in which graduate students employees in each school and college on campus can directly elect representatives to work with us on improving graduate student employment policies and practices.

The question as we see it is not whether graduate students should be involved in this needed effort but whether a cooperative on-campus effort or contentious one involving District 65/UAW/AFL-CIO is more likely to succeed. We believe that directly-elected on-campus representatives working with the administration can be significantly more effective than a group that collects dues and is heavily influenced by a large national union with very limited experience on graduate student employment issues.

Implications of GEO Representation—GEO Will Yield Few Gains

- Representation by GEO, and affliation with District 65, will not affect "strike rights"; all persons employed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, unionized or not, are prohibited by statute from striking.
- It will not affect "job security"; graduate student employees have been exempted from this year's layoffs, despite GEO's silence on the issue, because of the administration's commitment to the welfare of the students.
- It will not affect fees; last year we waived fees for those with a demonstrated financial need well before GEO raised this issue. The only change resulting from months of negotiations with GEO was a change in the application deadline. This year, we waived fall fees for all graduate assistants, despite the fact that GEO had agreed to a continuation of waivers only for those with a demonstrated financial need.
- It will not affect stipends; OER has stated that it will not recognize GEO as a union and therefore it will not include graduate student employees in any negotiated increases for unionized employees. This is probably just as well since, as noted above, stipends (which we determine) have risen roughly twice as fast as unionized salaries (which we do not determine).

Representation by GEO will signnificantly affect our ability to accomodate the needs of individual graduate students by limiting our flexibility. And it will divert much of our time and attention away from the cooperative efforts to enhance the conditions of graduate student employees. We believe your focus and ours should be on working together, without the involvement of third parties. Representation by GEO will, in our view, foster divisiveness at a time when we sorely need to work together as a community.

Please think carefully before you cast your ballot. And please be sure to vote!

Playground for junior politicians

Politics involves a lot of broken promises, and I'm about to break one right here.

I promised myself that I'd ignore the student government this year, but I guess that's kind of like trying to ignore your screaming little brother. Or like trying not to look at a big, messy traffic accident in the middle of the road. Or trying not to smell a putrefying corpse in the next room. You get the idea.

Al Arpad

This week's victim is Karen Talbot, the Student Government Association treasurer, who apparently stands accused of joining in a conspiracy, along with the administrators of the Student Activities Office, to defraud the Area Governments and the Concert Fund. If you really understand that, you've been spending too much time following student government over the last few years. For everyone else, I'll try to explain briefly.

Whether or not Talbot is actually guilty of engaging in a conspiracy against the interests of students depends on your definition of conspiracy, and on what you believe are the best interests of students.

Many students believe the Student Government Association controls the Student Activities Trust Fund, which consists of the money from Student Activities fees (about $100 per student) and the money earned by student organizations. This is not true.

The constitution of the Student Government Association has never been recognized by the University Trustees, and is therefore not a legally binding document. The Northampton District Attorney ruled in 1988 (ironically at the request of the Speaker of the Student Senate, Robert Fadel) that the Student Senate is not a governing body, as defined by law.

Any control the Student Senate exercises over the Trust Fund is therefore mainly a courtesy extended to students and their alleged leaders by the University administration. The amount of courtesy they choose to extend has been decreasing rapidly in the last few years, partly because of tight budgets, and partly because Dennis Madson, the vice chancellor for Student Affairs, and Irene Carew, the director of the Student Activities Office, have correctly perceived that the present student government has only the most superficial support from students.

In the last few years, student leaders who have questioned the growth of administrative control over the trust fund, or the simultaneous rapid growth of the share of the budget spent on administrative costs, have consistently been blackballed or ignored. This has been relatively easy because the most sensible student leaders have always sided with the administrators, where the real power obviously lies.

Karen Talbot has unquestionably worked hard, both as treasurer and as a former chair of the Budgets Committee, to keep student government running smoothly on its present course, and to maintain the illusion that student government actually matters. Was that simply the sensible thing to do, or was it a conspiracy against the best interests of students? Probably no one would even care, except for the pesky hundred dollars being added to student bills.

The one student office that does matter is the Student Trustee. I ran for Student Trustee a while ago and lost, but even without me in it, the office is valuable, and is recognized by the Board of Trustees and the state government. The rest of student government, the Student Activities Office and the entire Student Activities Trust Fund should be abolished.

Allocations for actual student activities have dropped drastically in the past few years as a direct result of rising administrative costs. Since student control over funding is nominal at best, there is no reason to maintain the elaborate and expensive fiction of a separate bureaucracy within Student Affairs. We can't afford to keep funding a playground for junior politicians.

Father Silber - you stay home with the kids

On the other hand, Rachel would not have had as difficult a time deciding to be a housewife and a mother if it hadn't been for the feminist movement, because [it has] denigrated those women who've decided to take their maternal responsibilities seriously.

John Silber, describing the situation his daughter, Rachel, faced as a "result" of the feminist movement.

In a recent interview with a Boston television anchorperson, Silber, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, added to his extensive and colorful list of "shockers," garnering, once again, much disdain and anger from the female community when he said mothers who work, instead of staying home, are guilty of neglecting their children.

"There is no question that we have a generation of neglected children, we have a generation of abused children, by women who have thought that a third-rate day care center was just as good as a first-rate home," Silber said Thursday.

But, attempting to "set the record straight," Silber told the anchorwoman he was not referring to women who had no choice but to work and put their children in day care.

"Of course [I'm] not [being unfair to those women]," he said. "I'm talking about the women who didn't have that as a choice. See, if I am into another one of those Silber shocker things, then to hell with this damn program, because I don't need that. I thought we were having a complex, objective discussion."

Okay, let me see if I've got this straight — women who do not stay home with their children are guilty of neglect; they are not taking their maternal responsibilities seriously.

Meredith O'Brien

In a time when families cannot make it on one income, where the number of single-mothers is increasing by leaps and bounds, we women should simply bow down to the almighty Silber and claim our responsibilities for the ills of the world, for all of the problems plaguing family life today.

How dare we women think we could get jobs and make the money to buy the food to feed our families, instead of staying home and being dependent on the fathers to provide us. How dare we place our children in day care centers while we work instead of going out and finding a man to take care of us.

Silber would lead us to believe that the fathers of the world are angry with us women too, that they are stark raving mad because we dared to step out of the home, put shoes on our bare feet and stop getting pregnant all of the time. I suppose Silber would add that men probably resent the woman in the family for going out, getting a job, earning money and supporting the family.

Unlike the men who go out, leave the children at home/in day care, to earn money for the family, we women obviously just don't take our responsibilities as mothers seriously enough for Mr. Silber's tastes.

Following along the same lines, Silber must also subscribe to that traditional view — women are terrible mothers if they get jobs and put their children in day care, while men can be wonderful fathers and still put their children in day care and work.

If this is indeed the case, then I suppose my mother, both my grandmothers, my great grandmothers and my aunts are guilty of neglect. They left their children alone or with babysitters when they went out to work to help earn money to support the family.

Then I suppose all of the women who are in college now, who might want to have children in the future should just drop out. Why bother to prep for a career? If we have any intentions of having both a career and family, we are simply plotting to further the neglect and abuse of children in society.

Well, you know us women so well Johnny, we're just out to ruin the world with our petty concerns.

We just can't wait until you become governor.

Duffey's ego not appreciated

"When will it end?" seems to be the lament around campus these days. After budget cuts throttled one of its latest victims, the Everywoman's Center, the University witnessed a grim portrait of President-Chancellor Duffey. After watching him in action, I realized that there's a problem where Duffey's heart lies.

The prestige of this University is directly proportional to Duffey's image among his peers and in the national educational community. And this image seems to be his number one concern.

Imagine, instead of the Everywoman's Center, the UMass basketball program was cut. There goes our/his national prestige.

The fact remains valuing education in terms of how much one pays for it is classist. Cutting Everywoman's Center was sexist, and cutting the Staff and Organization Departments was racist.

So nationally we're smells like a rose, on the home front it stinks. This University, with one of the best reputations for accepting diversity, has an oppressive leader.

I don't mind if Duffey uses us as a stepping stone. I just hope he doesn't crush us in the process. Maybe Coach Calipari and Coach Reid should give him a lecture on teamwork.

Graduates: Don't forget administration's good will record

If you are a graduate student employee, you probably received, along with a ballot on the recognition of GEO as the union representative of the graduate employees, a letter from University administrators arguing that you vote against unionization.

I would like to take exception with the matter and substance of the letter. In sending this sort of letter at the last minute, without time for substantial debate, the University has shown its conception of "fair play" consistent with its past record.

The administration would like you to believe that graduate employees are their first priority and that you would gain little by having GEO recognized. In fact, they suggest that if GEO loses the election, they would institute a representative body that would advise the administration on graduate employee issues in a spirit of "cooperation."

In my capacity as president of the Graduate Student Senate, I happen to head such an advisory body and I am painfully aware of its limits. The administration would like you to trust their good will, yet time and time again it has disregarded our advice and on occasion trampled graduate students' interests.

Pierre LaLiberte

An example among others: the Legal Services Office — a legal aid office set up by students for students — that was arbitrarily stripped of its litigation power after the administration was sued for violating the civil rights of a Black female student. This was in the face of overwhelming opposition by graduate students. Did the administration seek the advice of the Graduate Senate back then? No, they just ignored us.

Likewise, when we lobbied the state to get a graduate student representative on the Board of Trustees and solicited the support of the administration, we were categorically ignored. Where was the cooperative spirit?

Over the years graduate students have come to realize the limits of the cooperative spirit of the administration, and are tired of waiting for it to improve their lot. A few years ago, members of the Graduate Senate decided to form GEO, an organization that the administration would be required to negotiate with. No more waiting for the "cooperative spirit!"

A similar situation existed when the University's professional staff was represented by a voluntary organization (PAUMA) akin to the one that the administration proposes for graduate employees. For years PAUMA, although recognized by the administration and the trustees, was unable to even establish a credible grievance procedure for its members.

In 1989, professional staff overwhelmingly rejected PAUMA in favor of a union, SEIU local 509, with which the University is legally required to negotiate.

I hope graduate students will see the wisdom in the professional staff's decision and not believe the administration's fairy tales about power relations of this campus.

Please think carefully before you cast your ballot. And please be sure to vote!

David Cassidy is coming back.

Remember him? He was the sickeningly sugar sweet cute guy on the The Partridge Family and his brother, Sean, was the equally cute geek on The Hardy Boys/Nancy Drew Mysteries. Their faces adorned teeny-bop magazines and pillow cases all across the United States.

The memories of this 1970s wet dream are enough to make one puke, but however horrifying it is, David Cassidy is back. He will star in the upcoming film, Spirit of '76, and the post-punk, psychedelic group from Los Angeles, Red Cross, is helping Cassidy along his way on the comeback trail.

The track "1976" off the group's latest album and major label debut, Third Eye, will be featured on the film's soundtrack. This opportunity to work with Cassidy proved to be a great source of excitement for the group, since it afforded them the chance to ask such burning questions as, "Did Tracey (Susan Crough) really date Jim Dandy of Black Oak Arkansas?"

Red Cross formed 12 years ago when brothers Jeffrey and Stephen McDonald, influenced by the Osmonds and the Ramones, decided to jump on the punk bandwagon. Jeffrey played guitar while Steven, who was only 11 at the time, played the bass.

In 1979, they released their first EP, followed by Born Innocent in 1981 and Teen Babes from Monsanto in 1984. After the release of Teen Babes, they completed their line-up with the addition of guitarist Robert Hecker. The new line-up went on to record Neurotica in 1987.

"Our two goals," says Jeffrey, "are to reach a wide variety of people and to please ourselves."

Opening for Red Cross will be Unsane, an aptly named group from New York City. The group has released three singles, the most recent being Vandal X b/w Streetsweeper on Sub Pop Records, and is looking forward to an upcoming EP on Circuit Records. Their sound, a brutal but awesome aural assault laced with an angry aggressive grunge, promises to splatter one's brain matter and make his or her ears bleed. A pleasant experience indeed.

Red Cross and Unsane will play Pearl Street in Northampton. Show starts at 9 p.m. Admission is $5. 18-and-over.

Rollins exudes emotion

Rollins Band
Katina's
Sunday, Oct. 28

In an alienating world of hypocrisy, violence and confusion there are two choices. You can avoid reality by sitting in your room comfortably numb, or you can boldly struggle with what life has to offer. For those brave souls choosing the latter, there is Henry Rollins.

On Sunday night, a mixed bag of these strugglers made the trek to Katina's to hear Henry Rollins espouse his pained, raging world view.

As roadies finished setting up the stage, the dance floor/pit filled to overflowing. Henry Rollins stood to stage left stretching and warming up his hard, tatooed body. Expectation and tension were thick enough to "bite like a donut." The band casually walked on stage, and from the first note it was glorious pandemonium for an hour-and-a-half. Two hundred pound skins slammed next to 70 pound middle schoolers as the energy surged between performer and audience.

With song titles like "You Didn't Need to do That to Me," "Tearing Me Apart," "Burned Beyond Recognition," and "What Am I Doing Here," Rollins' sense of alienation and contradiction was obvious.

Sim Cain and Chris Hackett were both excellent on drums and guitar, respectively. Andrew Weiss ably showed the bass to be one of the coolest instruments around. Over this self-described "thrash core" background, Henry Rollins shouted and raged his view of the 20th century human condition. The world around him creates sensory overload that he'd rather not experience, as he sings, "I know I'm alive when I feel like I'm dying. I know I see when I wish I couldn't see anymore."

Tricky time changes were frequent as they'd slow for Rollins to speak some lyrics and them lunge back to break-neck speed. Shouts for a bass solo were eventually rewarded as the band shifted into a funky mode. The band also got bluesy before closing out their set.

The sensual Rollins put a lot of himself into his performance. Bathed in sweat, his face and body revealed the intensity and emotion of the music. At times he'd wrap the mike chord around his neck like the snake tattooed on his leg. Other times he'd sway on his haunches like some great predatory cat.

Band and audience were both visibly exhausted, yet both knew an encore was appropriate and necessary. As they burst into "1,00 Times Blind," the dripping audience went crazy all over again.

Like many of us, Henry Rollins is a man with demons. Sunday night, audience and performer together exorcised some of these demons and left, ready to confront life's severity and confusion.

Boxed-set commemorates Kerouac

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday, October 21st, was the 21st anniversary of the death of Jack Kerouac. Kerouac was a key figure, if not the key figure in the literary movement known as the San Francisco Renaissance and/or the Beat Generation. A novelist and poet, he was the author of 23 books, of which 19 have been published. Had he lived, Kerouac would now be 68-years-old. He was one of the original 50s beatniks and is said to have sired the hippie movement of the 60s.

This summer's release of the deluxe box-set of the complete recorded works of Jack Kerouac by Rhino Records, reveals another dimension to this much admired, sometimes maligned and oft-misunderstood beat writer. These recordings bear out the fact, that regardless of whether he was loud or soft-spoken, intoxicated on enlightened, worldly or child-like, blunt or shy, Jack Kerouac was a major literary spokesperson for the beat generation and a primary spokesperson for the jazz age. The recordings also bear out that he had a great voice.

This authentic and quintessential fact is only borne out in part by reading his books which are written in a poetic prose style that the poet Allen Ginsberg once called "bop prosody." But actually hearing Kerouac's own voice is the only way that the full effect of his sound can be heard, since his voice is almost a musical instrument itself, resonating with a Sinatra-like tone contained by his sometimes thick, Lowell, Mass., French-Canadian accent.

The handsome linen boxed-set, which in addition to cassettes and CDs, is also available in a limited LP edition, collects together re-issues of the three record albums Kerouac produced in the wake of the great wave of popularity he enjoyed (or as some might say, suffered), after the publication of his best-selling and influential novel On the Road. These original titles: Poetry of the Beat Generation, Blues and Haikus (both originally on the Hanover label) and Readings by Jack Kerouac on the Beat Generation (originally on Verve), have long been out of print and are now extremely rare.

Also included in the new boxed-set are bonus tracks consisting of previously unissued works, mostly out-takes from the other recording sessions. In the LP set these take the form of an additional record, entitled The Last Word. Although it is something of a misnomer in that there are tapes circulating of at least one other substantial recording by Kerouac reading Old Angel Midnight/Dr. Sax and also several versions of the unreleased soundtrack to Robert Frank's beatnik film Pull My Daisy, which Kerouac narrated, the release of this new material is especially eventful.

The first session of Poetry of a Beat Generation features Kerouac reading from his works to the accompaniment of Steve Allen's piano. Allen, of television fame as a comedian and performer of popular arrangements informed in part by jazz, is heard at his musical best: sensitive, spontaneous and fluent, his piano-playing never intrudes nor departs from the words, but artfully and naturally supports Kerouac's voice.

This recording is often mistakenly referred to as the soundtrack to Kerouac's appearance on the Steve Allen television show, but was actually a studio session from 1959 produced in one take, in about an hour. Because of this, it is the artistic equivalent of Kerouac's own composition style of spontaneous prose in which the first take is regarded as the best take, something like improvisational jazz. The second album, Blues and Haikus, underscores this point: accompanying Jack are the two great tenor sax players Al Cohn and Zoot Sims. Ginsberg calls this record "the classic of all Beat-era jazz poetry recordings, yet to be matched for delighted recitation." And a delight it is.

The high point of Blues and Haikus is the interplay between Kerouac, Cohn and Sims in the section entitled "American Haikus." The results are nothing short of brilliant. The impeccable blowing of Sims and Cohn are the perfect compliment to Kerouac's enthused delivery.

Less brilliant, but more arcane, is the track "Hard Hearted Old Farmer" on which Kerouac sings. Gilbert Millstein described his voice as having "an odd pathetic quality, untrained but true." For many jazz and blues listeners this is the very quality that is listened for: truth.

In addition to the recordings, there is also a 32-page booklet that is quite distinctive because of the lush, large and beautiful photographs of Kerouac, many of which are previously unpublished. A personal favorite was taken in 1953 by Ginsberg depicting Kerouac and writer William S. Burroughs goofing off for the camera in mock combat, with knives at each other's throats. We should count our blessings that Burroughs didn't kill Kerouac since, if not the founder of the beat generation, Kerouac was indeed the true voice of the beat generation. He wasn't simply some hip cat, but a sincere artist who meant every word that he said and said it as if he meant it.

For this reason — the pure poetic power of Kerouac's voice — this box-set is a "must listen" if not "have," for proto-beats and squares alike, and for anyone who likes poetry. If you are not familiar with Kerouac's works and not ready to splurge on something as extravagant as this, you can probably find an inexpensive copy of On the Road in most used book stores. But it would be wrong to judge Kerouac for better or for worse on the basis of his most popular book; I recommend a road less traveled by for reading Kerouac: the lesser known novels, Tristessa, Visions of Gerard and Pic are each magnificent in their own right and are favorites of mine.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Sandinista leader within the FSLN and AMNLAE

By MINU SEBASTIAN
Collegian staff

A Nicaraguan Sandinista and feminist, Amanda Centeno Espinosa, gave a lecture last Thursday entitled "Prospects for the FSLN and Women's Liberation in Nicaragua today."

Amanda Centeno Espinosa has had a long revolutionary history. She has been fighting in the Somoza insurrection since she was a teenager within the FSLN (Sandinista National Liberation Front).

In 1977, she became part of a women's group called AMNLAE. There were some professional women in the group, as well as leaders, peasants and workers of all sectors. Their purpose was to defend the life of themselves and their children against the threat of the Somoza dictator. AMNLAE was part of the movement of the FSLN.

After the February 1990 electoral defeat of Daniel Ortega, AMNLAE has begun to incorporate other independent women's groups into its own. AMNLAE incorporates the political agenda of the FSLN and feminist positions while independent women's groups focus on gender issues.

While working closely with the FSLN Espinosa felt that AMNLAE was an appendage of it. "The leadership within the FSLN revealed a deep sexist mentality," she said. "One of the fundamental causes of defeat was the error on the part of the FSLN leadership to convert AMNLAE into an appendage of it."

"How can anyone deny the autonomy of our organization," she asked. Nicaraguan women constitute 52 percent of the population. "In order for the FSLN to change, women have to take the role in changing the consciousness of other women and also represent their interests."

Espinosa believes that one of the major obstacles leading to the defeat of Ortega was imperialism. "We must confront imperialism and women's oppression and there are moments when women must work with men," she said.

"Men are also victims, but they are responsible. We can't just struggle against imperialism," she said. "Sexism exists because there are sexist men and women who promote it. We must help others to develop consciousness."

Espinosa's identity as a woman and a Sandinista are not separate. She assumes her lesbian identity and retains her critical attitudes of the FSLN while working in it.

"I refuse to stop being critical of the FSLN and a lesbian. The FSLN needs me," she said.

She spoke in Spanish with a translation into English for the majority American audience.

The Spirit of Frida Kahlo

Last week I saw and heard Frida Kahlo speak. I actually saw the actress, Donna Blue Lachman of the Blue Rider Theater of Chicago play her in "Frida, The Last Portrait." Frida Kahlo era una mujer extraordinairia y creativa de Mexico.

C.Y. Greene

At age 18, she began painting in bed while recovering from a bus accident. A handrail pierced through her body and left her with physical pain and disabilities which she experienced until the end of her life at age 47. In her paintings, she transformed herself into a knowing goddess-like woman. It was the intangible knowing spirit within her images that created Frida as a strong, visionary and multifaceted woman.

She was uniquely beautiful in both styles of wearing long, braided hair and long Tehuantepec dresses or close cropped hair and men's suits. Despite her chameleon changes in her paintings, her eyes reflected the same soul. That soul was rich with passion and love for life and people.

In her personal life, she married the painter Diego Rivera twice and was involved with other men and women. She led a political life as a member of the Mexican Communist Party. Since her father was Jewish, she was sensitive to the fact that Henry Ford sent money to Hitler. [In the play] when she sat next to Ford at a banquet dinner, she asked him if he was Jewish.

Her transformative talents inspired me because she used her creativity to overcome her difficulties and to enjoy life. Lachman, as Frida, spoke about the fruits inside every person and how every person should make love with her fruits, not just make love. She must have applied this to all that she involved herself in. This belief probably nourished her great power as a painter. Her husband often said that she was the better painter.

She wondered if she didn't have the bus accident, would she had painted or met Diego Rivera. Unable to explain the occurence of these events, she concluded that all played a part in her cycle of life. Through her paintings, she became her own creations. She painted herself as a tree once and Donna Blue Lachman became the leaves and limbs of the tree at the play's ending.

After leaving the play, I felt that she left a seed to grow my own tree.

Racism is still a reality

Now looking back I've come to realize that the police are good at covering their tracks. There has been a number of incidents in Amherst that I feel were racially motivated in which the police came out smelling like roses. What happens or in fact who cares what happens to those who are mistakenly identified, look "all to familiar," or were protecting themselves the best way they knew how (standing up for themselves as human beings)?

Cheray O'Neal

Three years ago I remember an incident that involved the police, P.V.T.A. and a Black woman. As we all know, just upon boarding the bus we must not be barefoot carrying food or alcoholic beverages that are unpacked and open, or disturb the peace (whatever that means).

Well here we go again . . . as the Black woman got on the bus, the bus driver asked her to dispense her open food product. She abided by the driver's wishes by closing the product but not putting it away. (Human beings are supposed to have choices, right?) Wrong. The bus driver had to pursue the issue by antagonizing her about open products and its allowance on the bus. He refused to proceed until she disposed of her product all together.

Being the strong willed woman that she is, she refused. Why should she throw away something which is her possession which she paid for? Furthermore there has been many times when a UMass student, specifically a White student who has boarded the 'montgomery bus' with open bottles of liquor or juice who has not been questioned.

Why then would the bus driver call the police? Did he feel threatened by this Black woman? She didn't pull a knife or gun . . . oh yeah, he didn't need visual evidence. After all he probably saw enough on T.V. (the image of the corrupt, dangerous Negro) . . . so it must be the truth. If disturbing the peace means standing up for your rights, then this fascist and racist system in which we all live is regressing quite a bit!

This woman was arrested and escorted by the police off the bus to the "county jail." It seems as though our all-American melting pot has failed us again . . . can you honestly say you are surprised?

Feminism in the Vietnamese 'Tale of Kiev'

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

As part of Asian American Awareness Week, a Vietnamese American woman gave a feminist interpretation last Friday, of the "Tale of Kieu," a 2000 year old Chinese folktale that was adopted by a Vietnamese author, Du Nguyen, about a woman who is forced to become a prostitute and her struggle to get out of it.

Wendy Duong left Vietnam when she was 16 years old. She received her Doctor of Jurisprudence from the University of Houston Law Center when she was 24. Currently, Duong practices law in Washington D.C. Duong has been hailed by Vietnamese community newspapers as Vietnamese woman of the year 2000.

"I practice law for a living but what I am doing today comes from the heart," Duong said. "The tale is the heart of the Vietnamese people. They will use a word and not even realize that it comes from it," said Duong.

Kieu, the main female character of the book is blessed by god with beauty and talent. "She is learned in music, painting and poetry which was a male tradition of being a scholar at the time," Duong said. "There is the 'Doctrine of Fatalism,' that in Kieu's case meant if you were blessed with beauty and talents you're meant to suffer."

Kieu's father is falsely accused of a crime and she sells herself to a traveling merchant so she can use the money to pay off officials to get her father out of prison. The merchant was a pimp in disguise and he turns her over to a brothel. Linh, a student who attended the event said, "Kieu felt compelled to help her father because of the cultural tradition that children are indebted to their parents." Quynh, another student at the event said, "As a woman, Kieu was unable to take any other course such as challenging the laws so she was forced to sell her body."

Duong said, the author of the book had rewritten the conventions of the time because the heroine of the story was a prostitute which was against women's virtues. "Because Kieu fought against prostitution this was evidence of feminism."

Before Kieu entered the brothel she secretly exchanged nuptial vows with a man that she was in love with. "It is very unusual for a woman to pick her husband. Marriages then were arranged by the parents," said Quynh. Duong said, "This was a revolutionary act."

In her struggle to get out of the brothel, Kieu, married a man she met there. He was already married and his jealous wife made Kieu into a servant. Quynh said, "The wife was an unusual character because she was a strategist which women usually were not."

Kieu escapes her enslavement and goes into hiding at a Pagoda where she is protected by a Buddhist nun. Eventually Kieu ends up back at the brothel. There she meets a warrior who she marries. The warrior is the leader of a revolutionary faction. The King sends a delegate who showers gifts on the couple to foster peace with the warrior and the faction.

Kieu trustingly persuades her husband to make peace with the Delegate who kills him. Kieu is captured by the King who tries to marry her to a barbarian to humiliate her. She throws herself in a river attempting to kill herself. As she is floating down the river, she has a vision in which a ghost appears and tells her she is struck from the metaphysical list of people who are doomed (the Doctrine of Fatalism). "Kieu was a manager of crisis who challenged the Doctrine of Fatalism which is usually an uncontestable law governing the universe and she succeeded," said Quynh. The Buddhist nun who protected her at the Pagoda pulls her out of the river. The tale ends with her being reunited with her family and her first lover.

"This is one of the few Vietnamese classic pieces of literature that has a lot of strong female characters in it," Linh said. "At the time women were very passive and Kieu was the opposite of that because she tried to take control of her life."

Duong defined her own feminism as women having recognition legally and socially. "Feminism for me is allowing women to develop to their fullest while still retaining what makes them women, like Kieu," she said. "The problem with today's feminism is that a lot of women in the corporate sphere dress to emulate men so they can succeed."

HALLOWEEN SAFETY TIPS

1. Never Trick-or-Treat alone. Go with a friend or in a group, and bring along an adult.
2. Never wear masks that block your view. Decorate your costume with reflective tape.
3. Never talk to strangers. Tell your parents about anyone who is bothering you!
4. Wait until you get home before eating your treats. Throw out unwrapped candy.

makeup, colored hairsprays, and wigs opposite in color to the natural tint of the buyer's hair.

CVS in downtown Amherst reported "rapid" sales of all Halloween goods ranging from candy to accessories and makeup. A store clerk predicted that with the way "everything flies," nothing will be left by Wednesday.

others participated.

"There were people we didn't even know who would come down, line the dock with their cars with the trunks and doors open," Elzeki said. "As soon as the boats pulled up these people would carry their luggage and take people away just like a taxi service."

All together he estimated that 3000 people were evacuated by boat, from within the razor wire.

"No . . . it isn't a Mohawk crisis, it is a Canadian crisis," he added. "The Mohawk people don't have a problem, the Canadian government is having a problem and will continue to have a tremendous problem until they sit down and negotiate in good faith! Good faith does not mean putting a fg gun to people's heads saying, 'Come on in, sit down, we'll negotiate.'"

About the blocking of the Mercier bridge which serves an estimated 70,000 people per day, Elzeki explained, "We were taking a stand for what we believe in. This is our land, these are our rights, without them we don't have anything."

The Mercier was blocked on July 11 after the police raid on Kanehsatake.

In August when Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulrooney sent 4000 troops to Kahnawake and only 800 to the Middle East, he said he believed the community was lost in thought.

"If 4000 troops were sent into Kahnawake against 2000 or so remaining people what kind of action would it be? An all out war? An armed insurrection?," he said. "You hear stories about wartime atrocities; many things have been happening in North America that no one thought could happen would. Women and children get slaughtered. We didn't know."

Living within the razor wire without fresh food, gasoline, or mail and expecting the Army to raid, some people decided to evacuate.

"[We're] being treated as second class citizens," he said. "In a land that belongs to us. We were never invited to become a part of Canada, we were told by the government that we were Canadian citizens, Quebec citizens.

"As Mohawk people we feel all the land is sacred. All of it is our home and it is our duty to protect . This is not a segment of the Canadian popuklation in revolt, this is the protection of our future children's lives."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21- April 19) A family problem can be solved if you are patient. Discuss financial conditions with your mate or partner. A parent-child conflict requires a calmer approach. Romantic ties intensify.

TAURUS (April 20- May 20) Younger family members require more of your time and patience now. What they say may not be what they mean. Listen carefully and act lovingly. The missing pieces of a puzzle fall into place.

GEMINI (May 21- June 20) You may be asked to submit your ideas on paper. Organize your thoughts in a written outline first, so as not to forget any vital points. Time is your best friend.

CANCER (June 21- July 22) Discuss a business deal with a third party who has no interest in it. You need an unbiased opinion. An indirect approach is likely to bring the best results today. Romance blossoms.

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22) Family obligations may conflict with work priorities. Avoid making any new financial commitments. Heed the advice of a close friend. Now is the ideal time to travel.

VIRGO (Aug. 23- Sept. 22) A domestic misunderstanding could disrupt your plans. Someone's emotional demands on you may increase. A spiritual experience will help you make wise choices. Be true to your beliefs.

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22) Do not try to force an issue. A delay will work in your favor. Realize that you are not always right. A spirit of compromise helps promote domestic harmony.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23- Nov. 21) See things as they are but do not make hasty decisions. A financial situation will improve. A member of the opposite sex may distract you from your work. Postpone romance for a while.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22- Dec. 21) Favorable results are easier to obtain now. Family members will support your ideas. Do not overdo it physically. A member of the opposite sex joins your team. Romance may be in your plan.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22- Jan. 19) Your energy will be at a peak today making work a breeze. However, you could run out of steam by early evening. Bowing out of a social event tonight could be a smart move.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20- Feb. 18) Although your financial responsibility increases, a phone call provides new hope. Friends prove their loyalty in wonderful ways. Keep your tax receipts and checkbook in better order.

PISCES (Feb. 19- March 20) Romance may have to wait while you take care of pressing private affairs. Be willing to give up a little fun in order to get important things done. Return phone calls promptly.

How the NYNEX Student Telephone Directory stacks up against Beowulf Cliffs® Notes.

	Cliffs Notes	NYNEX
Uses the color "yellow" as a device somewhere on or in the book.	☑	☑
Tells you where to reach your professors, who delivers pizza, and how to reach the financial aid office.	☐	☑
Never mentions the words "allegory," "foreshadow," or "heroic code."	☐	☑
Not an embarrassing thing to have fall out of your backpack in, say, English class.	☐	☑
Doesn't analyze Hrothgar's homilies or Unferth as anti-hero.	☐	☑

Well, there you have it. The NYNEX Student Telephone Directory has the kinds of information students want. And none of the stuff you don't. Besides which, it's free. So be sure to look for your copy on campus.

Women's x-c finishes third.

By DAN WETZEL

The University of Massachusetts women's cross country team may have fallen short of its pre-meet goal to beat Connecticut, but head coach Julie LaFreniere said she was "pleased with the team's performance."

On Saturday, UMass finished fourth out of 29 teams in the New England Championships with 154 points, behind Providence (29), Boston College (89) and UConn (110). Geraldine Hendricken of Providence won the meet, taking one second off the course record.

UMass was lead by Kelly Liljeblad and Becky Johnson who came in 19th and 20th, respectively. Both runners finished in 18:55.

"Kelly and Becky did a terrific job," said LaFreniere. "Kelly had the flu for five days previous to the race and she gave everything she had during the meet. This was Becky's best race of the year. I could not have asked for a better effort out of either of them."

In the last half mile of the race Liljeblad and Johnson were able to pass two UConn runners, one in the last hundred yards.

"Their intensity at the end was tremendous," LaFreniere said.

Dana Goldfarb (33rd) and Michelle St. Laurent (40th) both ran very well for UMass finishing in 19:11 and 19:19, respectively.

"This was both Dana's and Michelle's finest performance of the year," LaFreniere said. "Michelle was hoping to finish under 20 minutes, so she took a minute off her time."

Cathy Crocker rounded out the UMass top five, finishing 49th in a time of 19:37. Other UMass finishers were Kathy Holt in 61st and Mo Meidrim in 64th. LaFreniere said she is hoping to see them run better.

"They are all capable of running with Dana and Michelle," said LaFreniere. "The course is the most difficult in the area and that slowed them down, but they all put in a great effort."

As for the pre-meet hopes of defeating Connecticut, LaFreniere conceded that UConn was the superior team.

"Our team ran with so much effort and excitement it may have hurt us," she said. "We went out a little too quick and may have been a little tired, but at the end, no one was passing us, we were doing the passing. Even with the effort we put in, there was no way we were going to beat UConn."

UMass will compete in the ECACs at Connecticut Nov. 10.

Patriots Notebook

Buffalo's Seals sacked Grogan cleanly

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — When Buffalo Bills defensive end Leon Seals broke into the New England Patriots backfield, he intended to sack quarterback Steve Grogan but not slam him.

The Bills learned before Sunday's game that Grogan had signed a document acknowledging a neurosurgeon's advice not to play football anymore because of a spinal problem. Seals for one took mercy and "low-keyed it a lot."

Seals is 6-foot-5 and 267 pounds, Grogan 6-4 and 210.

"I'm just going to be honest about it," Seals said. "I wasn't going in there for the kill."

The Patriots forced Grogan to sign the acknowledgement to give them legal protection should he suffer serious injury. Grogan, in his 16th NFL season, said four other doctors told him he faced no greater risk than any other player.

"This is a business," Grogan said. "We compromised on the language so that everybody was comfortable with it."

Seals said several Bills defenders talked about Grogan's frail state before the game. "Everybody said, 'I just hope I'm not the one to go in and hit him and have him stay down. If I ever get a sack, I hope he gets back up.'"

The Bills sacked Grogan three times, once by Seals.

On the second-quarter play, Seals circled the Patriots' protective pocket and broke in on Grogan just as the quarterback looked up. Seals simply wrapped his arms around Grogan and tackled him.

"I went back there and got him, but I wasn't saying, "I'm going to kill you" and that kind of stuff," Seals said. "It's a touchy situation, because as a defensive lineman, you're taught to go in there and rip a person's head off.

"But in a situation like that, you have to kind of low-key it. You have to have respect for a guy like that."

Seals said any player lives with the possibility that he could cause permanent injury to another player.

"With any kind of hit, the guy could go down for good," he said. "And for you to deliver that hit, it's going to be something you're going to live with the rest of your life."

Bills coach Marv Levy said the game film showed that Seals "played very hard." In fact, the team awarded Seals a game ball for his efforts.

But Levy said Seals "was aware that there was some type of medical concern and he certainly would have felt badly if he'd been responsible for injuring" Grogan.

The Bills "have respect for Grogan," Levy said. "He's accomplished a great deal. They have respect for his courage and I think they were reflecting that in their words."

Several other Bills defenders, though, said they didn't treat Grogan any differently.

Linebacker Darryl Talley said he "never even thought twice about it."

Volleyball set for Penn State

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

Despite coming off a tough weekend, the University of Massachusetts volleyball team is still hanging tough. Tonight the Minutewomen (4-21) travel to New Haven, Conn. to face the Yale Elis (18-7).

"Yale is a real good team," said coach Carol Ford. "This is the second time we're going to face each other so we all know what we're up against."

The first time the two teams met, Yale was the victor (15-0, 15-5, 15-7).

Ford has said she watched her team improve a lot this season in the areas of serving, service reception and team defense. Approaching tonight's game, Ford said she is going to concentrate on another aspect.

"The key to tonight's game is putting the ball away offensively," she said. "If we do a good job at that, then we'll have a good game."

The Elis are also looking to chomp their way through the match. They are led offensively by sophomore Krissy Klisezewski, who has been back only two weeks since breaking her foot. In that short span of time, she has managed to rack up a whopping 109 kills. Freshmen Katie Roy and Pauline Mu each have equally impressive stats of 260 and 253 kills, respectively.

Struggle of racism continues for rights activist

Civil Rights activist James Farmer

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Racism is seen as strongly in today's world as in the past, and college students must hear the call to fight for a color-blind nation, said the founder of the Congress of Racial Equality last night.

James Farmer, who became known as one of the "Big Four" of the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s, spoke about the history of the fight for racial equality in the United States in the Campus Center auditorium to about 300 people.

"Students are waiting for a program," said Farmer. "We cannot formulate a program until we understand today. We can't understand today until we remember the past."

Farmer said CORE, founded in 1942, was primarily made up of college students who believed non-violent direct action was the correct approach to achieving civil equality.

Freedom rides, restaurant sit-ins, and the words and actions of Martin Luther King, Jr. of the 60s, said Farmer, made non-violence a household word.

"On the freedom rides, we rode that bus together, Black and White, and together we sang 'We Shall Overcome,'" he said.

Farmer said college students are not apathetic. "They came when we called them to help with voter registration, and they helped when we protested apartheid in South Africa," he said.

For the 30th anniversary of the freedom rides, said Farmer, there will be a new program centered around children, promoting saving children from social problems and working for racial harmony throughout the United States.

"We must save those children who are doing drugs, children born of children and children giving birth to children," said Farmer. "The problems facing the Black youth of today is not what we battled and died for [in the 60s]."

Farmer said Bush's veto of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 stems from the long history of the Affirmative Action program, and specifically the usage of the word "quota."

When Affirmative Action was implemented, said Farmer, it was designed to push minorities into mainstream hiring practices of employers. It was also to help raise the average median income of blacks, which was 60 percent of that of Whites.

Farmer said Affirmative Action stated that employers had to employ a certain number of qualified minorities.

But Bush turned that around, said Farmer, using the term "quota" as something negative. The purpose of a quota in the Civil Rights Act of 1990 is positive, and the quota, "has the tactic to achieve the principle."

"If I didn't love America," said Farmer, "I would have left a long time ago, and gone to live in a dictatorship, where I'd take my oppression purely, and not in the form of hypocrisy."

Third World Caucus addresses oppression

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

The Third World Caucus held a meeting last night to discuss issues of historically oppressed peoples, how they affect students on campus, and what the TWC does to address them.

The meeting was organized to illustrate how "the TWC is a political option for students to address and solve problems that they witness on campus," said TWC External Coordinator Dan Cohen.

The movie RACISM 101, a television news program centered on the rise of racially motivated incidents on college campuses, was shown. The film focused on the 1986 UMass post-World Series brawl, and recent incidents of racial harassment at the University of Michigan, University of North Carolina, University of Pennsylvania, Dartmouth University, Smith College, Hampshire College, Pennsylvania State University, as well as the student movements which reacted to these incidents. An informal discussion followed.

The Third World Caucus has meetings every Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. The caucus representation "includes but is not limited to Afro-American, Latino, Asian, Native American, Jewish, Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual students," said Cohen.

All students are welcome "to come discuss campus issues," said member Chi Amadi.

"There are points of common ground that all historically oppressed people can come together to address. The TWC is an organization that can effectively accomplish this goal," said Orna Sonnenschein, president of Hillel.

The caucus has been a Registered Student Organization since the late 1970s. It is also part of the Student Government Association, and has representation on the Board of Governors. The TWC office is located in Student Union 404.

If you would like to bring issues to the attention of TWC, or get information on how you can get involved with the organization, call Chi Amadi at 546-1883, or Dan Cohen at 546-0312.

Consultants the victims of question 2

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Ballot question two, if passed by voters on Nov. 6, would attempt to eliminate wasteful legislative spending by placing restrictions on how the state government uses and funds consultants, according to the sponsors of the referendum.

Opponents of question two interpret the definition of "consultant" used in the petition as having an adverse impact on human services care providers and on graduate student employees and part-time faculty at public universities and colleges.

If the referendum question passes, the following restrictions will apply to legislative use of consultants:

- Limit the amount the state could spend on an individual consultant's salary to $100,000 and require all other contracts

Peggy Churchill carefully folds the last piece of aluminum foil over the corners of an oversized pan of Mexican burritos. She has just finished preparing almost a dozen pans of this popular dish, moving on to the next entree with efficiency.

As "Head Cook II" for the dinner shift this week at Franklin Dining Commons, Churchill, along with a head chef and four assistant cooks, is responsible for preparing meals for an average of 2,000 students per week.

Churchill has worked for the University of Massachusetts Food Service program for six years, and alternates shifts among the Southwest, Central, and Northeast Dining Commons each week. She said she sees herself continuing to work as a University employee in the future because she enjoys the collegiate atmosphere.

Her main incentive, however, is for her two teenage children to have an opportunity to attend UMass with tuition remission once they reach college age.

"I am lucky because my husband works too, but we still would not be able to send our children to college without the benefits of my job," she said.

She said her husband is employed by a trucking company in South Deerfield.

As a unionized state worker, she admits she is concerned about the impact of budget cuts on her job. Last week, Union 1776 voted against taking furloughs, which would require food service employees to work for an allotted period of time each semester, such as a week, without pay.

Jane Letendre said she has a more visible position in the dining commons, because she serves the food that people such as Churchill prepare. Commonly referred to as a "DC lady," Letendre says she does not mind this seemingly derogatory phrase. Her correct title, however, is "Dietary Worker I."

After three years of working the front line position for lunch and dinner shifts, she has maintained considerable enthusiasm about her job.

"Most of the students are nice," she said. "They tell me where they're from and make small talk."

She said her least favorite part of her job is listening to complaints about portions being too small and service being too slow. She urged students to have patience when pans are being changed. As for portion size, all servings are predetermined by a professional dietitian, thus inconsistencies should be minimal, she said.

Letendre said she has not seen any major changes in dining common procedures during the past few years. She said the students' favorite meals have remained the same each year. They prefer "anything with tomato sauce, such as spaghetti and veal parmesan," she said. They tend to dislike "unusual" food combinations, such as "shish kebobs made with lamb."

When asked if she had any words of wisdom to students who perpetually complain about the quality of the food she serves, she stated matter-of-factly, "There is always the salad bar."

Students at Smith continue protest

Students seeking increased space for multicultural center

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
and CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Some 60 students are still occupying an administrative office at Smith College since they entered the building Friday to seek increased space for a multicultural center.

According to Smith spokesperson Debra Bradley, the administration is exhausting every alternative possible to meet the demands of the protestors.

She said activities of the office have not been interrupted by the protestors. They have sought the entire use of Lilly Hall, which is used by several groups as a cultural center and also for several other departments.

Bradley said the protestors' demand for use of the entire building is "not acceptable.

"We would like to find space for the cultural centers," she said. Students were originally planning to end the sit-in Monday, but resumed the protest after negotiations with administrators "showed no results." Students marched around the campus Monday, stopping at the home of the college's president.

The students said they want the college's School of Social Work and its Graduate Office moved from Lilly Hall so that space allocated for the Mwangi Cultural Center can be expanded.

Currently about 17 percent of the 2,600 students are non-White, school officials said.

The expansion would provide space in the building for the Asian Student Association, EKTA for South Asian Students, the African Students Association, and the International Students' Organization.

Two organizations currently have space in the building: the Black Students Alliance and Nosotras, an organization for Latinos.

According to Vivian Chaing, a Smith College Student, the administration has not made any definite statement about increasing space for the center.

"They have told us they will give us more space, but haven't put anything in writing that they can be held to," she said.

In a meeting with protesters Sunday, Smith College President Mary Maples Dunn praised students for their "forceful, yet respectful conduct" throughout the sit-in.

The protesters, who have called themselves the Unity Coalition, said they will continue the sit-in indefinitely.

GSS condemns administration's advertisement

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Correspondent

The Graduate Student Senate, in a 26 to six vote, passed a motion last night condemning the administration's advertisement in yesterday's Collegian and its distribution of a four-page letter to graduate students urging them to vote against unionization.

"The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate condemn the Chancellor, Provost and Deans for producing and distributing the letter and placing the advertisement," said the motion put forward by Polymer Science and Engineering Senator Bert Reekmans.

The motion also said, "The letter and advertisement distort the issues concerning graduate employment and the Graduate Employees' unionization efforts, and the distribution of the letter and the placement of the advertisement during the balloting period breaks the Administration's written agreement with GEO (Graduate Employees Organization) 'to conduct themselves in a manner which is conductive to free and open discussion on the issues', making it a grave intrusion on Graduate Employees' right of self determination."

"We demand," concluded the motion, "that the Administration cease using public funds for anti-union activities," referring to the money used to place the advertisement and to pay lawyers' fees for the letter and the advertisement.

Thomas Niederkorn, senator from Chemical Engineering, did not vote for the motion.

"I feel the administration has every right to view their position on a campus issue that's so important right now," said Niederkorn. "They have no recourse than to use public money to make their position known."

GSS President Pierre Laliberte said he was happy the motion passed.

Sociology Senator Roger Long was also in favor of the motion.

Talking about the advertisement and the letter Long said, "I think this is blatent anti-union propaganda. I also think that the timing is really dirty and I am really strongly in favor of the motion."

Also during the meeting, the GSS unanimously passed a motion stating that it will stand by the fiscal agreement it last May made with the Board of Governors. The motion was made to protest the BOG's efforts to change articles IX and X of its constitution to deprive the GSS of some of its reviewing power

Forum discusses issue of homosexuality and religion

By SEAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Initiating Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Awareness Days at the University of Massachusetts, a forum met yesterday to discuss homosexuality and religion.

Titled "Once a Sin, Now What? — Changing Religious Perspectives on Homosexuality," the event was co-sponsored by the Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns and the Faculty/Staff Group for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns. The panel, consisting of local clergypeople, offered numerous perspectives on the issue.

Reverend Victoria Safford of the Unitarian Society of Northampton and Florence, the first speaker, discussed her denomination's historical acceptance of gays, lesbians, and bisexuals. Not only do Unitarians value the Bible, she stated, but also individual worth.

She explained the group's practice of "speak[ing] out very publicly on the rights of gays, lesbians, and bisexuals." As a component of this philosophy of inclusiveness, announcements, boycotts against discriminatory corporations, and diversity education programs have all been pursued.

Reverend Carlos W. Anderson of the Hope Community Church of Amherst concentrated on his own experiences with various churches. He recounted witnessing closeted gay clergypeople issuing "fiery sermons" against homosexuality.

Rabbi Sheila Weinberg of the Jewish Community of Amherst explained that it would be to comprehensively present Judaism's views toward homosexuality, and instead, detailed Biblical allusions to homosexuality and their many possible interpretations. She stressed the importance for Jews, as a historically oppressed group, to support others considered "different."

The last speaker, Reverend John Stendahl of the Immanuel Lutheran Church in Amherst, did not consider sexual orientation a moral issue at all. "However, there are issues of how we treat each other," he stated, and then explained the sinful nature of gay bashing and other actions.

One audience member, Owen Broadhurst, said, "For quite some time, I have been questioning my status in the Catholic Church as a bisexual ... I appreciated that this came just at the right time for me."

Felice Yeskel, coordinator of PGLBC, summed up the event:

"It's the first time at UMass we've brought together a variety of clergypeople to address one of the most potent stigmas against lesbians, gays, and bisexuals."

Easthampton state representative speaks out against question three

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

Incumbent Democratic candidate for state representative Shannon O'Brien opposes the tax roll back question because she said she thinks the cuts would be made in the wrong places.

"Smart cuts, not dumb cuts are what this state needs. Better prenatal care, family planning, at-home elderly care, and education are longterm goals that should not be cut," said O'Brien, an attorney who is running in the second Hampden District.

O'Brien, a resident of Easthampton, who is running against Republican Stephen Ericson, said she opposes the Citizen for Limited Taxation petition because it does not take into account those who need help.

"CLT was proposed by individuals who don't care about UMass students, the elderly, and other people who need assistance," she said.

O'Brien said she feels that longterm programs such as education should not be cut higher than $25,000 to be selected through competitive bidding.

● Limit the length of consultant contracts to two years with a possible extension of only one year.

● Prohibit state consultants from supervising or being substituted for state employee positions.

The Massachusetts Organization of State Engineers and Scientists, who drafted the petition, have estimated that 65 to 75 percent of all state contracts with consultants contain wasteful spending, according to Brian Greeley, the administrative assistant to the president of MOSES.

Greeley said if question two passes, state spending on consultants would be reduced by $150 to $200 million and two-thirds of all consultants would be eliminated. He said the referendum is identical to an amendment to a deficit reduction bill passed by the legislature in the 1990 budget session but vetoed by Gov. Dukakis.

Dukakis abused the consultant system himself this year when he hired his former economic advisor on a $120,000 contract to study how cities and towns should fund the MBTA system, Greeley said.

"There is no accountability in the whole system of hiring consultants that encourages patronage and cronyism, like the incestuous nature of Dukakis hiring his former advisor," he said.

Greeley said since the legislature did not target human services care providers, part-time faculty and teaching assistants when passing the bill, there is no reason to believe that the legislature would enact the referendum differently this year.

He said part-time faculty and teaching assistants would not be considered consultants by definition because they are in-state employees who work directly for the state.

The campus legal counsel for the University of Massachusetts has examined the petition and determined that graduate students and part-time faculty would not be affected since they are considered "special employees" and not consultants, said Sharon Kennaugh, the director of state relations at UMass.

For this fiscal budget year, the legislature and the Executive Office changed how graduate students' contracts are funded by removing the graduate employee accounts from the state 03 account for consultant expenditures to a secondary offside account , said Rep. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst).

He said because the petition was "broadly written," the contracts of graduate employees could be interpreted as consultant contracts since their contracts were in the consultant state account when the petition was being drafted.

The "Vote No On 2" Coalition, composed of various agencies and organizations, said question two will affect part-time faculty and graduate students because the stated definition of consultant in the petition is "all-encompassing," said Ellen Rooney, the spokesperson for the coalition.

The petition defines "consultant" as "any person who is a non-employee of the Commonwealth or an authority who gives advice or services regarding matters in the field of his/her knowledge," she said.

She said the language of this definition also includes teachers, human services care providers to the mentally retarded, and visiting nurses.

Roseanne Bacon, the president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, said recent budget cuts have caused public universities and colleges to replace full-time faculty with part-time teachers who would be terminated if question two passes.

"Question two would eliminate thousands of part-time teachers and faculty at the state's public colleges and universities," Bacon said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer. Columnists and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Vote 'None of the Above'

What if, on Election Day, you not only had the choice of voting for either John Silber or William Weld, but also had the option of rejecting both candidates, by voting "None of the Above," and thereby calling for a new election with all new candidates, what would you do?

Dennis Kelly

For starters, you might force the candidates to disengage from their negative, mudslinging campaigns and address the issues. Most likely, debates would be focused on the environment, education, health care, homelessness and other issues, and not on the other candidate's mother.

Moreover, you might be able to unseat longtime Congressional incumbents, who have become so entrenched by "special interest" money that nobody can afford to run against them.

And perhaps you would be able to induce your representatives in the state legislature and in Congress to reform election laws that afforded them reelection rates of 97 and 98 percent, respectively, in the 1988 elections, despite widespread voter dissatisfaction.

With a "None of the Above" option on all ballots, perhaps our politicians would find the strength to break their addiction to private campaign contributions (the crack of American politics), and begin to work for meaningful campaign-finance reform.

And perhaps the two major parties would begin to open up the democratic process, by removing the barriers that make the emergence of a challenging party virtually impossible.

And just maybe our elected representatives would spend more energy, and money, toward meeting the needs of their constituents at home, and less pursuing economic, military and ideological interests across the globe.

We Americans hold an unshakeable belief in the freedom of choice. "None of the above" is a choice that voters ought to have. With this in mind, voters in six towns — Amherst, Northampton, Leverett, Shutesbury, Wendell and Pelham — are being urged to cast "None of the Above" votes for every race in which there is no one running for whom they want to vote.

To make it easier, the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign, which is sponsoring the drive, is distributing "None of the Above" stickers for voters to affix to their ballots in the place for write-ins.

Its members will be distributing leaflets and stickers on campus on Wednesday and Thursday from 11:00 to 2:00, in downtown areas and shopping centers on Saturday morning, and at polling places on Election Day.

This local plea for a better democracy has already received national attention, appearing in the New York Times, Boston Globe, The Nation and over National Public Radio, as well as other media sources (and is presently spreading throughout the state).

It is possible that on Election Day the whole country will be tuning into the Pioneer Valley to see if the voters here are satisfied with "politics as usual."

Are you?

"...NO, PASTRAMI ON RYE... NO, TUNA ON WHOLE WHEAT.. NO, CORN BEEF ON WHITE. NO."

A real-life Punch-'n-Judy

"To love, honor and cherish, 'til death do you part."

Isn't that how the line goes? Pity, more people don't remember that. There is nothing in marriage vows that includes "to beat, threaten, torture and kill."

I thought I'd just remind all of you, since most of us will get married someday and some of us are following the last vow to the letter, even if we are not married to the person we are beating, threatening, torturing or killing.

Pamela McCarthy

Welcome to the fun of the great American pastime. Yes, you too can risk your life, depending on whom you marry or date. And if you expect any help at all, forget it. The police, the courts and the people all wholeheartedly believe it is a husband's right to beat his wife, or a boyfriend's right to assault his girlfriend. Somehow, it isn't a real crime if he knows her.

Over the summer my hometown newspaper ran a story about a man who pleaded guilty to breaking a restraining order, beating up his ex-girlfriend and threatening to kill her. He got a suspended sentence. Really. How dare we think for one second that his girlfriend deserved some consideration for her safety. Why, of course he wouldn't even so much as call her a nasty name ever again. I'm sure she's sleeping soundly at night, knowing the courts are so intent on prosecuting violent criminals.

Oh, yeah, that's another thing. This is a crime. You know something? That's against the law. The last time I checked, assault and battery was against the law. I don't recall there being a clause that says "except for wives and girlfriends."

One of the most common (and stupid) arguments I constantly hear is: "Well, you know some women love that stuff." I'd love to meet the mental giant who thought that one up. Right, buddy. We love getting our eyes blackened, our bones broken and our organs mangled. Waking up in a hospital bed just makes my day, let me tell you. Women don't "love that stuff." Many times, the women who are caught in a mess like that came from an abusive home themselves. When you are abused, or see your mother get abused by your father, it doesn't seem like such an abnormal thing.

Of course, whenever a woman wants to do anything about it, she gets never-ending grief. Her relatives can't understand what she's whining about (remember, this is normal in many families). The cops just see it as domestic violence, which isn't violence at all in their eyes. The poor guy probably had a rough day. It's his right to knock his wife around a bit. It's just a fight, after all. Besides, those women "love that stuff."

Here's another gem: "Well, if she hates what's happening so much, why doesn't she just leave?"

Come on. Focus on the real world, people. Do you honestly think that a man who uses his wife or girlfriend as a punching bag will be a good sport when she leaves? Do you honestly think that he's going to leave her alone? When a woman leaves an abusive man, it can be just like she never left at all. Nothing changes, except maybe she gets harassed at work, her relatives and friends get harassed and she gets stalked by her ex. Remember the good ol' days, when we thought we were just supposed to be afraid of strangers?

When Carol Stuart was murdered in 1989, I had a feeling it wasn't Willie Bennett who did it. Just by looking at the statistics, I figured old Chuckie did it. And that's sad. I'd rather that it was a stranger, that we could be safe with those we are supposed to be so close to.

"To love, honor and cherish." Right.

Cow-tipping western Mass.

As I read Meredith O'Brien's column, ("Cows, country mice, Bambi and Western Mass.," Oct. 22), I thought, "What is her point?" Was she trying to defend Western Mass.? If so, her effort was tantamount to Jesse Helms speaking on behalf of the NAACP.

She claims to be a resident of Western Mass., yet describes it as "a desolate cow land." Has she ventured south of Amherst, to pastures such as Holyoke, Chicopee or West Springfield, where evidence of cows are found in quart-sized cartons?

I realize these are suburbs of Springfield which, in spite of Ms. O'Brien's view, do have all the facets of a city: slums, fancy parks, colleges, ethnic neighborhoods, a civic center, a professional sports franchise, etc. Only a New Yorker could scoff at the definition of Springfield as a city. In fact, if she were to venture a 20-mile radius of Boston, she would find that the towns of the East look very similar to those of the West. One might think it was the same state, even.

Finally, she goes on to characterize the resignation of Western Mass. residents as that of a country mouse. Why? Because we are not insecure about our region and don't tout any imagined superiority? We have not "grown accustomed to this typical condescension," we simply ignore it. Western Mass. residents are indeed "civilized" but far from "simple." Perhaps Ms. O'Brien is confusing us with those from Western Pennsylvania.

Looking behind the issues and seeing flesh and blood

"I don't give a shit about your principles!"

I was sitting in a pub, reading, when the conversation got loud enough to hear. Apparently, the news was on and several patrons took the liberty of giving their opinions on the Middle East crisis. A beer-lubricated argument followed.

Soon the field was reduced to two: A guy in his late twenties, dressed as an up-and-coming type, and an older guy, a construction worker, I'd guess. The younger guy was extolling his support of the military build up in Saudi Arabia.

"Saddam is going to push us and push us until we invade. Our boys will have to go into Kuwait and should go into Iraq for that matter."

The older guy was sort of shocked. "Do you have any idea what you're saying?" he asked. "You talk about what's right and wrong like this was a game show. The last god damn thing anyone needs is a war, for Christ's sake."

The younger guy tried to hold his ground, "No one likes war but we got to do what we got to do."

"Listen to me, mother-fucker, the last time I heard shit like that, I ended up in Vietnam, 18 years old, as ass-backwards as you are now."

He was pretty pissed. "You sit there and talk about what's right, drinking your beer ready to send thousands of kids to die. You were what five or six when Vietnam ended. You don't even remember what the TV coverage looked like. Have you ever seen a picture of someone ripped in half by shell fragments? Ya know what burning skin smells like?" The younger guy looked pretty sheepish.

Folks had started to move closer so I grabbed my beer and took a stool next to the older guy. When I sat down, he looked at me, "Ready to go to war, kid?" I told him I'd rather not. "You're damn right you'd rather not!"

Jeremy P. Levinson

"What's with you kids? We're five fuckin' inches from war and what are you guys doin' about it? Ah, most of you probably won't notice until you're ankle-deep in your own blood."

I told him that the discussion about the war was picking up but that no one seemed to be changing their lives over it.

"Figures. Same thing that happened last time. No one wants to deal with it until it's too late." Now, he seemed more sad or thoughtful than pissed. Conversation gradually shifted to something else.

As I was leaving, the guy followed me outside. "Kid," said he, "No fuckin' around. I made a mistake 25 years ago, I didn't do anything when the government decided to go to war. When I came back I was too fucked up from watching people torn apart to do anything about it. Do something, no one needs to go through that again."

I think he was crying, but I'm not sure.

The most unsettling thing he said was that he had seen this all before and he new what was coming. Have we really not learned anything? Does it only take 20 years for us to forget what a charred and twisted 18-year-old corpse looks like?

Don't make the same mistakes, he said. The anti-war movement didn't get in gear until after the bodies started coming back. I would hope that this time, learning from our mothers and fathers, we can stop this before that point.

Since that night, the various arguments about the Middle East crisis have lost value for me. I am no longer concerned about the 'issues.' This guy reminded me that issues tend to overshadow the people whose lives we so easily discuss. The possibility of war is not a political issue for me. It's an anti-human tragedy waiting to happen. We have got no choice but to stop it.

Folks who are determined to put this madness to an end are coming together. They'll be meeting tomorrow, at 5:30 in the Commuter Area lounge by the Hatch.

Let's not make the same mistakes again. The last time, it took 60,000 American and hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese young lives to realize our mistake. Let's not forget.

Tax revenue to fall short

Previously uncut groups expected to suffer

BOSTON (AP) — Predicting more gloom for the Massachusetts economy, the governor's Revenue Advisory Board said Tuesday the state government's money crunch is worse than estimated.

The board projected state tax collections for fiscal year 1991 will fall approximately $238 million below the most recent estimates from the state Department of Revenue.

Responding to this projection, House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Voke, (D-Chelsea), said he expects the legislature will order reductions in areas that have avoided cuts because they are outside the governor's control.

"The days of people saying, 'I'm not going to take this cut' are over," Voke said.

The revised advisory board figure puts state tax collections at $9.04 billion for the year ending June 30.

That projection would be only about $200 million higher than tax collections from 1989, despite a $1.1 billion tax increase signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in July.

"We are still on the downward slide," said Revenue Advisory Board Chairman James Bailey, referring to the eroding tax base. For fiscal year 1992, when the tax increase would take full effect, the advisory board projected tax collections reaching $9.27 billion, more than $500 million below the Department of Revenue estimates.

The state's tax collections repeatedly have fallen below projections as Massachusetts sinks further into recession. But James Wooster, a Department of Revenue analyst, said it was "highly likely" the October figures due on Thursday will exceed previous estimates by as much as $20 million.

In light of that development, L. Edward Lashman, the state secretary of administration and finance, said "this is not the time to revise our estimate nor to make further cuts."

Still, Lashman called the advisory board estimate "troubling and it warrants serious consideration."

Advisory board members cautioned that their estimates could become moot if voters approve a tax rollback petition next Tuesday. Yet even if the petition fails, both Republican gubernatorial nominee William Weld and Democratic opponent John Silber have pledged to repeal part of the new tax law that extends the sales tax to services, Bailey said.

Bailey stressed that the governor's office is not bound by Tuesday's estimate and can make its own projections based on the board's figures and those of the Department of Revenue.

because they are beneficial to the state's future. She said education keeps people off the streets and away from crime which will reduce the number of people in jails, thus saving the state money in the long run.

O'Brien admits that changes need to take place in Massachusetts, but said CLT is not the answer because it is not looking at the right issues.

"Health care issues make up almost 20 percent of our budget, yet they are being cut," she said.

"I feel providing affordable health to businesses, municipalities, and the elderly is an important issue to Massachusetts citizens."

O'Brien, who said she will be "voting on the Democratic ticket," calls herself "conservatively pro-choice".

"I feel abortion is okay in the first trimester, and maybe in the second, but I am opposed to it in the third trimester," O'Brien said.

'AALARM' sounded

CAMBRIDGE, Mass (AP) — Two symbols, one old, one new, have prompted an emotional debate between gay activists and student conservatives at Harvard University.

Gays who adopted as a badge of honor the pink triangle homosexual men were forced to wear in Nazi Germany were angered by a group espousing traditional values that covered the campus in blue squares.

Last week, members of the Association Against Learning in the Absence of Religion and Morality (AALARM), a student group formed last spring, chalked blue squares on sidewalks in Harvard Yard and around major campus buildings.

Posters plastered to kiosks and dormitories Thursday and Friday said the blue squares represent "faith, family, country and community."

Other posters showed a picture of a child with the caption, "Women love men, men love women, we're used to it, aren't you glad?"

But the blue square campaign appeared on the eve of the Fourth Annual Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Studies Conference at Harvard, which organizers said drew about 1,500 people over the weekend.

Gay activists said the blue squares were a mockery of the pink triangles, emotionally-charged symbols laden with deep historical significance.

"We see it both as an attack on gays and on this symbol," said Sheila Allen, a leader of the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Students Association. "It's a symbol with an incredible amount of emotional impact."

AALARM leader Adam Webb said he formed the group because he felt conservative views were being squelched at Harvard.

Twister's trick or treat

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

If the Halloween scene leaves a dry taste in your mouth and you've decided it's not worth dressing up to go to some party where you'll be one of several Bart Simpsons or Audrey Hornes or the usual condom or ghost, check out Twister's tonight with a cast of thousands: it's worth a venture out into the cold.

Victor of Pearl Street's Battle of the Bands, Who's Kiddin' Who, with their danceable world and ska music, are sure to please listeners at Twister's first annual Halloween bash.

Also a sure-fire crowd tantalizer are the give-aways slated for the evening, according to Mark Forsyth, club owner.

"We're getting ready with about 50 CDs as door-prizes and runners-up prizes in the costume contest. The first place winner of which," Forsyth said, "is awarded $100."

The night is being sponsored by WRSI 95.3 FM and Miller Genuine Dry. In the planning stages for about three weeks, Jim Olsen, program director at WRSI, said it's a Halloween evening offering not to be missed.

"We work with Twister's and they support us too; Who's Kiddin' Who is probably one of the best bands in the area; we'll be giving away tee-shirts and certificates for area hot tub places. It'll be a great night."

In the words of a successful statement, it's treat or treat tomorrow night at Twister's.

The bash is for those 21-and-over. Festivities get under way at 8:30 p.m. Price of admission is $2-$4.

Bop (harvey) punctuates a ridiculously good night

By TEDRIC EISEMAN

BOP (harvey)
Pearl Street
Thursday, Oct. 22

As the name suggests, BOP (harvey) is good and ridiculous. I had heard that they were something to see, and this was confirmed the moment their seven foot lead singer took the stage wearing a demon mask with his dread locks poking out on top like mammoth fronds of asparagus.

Review

The tunes were bouncy with blaring sax and trumpet punctuation. Choreography bordering on aerobics bedazzled. Rock steady beat, silly lyrics, biblical references, philosophical interludes, and the ability to stop on a dime earned my respect.

This high energy septet comes from Providence, R.I., though their music shows definite influence of islands more tropical. The same is true for their opening band, the Ululators, who come from the isle of Martha's Vineyard.

I've never seen the Ululators so far inland before, and they didn't seem to used to the idea themselves. In their element, these guys are really fantastic. I can remember many a night at the Chilmark Community Center where they'd induce quite a frenzy, but at Pearl Street they seemed a little unenthusiastic. They are great musicians and continue to try to play as many instruments as possible. They swap trombones and steel drums to take turns singing.

Both bands have albums out, the Ululators on U-Who records, and BOP (harvey) on the Relativity label. Healthy attitudes and good dancing, mon.

Noble, absurd play

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

Christodoulopoulos's brilliantly devised set in The Memorandum gives us a stark, moody stage: gray, square and suspended with steel threads from the ceiling like a toy platform in a rat maze, partitioned and transparent. Josef Gross (played with perfect Woody Allen humanity by Paul A. Spatarella), is the director of an unnamed organization, who receives a memorandum one morning written in "ptydepe," a new synthetic language for better inter-office communication, and we are launched into a bizarre journey into allegory, satire and downright Saturday Night Live business, as we make the rounds of the memo — and what circles they are!

The obscenely maniacal Geryll Robinson doesn't give an ounce too much as the supremely manipulative Ballas, and his/her mute assistant Pillar (Elissa Lash) is a cross between a cockatiel and a demonic Harpo. Raphael Atlas is a natural as the incomparable linguistics professor Lear, who, along with crack-pupil Karen Brundage as Thumb, provide the most mirthful moments of the evening.

As for the ironic gray costumes that make everyone look like they're in their fathers' suits, and fine supporting roles by Jennifer Hugus and Annie Von Herrmann, I cannot lavish enough praise. Sometimes creepy in its insanity, often hilarious, always mesmerizing, The Memorandum is an absurd, funny, painful insight into the human animal as he trots around the bureaucracy of civilization.

Oral fixation is the central motivation of the characters' activity, with the exception of Josef Gross and Maria, the only two "naturalistic" characters. Everyone is getting limes, eating chocolates, drinking milk, flossing their teeth, sucking on cigars and cigarettes (which are never lit) or clicking their silverware together in eager preparation for "lunch" which is either hideously sexual or downright menacing.

The whirling but precise staging is professional in quality, and the constant comic business mentioned above, reinforces an hysterical, warped perception, though it sometimes goes too far by visually distracting us from the more significant dialogue.

Carrie Bell as the Dorothy-like Maria is a sweetly oppressed secretary at the translation center who falls in love with Josef, and is herself the only other sincere human in the place. She has a painful tendency to over act when she is trying to "show" us how shy she is during Act I, but she comes through for us in the end. The scene in which Maria offers the dejected Josef a box of forbidden cigars, part pitying, part guiltily and then is wrenched away by an order to get more limes before he can even acknowledge her kindness, is the greatest moment of drama I have seen this season.

Vaclav Havel is the revolutionary president of Czechoslovakia, elected less than a year ago during the political upheaval in Eastern Europe. As a dissident playwright, before the Velvet Revolution, his plays were banned from stage and print and he spent several years in prison for advocating, among other things, freedom of expression in theatre. This play, then, is a kind of fierce defense of the human individual worker, lover and artist, against the tendency of modern society to alienate, automate and "turn man into a fetish." The forced introduction of the artificial language is a thinly veiled attack on the whole Communist system as experienced in Eastern Europe, but it would be a mistake to dismiss this as merely a "Cold War" piece, for this is a play about all people trying to exist in the modern world, no less than in the administrative buildings of our own campuses.

The Memorandum, directed by Deborah Lubar will be presented at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre at Smith College November 1st through the 3rd at 8 p.m. Box office: 585-3023/3220

Jello stands strong with Lard as catalyst of new wave

By PAUL DeGEORGES
Collegian Correspondent

The Last Temptation of Reid
Lard
Alternative Tentacles

Q: What's the best thing to happen to music since Led Zeppelin broke up?

A: Lard!

Remember when everyone thought that Asia would be around to haunt us for generations to come? Or what about the rest of those awful late-70s early 80s "Supergroups?" In fact no mention whatsoever of any of those artsy star-studded sedative bands has really come up lately. Which leads one to ponder: Is the term gone forever? Just a nostalgic phrase from the days of Chips, Pop-Wheels and feathered hair?

Well, not if Jello Biafra has his twisted way. The ex-lead singer of the Dead Kennedy's latest creation may in fact be the catalyst for a whole new wave of all-star bands. But with a slightly different, yet entirely new twist . . . a Supergroup that's actually good!

Lard is a collaboration between Jello, music's premier pissed-off politician and the world's most intense industrial band, Ministry. Right on the heels of their sublime live album, Ministry provides their best musical assault yet. This would be just another great Ministry album, but with the lyrical genius of Jello spearheading the attack, the result is nothing short of incredible.

Lard was first heard in 1989, with their Power of Lard EP. Besides providing us with an album cover so wonderfully heinous it could make Perry Farrell blush, Lard gave us an addictive anthem and left us craving for more.

Now, almost a year later we can stuff our bodies full with 57 minutes worth of pure Grade A Lard.

Songs about almost every facet of our warped society make up this 10 song maniacal manifesto. The opening track, "Forkboy," provides an all-out thrash, both musically and ideologically. It attacks a racist catch-22 situation of the the poor in America and those who propagate and profit from it — i.e. the government, according to Jello.

In "Pineapple Face," a song about Manuel Noriega, Biafra mixes his bitterness towards modern politics with a touch of black comedy.

"The place is surrounded/ I can't get away/ Even sent the stealth bomber/ Just to prove it'll fly/ For Yankee teen anguish/ Use Pineapple Face/ As American as where Coca-Cola got its name."

Another song goes off on our post-modern, plastic, hedonist, self-centered consumer society: "Hair by mail/ tit jobs for teens/ searching for rosebud in the fire." A generation of citizens concerned more with appearances than anything else can just "Mate, Spawn, and Die" for all Biafra cares.

"Rug Raid at 4 a.m." sounds like old Black Flag on speed. Though throughout the insanely fast barrage of drums and guitar, a very sane commentary on the "war" on drugs points out the inherent stupidity of the government's whole approach to it.

"Costs over three times more/ to keep an addict in jail/ than to treat those trying to quit/ but no drug war funds for clinics!"

And to prove he's not just trying to bitch, Biafra states clearly his mission: "To dent the comfortably numb/ with constructive satire/ make my life one big prank/ on a society I hate."

The Last Temptation of Reid definitely makes a dent. Not just on your ear drums, but also on your outlook on life. However, there's nothing overtly "offensive" on this album, which allows Lard to bypass any hassle from the Parent's Music Resource Center, while at the same time subversively attacking all that it stands for.

This album is a cathartic masterpiece for anyone fed up with everything. Lard is the new supergroup of the 90s, and if The Last Temptation of Reid is any indication they'll be around to clog our arteries with deliciously appetizing music for as long as the shelf-life of the ice cream at the Dining Commons.

Edie cancels

The Union Program Council has announced that Edie Brickell and New Bohemians and Aztec Camera will not be appearing at the Fine Arts Center on Sunday, Nov. 4, as originally scheduled.

According to Jodi Avery, UPC Talent Coordinator, the bands are unable to make the Nov. 4 date, but a rescheduling of the show is presently in the works.

Schoolhouse Rock

Schoolhouse Rock opened to a sold-out, 650-capacity S.U.B. last night to the delight of the audience and the cast alike. The 21 member cast succeeded in creating a time-warp returning the throngs of listeners back to nine-year-old status.

Tonight is the last performance slated! Tickets are on sale at Tix during normal business hours today and at the door starting at 6:45 p.m.: $3 UMass students and $5 general public.

GOOD LUCK GEO!

The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO/District 65, UAW) has been a positive force on the UMass Amherst campus. While making significant gains for graduate employees, it has simultaneously acted in the best interests of our whole community. We have witnessed GEO's impassioned efforts to defeat Question 3, to save University Child Care, to preserve Everywoman's Center, to help tenants in graduate housing, and to increase funding for public higher education. We have enjoyed working with GEO representatives this past year and wish them good luck in this week's union election.

ONE MILLION OF THE BEST MINDS IN AMERICA HAVE ALREADY CHOSEN THE BEST RETIREMENT PROGRAM.

TIAA-CREF.

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people in the education and research communities. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities.

We currently offer you Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) and are working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan (ORP) in Massachusetts. ORP-type plans are currently offered at public institutions of higher education in 41 of the 50 states.

SOLID PERFORMANCE AND TIMELY INNOVATION

Whether you are just starting your career or you are nearing retirement we can help you prepare for the future. Since 1918, we've been dedicated to making sure that people in education and research can count on a comfortable retirement.

We pioneered the portable pension. We invented the variable annuity. In 1988, we created the CREF Money Market Account to give you more flexibility. And in March of this year, we introduced two new accounts, the CREF Bond Market Account and the CREF Social Choice Account, to let you shape and diversify your retirement investments even further.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe that steady incremental growth over the long term is the best way to build retirement income. This investment philosophy has worked well for over seventy years, and has provided retirement income for hundreds of thousands of people like you.

THE KEYS TO RETIREMENT INVESTING

Security, growth, and diversity are the keys to sound retirement investing: security, so the resources are sure to be there when it's time to retire; growth, so you'll have the income you need for the kind of retirement you want; and diversity to help protect you against volatility and to let you benefit from the strengths of several types of investments.

TIAA AND CREF—A SMART COMBINATION

TIAA's traditional annuity provides maximum safety, guaranteeing your principal and a specified interest rate. It also gives you the opportunity for growth through dividends—which we've declared every year for 41 years. In fact, TIAA's net earned rate has beaten the industry average for every one of those years.[1]

With CREF's variable annuity, you can choose from four different investment accounts, all managed by experts who understand the long-term strategies essential to sound retirement planning.

THE FIRST CHOICE IN EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

The TIAA-CREF retirement system is specifically designed for people in education and research. You may move from one institution to another many times in your career, so your annuities move with you to any of over 4,200 institutions with TIAA-CREF retirement plans. You need financial security, so the system provides retirement income you cannot outlive. Plus, the TIAA-CREF system offers:

Performance: The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.[2]

Responsiveness: Our experienced counselors are ready to answer your questions. Call our toll-free numbers for performance figures or information about your personal annuity accumulations.

Strength: Your future is protected by the largest private retirement system in the world. We have done so well, for so many, for so long, that we currently manage over $80 billion in assets.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Pending residential or financial negotiations can be concluded with great success. Tap previously unavailable sources if an emergency arises. You could be getting the wrong romantic signals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A sudden windfall could expand your sphere of influence. Dreams can come true! Your friendships are lucky for you today. A social evening leads to an exciting session of brainstorming.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Some people want you to play both peacemaker and the Rock of Gibraltar. Be bold when pursuing your career goals; others will respect you more. A lost document will surface under mysterious circumstances.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your words carry great weight today; think carefully before you speak. An old debt will be repaid. Reinvest the money right away. Trust your hunches when it comes to new relationships!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Being too outspoken will land you in hot water. You know what you want and how to go after it. A loved one is your strongest ally. Be more open about seeking business introductions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be careful what you say to VIPs. Travel is linked to an increase in professional prestige. Good luck strikes if you mingle with the masses today. Dressing elegantly will boost your self confidence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Someone influential can provide you with guidance in your secret quest. Others are willing to grant you special favors. Be prepared to reciprocate. Public fanfare suits you fine.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Steer clear of angry people. A possible attitude will help you cope with contrary individuals. Confidential dealings are good for business; a fine time to play your romantic hunches.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Luckily, you can count on close friends or relatives to bail you out of a financial jam. Be careful not to fight the bear too often; there may be friction on the social scene tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A hobby can be turned into a profitable business. Avoid taking others into your confidence. Do some research and planning before reaching out. A platonic relationship could ignite.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Do not neglect your health. Regular medical and dental checkups are essential. Practical career matters require your immediate attention. A strong authority figure plays a major role in your happiness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Someone's words or actions may be misunderstood. Speak up. Do not let a loved one's problems interfere with your productivity during working hours. Be conscientious and very thrifty.

Yale bullies volleyball in New Haven

The UMass women's volleyball team traveled to Yale last night and lost it's match in four games.

Despite the loss, coach Carol Ford was happy with the overall level of play exhibited by the Minutewomen. "It was a really good match," said Ford.

UMass began the match with a horrible first game, losing 2-15. ,"We just couldn't our game going," Ford said.

The Minutewomen, however, bounced back from their first game debacle and played really well in a losing cause (13-15), Ford said.

The team finally pulled one out in the third game, winning 16-14 after blowing a huge lead. Yale closed out the match winning the fourth game 15-6.

Ford praised the play of setter Angie Paolucci as well as the transition and defense games of the team on the whole.

"We played well against them (Yale)," Ford said. "I hope to see them at the Harvard tournament (Friday)."

The Minutewomen are now 4-22.

No. 13 water polo preps for New Englands

By JOE DEGLORIA
Collegian correspondent

The regular season is all wrapped up for the 14-6 University of Massachusetts water polo team, and now it is time for postseason play.

UMass, ranked No. 13 in the country and No. 2 in New England behind Brown, will go to Cambridge this weekend to compete in the New England championships. UMass is the second-seeded team in the tournament, and will receive a bye in the first round.

Saturday UMass plays the winner of the MIT-Harvard game, which UMass coach Russ Yarworth anticipates will be Harvard.

Yarworth called the potential UMass-Harvard match crucial to the success of the entire season.

"In order to ensure an Eastern Championship bid we must be either the No. 1 or No. 2 team in the New England Championship. So the Harvard game is the most important game so far," Yarworth said.

UMass split the season series with Harvard, losing 12-7 and beating them 11-10 on a Alex Yelensky overtime goal. Yarworth said he hopes his healthy team can overtake the Crimson.

"We have got Dan McCosker back (broken thumb) and that is going to help us a lot offensively," Yarworth said. Todd Larsen and Scott Reed are also healthy and will play, according to Yarworth.

The Minutemen, coming off one of the biggest wins in UMass water polo history, a 10-9 defeat of Brown on Oct. 22, scrimmaged Queens College this weekend to stay sharp for the upcoming tournament.

If UMass can make it past Harvard, it will most likely face Brown again in the finals.

If UMass qualifies this weekend, it will go on to the Eastern Championships, from which the top two teams go on to the Nationals.

Leading UMass in scoring is senior Jon Miller, who has thrown in 61 goals for and assisted in 26 other scores. Alex Yelensky has been offensively strong as well with 31 goals, and Brian McIver has 23 scores. Freshman Tangin Engin has scored 17 times in his first year.

G.T. Ladd, who has drawn a team-leading 41 ejections, provides UMass with defensive strength.

Larsen's return is crucial to the team. Considered a top goalie in New England, Larsen has piled up 117 saves against 120 scores. Freshmen goalie Ricky Benitez has done very well when called upon, including in the Brown game, and has saved 56 of 98 shots for a .571 average.

UMass continues climb to top of national, Lambert polls

The University of Massachusetts has the No. 6 ranked football team in Division 1-AA.

UMass coach Jim Reid says he pays no attention to ratings, rankings and such until after the last game of the season. But consider this; with three games remaining, against Richmond, Villanova and New Hampshire, the Minutemen have a good shot at finishing ranked in the top eight in the country, and guaranteeing themselves a home date in the playoffs (Nov. 24).

The Minutemen, undefeated at 6-0-1 and winners of six straight, also moved into the top spot in the Lambert Trophy poll of the top teams in the Northeast, following Saturday's 28-21 win over Northeastern.

How Deep is the Defense? Matt Tulley, the junior inside linebacker who has missed half of this season's games with a bruised shoulder, is listed as probable for Saturday's game at Richmond.

Tulley's return would knock redshirt freshman Gregg Mattern back to the second slot on the depth chart. Mattern, who has 36 tackles in five games, notched a team-high 10 tackles against Northeastern, and was named to the Yankee Conference Honor Roll. Following his first start, against Connecticut three weeks back, Mattern was named ECAC and Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-week.

Around the Yankee Conference: Boston University's 41-27 win Saturday over New Hampshire, previously unbeaten and ranked No. 5 in the nation, was a Silber shocker.

Quarterback Stan Greene threw for 341 yards (21 of 35) and four touchdowns, while the BU defense picked off four interceptions as the Terriers won pulling away. UNH was penalized 16 times for 148 yards.

The loss dropped the Huskies to second place in the Yankee Conference and the No. 14 slot in the nation, and set up the possibility that for the second time in two years, UNH's playoff hopes will ride on beating UMass on the last Saturday of the regular season, Nov. 17.

A postcript: UNH quarterback Matt Griffin separated his shoulder, and could be out for as long as three weeks, including the UMass game.

Maine, behind freshman quarterback Bob Zurinskas, handed Delaware its second second consecutive loss, 17-10 in Orono. Zurinskas, from Brockton, started in place of hapless Jeff DelRosso and scored on a bootleg in the fourth quarter to seal the win.

Connecticut marched over Richmond, this week's UMass foe, 42-24. UConn quarterback Matt DeGennaro tossed for 246 yards and three touchdowns, and now needs 442 yards to pass Mike Buck as the Yankee Conference's all time passing leader.

Villanova slipped past Rhode Island 14-7.

Gary Wilkos has set up shop on the third floor inpatient wing at University Health Services; visiting hours are 2 p.m.-3:30 p.m., and 6 p.m.-8 p.m.

David Mitchell balances football, academics and religion

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

"It's not a Sunday thing," David Mitchell said. "It's everyday and it makes living great. It means everything to me."

The starting fullback for the University of Massachusetts football team isn't talking about football; he's speaking about his belief in God and the Bible.

For the 22-year-old senior, religion takes precedent over everything, and has helped him deal with the injuries which have plagued his career.

"I think the best thing (religion) does is that it makes you appreciate being healthy," Mitchell said. "I think it puts things into perspective."

In his sophomore year, Mitchell started the first four games of the season, then sprained his ankle and missed the next four games. Mitchell finished as the third-leading rusher for UMass with 388 yards, in six games.

Mitchell suffered ankle and thigh injuries in his junior year, forcing an early end to a productive season in which he again finished as UMass' third-leading rusher (343 yards), and was the team's fourth-leading receiver (17 receptions).

"It's been frustrating for me but I know I've learned a lot from it," Mitchell said.

As a result of all the injuries, Mitchell now takes a different approach to playing. "I approach the next game as my last, and I'll continue to do that for the rest of the season.

"Being a senior plus being one who becomes injured every year, I like to play hard every snap because if (an injury) does happen and my career ends, I won't have any regrets."

That thinking worked well for Mitchell against Connecticut on Oct. 13. In thick mud, Mitchell rushed for a personal-best 114 yards on 25 carries.

Fullback David Mitchell has played a key role in this season.

So far this year, Mithell has played nearly every down, amassing 509 yards on 106 carries. He has not been caught for a loss since the opening game, at Holy Cross.

Mitchell, however, sees his role as a fullback in UMass' option offense as more than just gaining yardage.

"I think to establish a good option game, you have to establish a good middle game," the 6-foot, 210-pounder said. "If you can't draw the linebackers into the middle for the fakes, then they're going to suck down the option.

"I focus as much or more on blocking because running is more natural. Blocking takes a lot more work and it's something I need to keep working at."

In addition to being a starter in the offensive backfield, Mitchell is also the backup punter to Marco Gabrielli.

Originally from Voorhees, N.J., Mitchell was recruited to kick for UMass after being All-State his senior year. While kicking, he managed to work up to the number three fullback spot, but injuries forced him to redshirt.

The following year, Mitchell stepped onto the gridiron, not at fullback, but on special teams. He feels playing on the kickoff return team helped him adjust to the rest of his collegiate play.

"I remember when I was on the field, I was really nervous," he said. "But even travelling and being with the team helps a lot. I think it also helped because if you can handle responsibility, (the coaches) will give you a little more."

Mitchell; a finance major, also proved that he could handle the responsibilities in the classroom; he is a Yankee Conference All-Academic Team selection with a 3.33 grade point average.

Though he feels there is not a direct correlation between his success in football and academics, he said, "Basically the way I approach school is that you have to go to class, just like you have to go to practice."

First and foremost for Mitchell, though, is religion.

"Religion comes up front for me," he said. "I look at it as a strength and major motivator for me so I can get through studying and practicing."

Mitchell, a member of the Boston Church of Christ, leads a bible study group on campus to help people with questions and problems with religion.

"Football is great and I love it, but there is so much more in wanting to help people and to make a difference."

O'Brien calls O'Brien a 'classic bitch'

By GOTCHA DICK
Collegian Wreck

Collegian Editor-in-Chief Meredith O'Brien has announced that she will file a harassment suit in the Dean of Students office today against Provost Richard O'Brien, whom allegedly called her a "classic bitch" last week at a meeting of several hundred faculty members.

O'Brien claims that Provost O'Brien called her a "classic bitch," a phrase made famous by noted Neanderthal and shaver czar Victor Kiam, during a meeting of faculty, which Provost O'Brien inexplicably closed to the media in violation of Massachusetts state law.

O'Brien, who was covering the conference "Meanness — the Attila-the-Hun Method of Management," was requested to leave by Provost O'Brien because of the "sensitive" nature of the meeting. When she refused, citing the open meeting law, Provost O'Brien allegedly quoted 17th century British law and said "Madam editor, get the bloody hell out of here or I will not continue with the meeting. (in an aside) What a classic bitch!"

O'Brien said she then left the conference.

Provost O'Brien is the second in command at the University and the bad cop of the good cop/bad cop team of O'Brien and President Chancellor Duffey.

O'Brien said she has requested several times, both verbally and in writing, for a "full apology" from Provost O'Brien. She said he has rebuffed her suggestion insisting that she must have quoted him wrong.

Provost O'Brien reportedly told the Hampster Daily Gasjet, "Your paper is asking for trouble sending a female reporter to cover the team."

He also denied calling her an obscene name, "I did indicate that the young lady was aggressive."

Provost O'Brien, who rarely returns phone calls from the Collegian, did not return repeated calls, although he did call several "900" numbers that afternoon.

Provost O'Brien, apparently unconcerned about the incident, noted that he has been called a "Great White Father by the likes of much worse." In an interview with the Gasjet, he said, "I can't get excited about it. It's a flyspeck in the ocean."

A secretary to the Provost, however, said that he is considering "publicly apologizing" to O'Brien in full-page advertisements in the Gasjet, the Hampshire Sad-Excuse and the Minuteman.

O'Brien, who has been Editor-in-Chief since September, said this incident, which occurred at a special meeting of approximately 400 faculty members, has been emotionally traumatic and "potentially career-threatening to my goal of working for the Boston Herald — the employer of so many of my predecessor Collegian Editor-in-Chiefs."

"The Provost and I have had tiffs before," said O'Brien, who has covered the administration as a beat in her 3 years with the campus paper. "I mean, I have gotten used to his condescending tone, patronizing attitude and sexist ways but I never expected to be publicly embarrassed before hundreds of people."

Duffey, who handpicked Provost O'Brien, in 1984, from a provost position at the University of Rochester, said he would rather "sit this one out," and not comment. He did, however, quietly state that "when Johnny gets the corner office in Boston, boy, oh, boy, I won't have to put up with this shit anymore."

University spokeswoman Karin "Lemon-Lime" Sherbert also refused comment on the Provost's statements. She did, however, audibly sigh and murmur. "When I go job-hunting again I just gotta ask more questions. This place is just crazy . . ."

Helms ripped at NOW gala

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sen. Jesse Helms was listed in stable condition earlier today by Bethesda Memorial Hospital, where he was airlifted by medical helicopter after a short speech at the National Organization for Women.

According to police reports, Helms had just finished the first line of a speech, which contained the statement that he "... loves all the gals who work at NOW, so long as it doesn't keep them from keeping a clean house and raising good Republican children."

At that point, one of the audience members, a Ms. Bertha Jackson, leaped a twelve-foot steel barrier and ripped Helms' testicles from his body wall.

The testicles were placed in a glass of milk and were successfully reattached several hours later.

Ms. Jackson was not available for comment.

Collegian staffer forced to take toke

Two Collegian graphics staff members were killed and two others seriously injured last night at 9 p.m. when attacked with a graphics knife by Associate Arts and Living Editor Danielle Dowling, who was under the influence of marijuana at the time.

According to an unidentified witness, the events leading to the incident began around 8:30 p.m., when Dowling, visibly strung out on caffeine, was sitting on the couches near the WMUA-FM offices chain smoking.

The witness claimed that two men approached Dowling demanding that she smoke a joint with them. Dowling replied that she had never smoked pot before and that she was already buzzed off a six pack of Mountain Dew.

The two men retorted that if Dowling did not smoke the joint with them, they would tie her up in the production studio at WMUA and force her to listen to 17 hours of K.C. and the Sunshine Band.

After this threat was made, the witness said that Dowling nervously complied and followed the two men into the Campus Center Garage. Authorities assume that it was there that Dowling and the two men smoked a marijuana cigarette.

At 8:50 p.m., witnesses placed Dowling on the Campus Center Concourse where she was running back and forth screaming, "Synaptic imploding gerbils are taking over the graphics room," after which she headed for the basement towards the Collegian offices.

Upon reaching the offices, she headed straight into the graphics room and picked up a graphics knife. She screamed, "Synaptic imploding gerbils must die," and proceeded to blindly stab at the people working in the graphics room.

One person, Collegian Arts and Living Editor, Jody Gabin, who claims to have no life, escaped injury. Gabin was making a coffee and cherry pie filler at the time of the incident. Friends of Dowling assume that Gabin escaped injury because she was making filler, the goofy pictures and Collegian personal jokes that fill the empty spaces that the newsroom can't fill with actual news stories, and Dowling has an intense love for filler.

"If only the whole paper had consisted of filler, maybe we could have saved the lives of those innocent people," Collegian Managing Editor Sarah DeMaster said.

Seth Kaye and Mike Carvahlo, both 20, died of wounds to the neck, chest, abdomen and groin. Theresa Starmer, 21, and Beth Clark, 19, received injuries to the chest and abdomen. They were rushed to Cooley Dickinson Hospital where they remain in serious but stable condition.

One onlooker, Mark Sturm, Music Director at WMUA, remarked, "Yeah, the blood and gore was cool."

"But it could have been a bit gorier. Have you ever seen that movie Buckets of Blood?" Phil Straub, a DJ at WMUA, added.

Police are investigating these two men under the suspicion that they were the two who forced Dowling to smoke a marijuana cigarette.

Dowling went into a catatonic state after the stabbings. She is now under observation at Northampton State Hospital.

Friends described Dowling as an extremely neurotic and high-strung person.

"It should come as no surprise that Dowling snapped like this," Dr. Mike Hunt, Dowling's personal psychiatrist, said. "If only more people knew that marijauna triggers insanity in people who are already a bit mentally unstable, perhaps tragic, but funny incidents like these would not occur."

Fangs, the Rev. announce marriage

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff Members

The Board of Governors members underwent a shock yesterday, as marriage plans were announced by two of the organizaitons top members.

Reverend Ted Maravelias, and Ed 'Fangs' Corrigan are about to "Tie the Knot" according to various BOG officials. What started out as an absurd rumor ended up becoming fact.

"Ted and Ed walked into my dorm room and said they had something important to tell me." said BOG Gov. Laura Silver. "Barely able to hold back the tears, Ed said that he was no longer capable to surpressing his inner feelings for Ted, and that they were getting married."

This has brought Ted and Ed's secret love affair into the limelight. She was also informed of Rev. Ted's pregnancy. News that she claims is, "Un-fucking believable!"

"Two years — not even — two minutes ago you couldn't even joke to me about Ted and Ed. I mean, I had my suspicions. But I'd never think that it would be true. I can't concieve Ted being homosexual. I can't conceive Ted being sexual for that matter."

"Well, it was difficult. Immaculate conceptions don't happen that much these days," claimed Rev. Ted upon being reached for comment. "Ed and I were discussing having a baby someday with other people, and then something strange happened. I started throwing up on a regular basis, Ed's physical features startled me, and I began to question my theo-political beliefs. It was then when I knew I was pregnant, and I knew Ed was the father, or mother, oh, I can't make up my mind who's who any more."

Assuming abortion is out of the question, one can safely predict the child will be born next May or June. However, this starteling revelation raises other questions. The main one being, why the couple are so headstrong on eliminating the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Association spots from the BOG.

"We want to represent the Gay voice on campus," responded Corrigan. "No one is traditional, patriotic nor pregnant at the LBGA, and we feel that we can set an example by advocating traditional American ideals in an alternative fashion. Besides, when our parents found out, they said 'get married or get lost!' So you can see we didn't have much of a say in the matter."

"I wonder what Paul Cameron would think of this," said one LBGA member. "I mean, I guess I saw it coming, but not this soon. After all, homophobia is merely repressed homosexuality, and in view of the fact he and Cameron are both closeted virgin fence-sitters who could never make up their minds for the lives of them, I wonder what he's trying to achieve by suddenly coming out like this."

The news reached many outside of the campus. David "Cookie Puss" Mark, former Idiot-in-Chief of the Collegian, called the office yesterday moments after having heard the news.

"I think it's a shame. Ted was someone who stood up for the apple pie values of this great nation. And now he's sickeningly pro-homosexual."

Regardless, Ted and Ed will definitely exchange vows somewhere in San Francisco during Thanksgiving break. When asked if there were any other concerns, Corrigan said, "Nope, none. I just want to get Ted to the Church on time."

'Marvies:' new religious cult sweeps UMass campus

By K. BUTTERFLY
Collegian Strife

Students at the University are being warned about yet another religious cult invading the campus, abusing students and generally raising hell.

Here come the "Marvies."

The Marvies are the members of the Right Wing Church of Christ, a group whose goal, according to founder Ted "Reverend Ted" Maravelias, "is to turn everyone in America into a conservative who blindly follows orders. Also, we'd like everyone to accept the Lord Jesus as their personal savior."

But finding Christianity is not the goal of the group, despite the cult's official title. According to Rev. Ted's right-hand man, Edward "Fangs" Corrigan, "we really want to rule the entire world. It's just that simple."

"Well, let me tell you about my good friend Fangs Corrigan," Rev. Ted said in a recent interview. "His heart's in the right place, but sometimes, you know, he just gets a little too enthusiastic about politics." He added that there is a strong religious basis to the group.

The leadership duties are equally divided between Fangs and the Rev., a source, who would only be identified as Jeff Turco, said. "Ted takes care of the moral issues, such as homosexuality and quoting the Bible in the Undergraduate Senate, and Fangs works on getting the Board of Governors stacked to the right, getting The Minuteman nice big offices, learning Robert's Rules of Order and using it for our purposes," Turco added.

Fangs said that the recent push to eliminate the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance from the Board of Governors should be considered a proud moment for Marvies everywhere.

"We worked together, Rev. Ted and I, and we've got our followers behind us," he said. "It's tabled now, but we can bring it up whenever we want to, and they'll be sorry! Ah ha ha ha ha ha."

Many student leaders have expressed dismay at the extent of the Marvies' influence within the BOG. Alan Van Tassel, chief Karen Talbot-basher for the Undergraduate Student Senate, said, "It has occurred to me that Ed and Ted should be shot in front of a firing squad." He was then punched in the face by an irate Jeff Turco.

Talbot, however, said, "None of this surprises me. I think that Alan, as usual, has failed to grasp the reality of the situation involving these guys." She was then punched in the face by Alan Van Tassel, who shouted, "Impeachment! Impeachment! I want her impeached NOW!"

Dan Chesnicka, senate speaker, said, "I hate those guys," prompting Commuter Area Dictator-for-Life Ted Chambers to punch him in the face, screaming, "Stop talking about me and Robb that way!"

Rev. Ted, who observed the whole scene, said, "Perhaps they do need to have Jesus as their personal savior. Don't you agree, Fangs?"

Fangs responded, "Anything you say, Ted."

"That's my boy," Rev. Ted said, grinning.

Sue Gordon, chairperson of the board [until Rev. Ted takes over, anyway], said that with the spread of the cult she finds it difficult to work.

"I really can't work with Ed hanging around. Look at him. He looks like a vampire or a zombie or something," she said, her face turning green. "He makes me want to puke," which she proceeded to do after having said this.

Board Treasurer Mary No One disputed this, saying that Fangs made her laugh. "He reminds me of one of the guys from The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

"That's it," Gordon said. "We are never going to allow that movie to be shown in the Campus Center."

"Well, it's bad enough that we have to let the Senate meet here," No One said, which prompted Guy Glodis to punch her in the face. He yelled, "You'll be sorry when the Mahvies take ovah the senate and the boahd!"

Representatives from the other religious groups on campus, including the United Christian Foundation, have denounced the Marvies as being "yet another organization out to make God-fearing people look bad."

The Dean of Students has warned students to beware of people who tell them that they will go to hell for the following reasons: voting against Question 3; favoring civil rights for any non-whites, non-Christians, non-heterosexuals or non-males; or for not being, in general, "hahd coah" conservatives.

Upon learning about the warning, Rev. Ted said, "Thanks a lot, you know, thanks a lot. We're just trying to add a little diversity to this campus."

ESTER

Dear Aunt Esther is a new weekly feature in the Collegian that will run every Wednesday.

Dear Aunt Esther,

I am an 18-year-old genius and editor of one of my college newspapers. The problem is that nobody likes me. They all call me names like "racist" and "fascist" and point at me when I walk across campus. I think that's just because I'm successful that everybody's jealous. I also get mad when the bigger paper on campus picks on me and my paper. They're just a bunch of liberal do-gooders. I don't know what to do, they're just trying to ruin my reputation.

Grossed Out

Dear Grossed Out,

Well I suggest that you stop whining and get on with your life. You shouldn't feel inferior because their newspaper is bigger than yours. Just do what you can with what little you've got and take the names like a man.

P.S. — If everyone points at you, why don't you just put a target on the back of your head to make things easier. That way your enemies will know you aren't afraid of them.

Dear Aunt Esther,

I told an awful lie about an old high school friend of mine. I went around campus and told everybody that we did something naughty so I would feel big and important. (I told my friends I slept with her.) Now I don't know what to do. I know she knows about it and is really mad, but I don't want her to hate me. What should I do?

Not YAFfing now

Dear YAFfing,

I think that you should really think about why you did that, reach really far down into your soul. Usually when people tell lies they are really trying to hide something. Did you really want to sleep with her but were afraid to ask? I think you were more concerned about boosting your own reputation than damaging hers. Don't worry, being a virgin isn't the end of the world.

Dear Aunt Esther,

I am an overpaid administrator on my campus who has always had a communication problem. No matter who I try to talk to, I always wind up getting so bloody mad that I refuse to speak to them and ignore their phone calls. But I've been rather distressed of late, because now I've quite alienated every chap in the administration. Any suggestions?

Perturbed Provost

Dear Perturbed,

Well, from the sound of your letter it seems like you definitely need to loosen up. Try getting out more and drinking less tea. And maybe if you rolled up your shirt-sleeves, let your hair down and loosen your lips, I'm sure your life would be quite fun. Also, perhaps a substantial pay cut is in order, you sound a bit guilt-ridden over your substantial salary. A cut might do you some good.

Dear Aunt Esther,

I'm so sick of it! I hate stupid people who come down to the newsroom demanding everything but the underwear I'm wearing. Come to think of it, one of these days some fuckface is going to leave the newsroom with my dirty underwear over their head, when I've finally had enough. They don't know how to write, think they're God's greatest gift to any editorial editor, and demand their stupid, inane, nonsensical letters be printed immediately, lest I want my boyfriend castrated or my glasses bent in half. I am but a lowly college editor who cannot get my social life back because everyone wants me to read their letters every second of the day, as if I fucking give a shit about these whiners. The sad thing is I'm starting to enjoy it. Any suggestions? No forget it. I know everything anyway. You don't have to tell me how to be an assimiliated editor.

Hairspray impails staffer

By JOHN SCHLACKA
Collegian Hair Consultant

The Collegian office is filled with toxic fumes, and a plastic coating covers everything as a result of a vicious assault last night.

Witnesses say that columnist Pamela McCarthy was typing her weekly editorial when five masked bandits jumped on her, grabbing her hair. Then, according to witnesses, they proceeded to tie her up and spray and tease her hair.

"They just burst in, looked around, and pounced on her. I never saw anything like it in my life," said Production Manager Terry Starmer.

"It was horrible," said Editorial Editor Gayle Long. "She was screaming blue murder. She fought bravely, but could not overpower the five brutes who were making her hair so big."

When asked if she tried to help McCarthy in any way, Starmer said: "Are you crazy? It was a riot. I was laughing too hard to try and help her. Besides, they used Aqua Net, and that stuff is nasty."

News Editor Chris Muther estimates that when finished, McCarthy's hair was about three feet tall. "That's a real feat, considering her hair is bobbed," Muther said.

McCarthy is currently in Cooley Dickinson Hospital under heavy sedation. Her condition is described by her doctors as stable, though "we are still trying to wash that crap out of her hair. We may have to cut it all off," said Dr. Ima Quack.

EWC to sell non-phallic goods

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondent

Following the recent drastic budget cuts, the Everywoman's Center will be holding a bake sale on Saturday. Baked goods of a non-phallic nature will be sold. Among these items will be such offerings as chocolate eclairs in the shape of IUDs and gender-neutral gingerbread person cookies.

"Well," said Miss Anne Thrope, coordinator of the event, at a recent Women's Self-Defense course, "seeing how the male-dominated society has once again sought to oppress wimmyn (that's how the word came out of her mouth) by cutting our funds to the bone, we figured this would be a good method of raising necessary capital."

Thrope also stated that men would not be allowed at the event.

"It's not that we despise men and hope they all die horribly in tremendous pain," she said as she threw the self-defense instructor to the ground, ripped his arm from its socket and proceeded to beat him with the bloody end of the severed limb. "Wwe just don't want them there."

In addition to the baked goods, Thrope stated there will also be a table expressly for the sale of mace and straight razors.

"The big draw for the event," said Thrope as she threw the instructor's body into the back of her VW microbus, "will be the 'Dunk Duffey-in-the-Battery-Acid' stall. Twelve throws for a dollar."

Ghosts visit Anderson

By Mikail Webspinner
Collegian Taxpayer

In a move that sent shock waves across the state, Citizens for Limited Taxation leader Barbara Anderson reversed her position on her own tax-cutting proposal yesterday, condemning it as "short-sighted, devastating and mean."

Anderson claims she was visited by three ghosts representing the past, present and future of Massachusetts, who showed her the folly of the CLT proposal to roll back state taxes to 1988 levels.

"It was a terrifying experience," said Anderson, "I guess I just never realized how spiteful, idiotic and blind our proposal is. I woke up this morning and thanked the Lord that there was still time to stop it."

She said the first ghost showed her the Massachusetts of the "miracle days." Anderson described the vision as "beautiful." The economy was booming, higher education was thriving, and all of the flowers around the Statehouse were untrampled."

The Ghost of Massachusetts Present, however, had much more grim tidings, said Anderson. "Public education was being destroyed by uncaring Ivy League graduates in the Legislature, and the elections were being dominated by assholes, morons and self-righteous groups of self-fashioned political Rambos with solutions for the state's problems that were rooted in something other than reality," she said.

"The vision of the future was the most horrible, though," said Anderson. "It was like the Great Depression all over again," she said. "Bridges and roads were falling apart, there was nothing left of public higher education and there were so many people starving in the streets that even the Republicans were upset."

Supporters of the CLT petition discounted Anderson's statements as the ravings of a lunatic, and demanded that she receive immediate psychological help. Local mental health professionals, however, say they will not be able to see Anderson until at least November 7.

Campus reaction to the news was surprised, but positive. Responding to the news, Student Trustee extraordinaire Angus McQuilken said, "I think it's great. God bless us, one and all."

Tenuka lifts sport spirits

Ha! They are on us, close without!
Shut tight the shelter where we lie;
With hideous din the monster rout,
Dragon and vampire, fill the sky.
-Victor Hugo

Welcome to the day of the undead kids. A day for howling at the moon and a day for some meaningful sports commentary.

Of course I mean from me, you dolt!

Not much on the ol' sports agenda tonight, so it looks like I'll have to make something up. Perhaps a bit of Halloween nastyness to get y'all in the proper 'spirit.'

It was dusk when the players took the field. The crowd consisted of undead from all the surrounding cemetaries and beyond. The night was cold and damp. The wind felt like snails crawling up my back. No, not snails, more like leeches.

The stadium began to grow dark. The fans moaned (the undead can't speak alright) and they began to grow more restless as the minutes ticked by. The game was not starting. It might of had something to do with the invisible man in the leadoff spot, but that is hard to say. The crowd grew anxious and they were starting to look at me the way a pack of wolves would look at a gazelle. I started to get nervous.

P. Flanders Tenuka

Some of the undead moved a little closer to me. That's when the stench hit me. You can't expect someone to lay in the ground for any length of time and come out smelling April fresh. The funk filled my senses. I felt my stomach turn. The end was near.

I got up to run but was pushed back in my seat by a hand I never saw. I couldn't move.

"They are neither men nor women. They are neither brute nor human. They are Ghouls."

Leave it to me to recite Poe during the most dark, gloomy experience of my young life. If there is any man who adds to a doomed situation, it would be Edgar Allen Poe.

The crowd surrounded me now, licking their decomposed chops, rubbing their bony, maggot ridden hands on my face. I was trapped. I tried to scream but couldn't. The end was near.

Then, out of the darkness, I heard my saving words: 'PLAY BALL!'

The lights came on and I was safe, for a little while anyway.

Well kids, Happy Halloween. I'd like to leave you with this little message.

My story is over, my tale is done,
I left the game early so I don't know who won.
Halloween is here, and if you don't lock your door,
You may live, quoth the Raven, 'Nevermore!'

Silent vigil participants speechless

By Ellen Keller
Collegian Newsbabe

Some 250 students at the University of Massachusetts held a silent vigil last night in front of Whitmore Administration building to protest the decreasing quality of dormitory toliet paper supplied by Housing Services.

Michelle Charmin, a UMass sophomore, led a quiet march from the Student Union Building to Whitmore, carrying a sign that stated, "Wiping should be painless!" The procession of students wrapped trees with toliet paper as they proceeded across campus.

" ,"she said.

The students encircled the entrance to Whitmore building, holding hands. Mike "Whitey"Cloud, a UMass senior from Flushing, N.Y., wrapped toliet paper around the ring of protestors.

" ," he said, as the students broke out from the ring.

The protestors chanted, " ," as they left Whitmore to return to their residential areas.

Once they reached the dormitories, student supporters organized to flush all campus commodes in support of their cause. Southwest area residents gathered at the pyramids to burn rolls of toliet paper in a bonfire.

Mr. Ed Whipple, the director of Housing Services, said the quality of toliet paper has severely decreased because of state budget cuts to the University.

"We understand how the students are feeling and where they are feeling it," he said.

Whipple said he was angered by the littering of the campus which resulted from the protest and said the pipe system was damaged by what he called a "650 flush salute."

UMass cops formally begin Towing Season, rusty start

By PRESTON P. FORPLAY
Collegian Stiffy

University Police cracked down on the unauthorized theft of cars yesterday by formally beginning the 1990-91 towing season. Police, in conjunction and collusion with Amherst Towing, last night towed over 100 cars from various campus locations.

A police spokesperson admitted that they could have towed at least 50 more cars last night but were a "a bit rusty in the ticket-and-tow procedure." He said the officers will be up to record levels within a week.

Police may tow any vehicle parked in a lot deemed a snow lot -- regardless of the possibility of snow. The police spokesperson said the force takes a perverse pleasure in towing on relatively warm November nights.

Director of Public Safety Arthur Bileson praised the police effort and noted that the "boys did good last night -- towed 100 cars including the car of that sniveling Collegian cop reporter."

ARRESTS

- Gayle Santiago, 20, of Amherst, was arrested last night for allegedly exposing herself to several Campus Pond ducks. Police said the ducks were taken to University Health Services for treatment of temporary blindness and insanity.
- Reggie Anna Long, 20, of Amherst, was arrested last night for climbing the Tower Library. She told police that she wanted to climb the 26-floor brick monstrosity to prove that female "superheroines exist in the same fashion as superheros such as SuperMAN do." She also told police that it was quite a remarkably easy climb given that the "bricks fall out so nicely."
- Drunken Tweedy, 18, of Washington, was arrested Tuesday evening for being a minor in possession of alcohol. Police confiscated 90 cases of beer which she and several unidentified cohorts were pulling up to the 21st floor of the building with the use of ropes.

LARCENY

- Several hundred condoms were stolen from the Sex, Peers and Lust Awareness Training (SPLAT) office in John Adams Residence Hall last night. The estimated value is $1200.

DISTURBANCES

- Police were called early Tuesday morning to John Adams on a call of hundreds of "orgasmic-like" or "orgasmic-similar" screams, hollers and yodels. Police attempted to quiet the building with the use of a bullhorn, salt-peter tear gas and several hundred gallons of cold water but were unsuccessful. The disturbance climaxed within five minutes and then died down, police said.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stay off the drugs this week, or you'll be ready for the rubber room. Business opportunities look good. Try selling the stuff instead of using it. Hygiene is important -- and you've been slipping.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A desire to spend all your cash fills you today. Too bad you don't have any. Today you'll be outgoing and want to talk to everybody. Don't. No one else feels the same way, and you're annoying even when they do.

GEMINI -- Stock up on those condoms. Don't reproduce, we have enough Geminis right now. You'll be feeling warm and affectionate today, so you can give the old Trojans a workout. If your date's a Libra, carry mace.

CANCER -- A good-looking stranger is watching you closely. Watch outside for a car that's always parked across the street from your house. Check the phone for bugs. Check the sink for bugs. In fact, do the dishes -- it may get rid of them.

LEO -- Show that special someone you care -- follow them around constantly. Always be there when they need you. Just always be there. Your diplomatic skills don't exist today, so shut up and run if that guy named Freddy who lent you money shows up.

VIRGO -- Your reputation could be jeopordized if you say too much at work. Like about that party last night. And we have the photos. Travel is in your agenda. If it isn't, it should be. We're serious when we say we have photos.

LIBRA -- Financial questions are finally answered -- you are totally broke. Celebrate your piece of mind. Go on a shopping spree, compliments of Visa. You always have those photos of that Virgo at last night's party if you need quick cash.

SCORPIO -- Work endeavors prove to be more difficult than usual today. Maybe that's because you're still in a coma from last night. If you manage to drag yourself out of bed and read this, take a bath. You need one.

SAGITTARIUS -- Avoid your old acquaintances who want to set you up with their friends. You may be desperate, but they don't have to know that. Besides, their friends are all Scorpios. Work is goes well today -- you show up on time for once.

CAPRICORN -- Today you feel invigorated and alive. Crank up that polka music and dance to your heart's content. Ask someone you don't know out. A safe bet would be a Sagittarius. Do something you've never done -- pay a bill.

AQUARIUS -- Disagreements over money end today, but don't worry, no one will trace the gun to you. Don't argue when a guy named Eddie comes to reposess your car. Try smiling today. Lighten up, will ya?

PISCES -- Charity begins at home, but you won't be at home today, so don't worry about it. Be selfish instead. You are anyway. Think about going to a class today. You could even try one of your own classes.

Trustees pass $400 fee increase

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

BOSTON -- The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday approved a $400 undergraduate and graduate curriculum support fee increase for next semester as part of President-Chancellor Duffey's package to combat state reductions.

The full-time undergraduate curriculum support fee will total $690 for next semester. The graduate curriculum support fee will be raised to $575.

The fee increase package will also reduce other mandatory fees and room and board charges by $45 for students living on campus next semester.

Duffey proposed the fee increase in an effort to cover a portion of the remaining $10.6 million in state budget reductions, which the University has addressed through other means such as employee furloughs and program reductions or terminations.

The mid-year fee increase will save the University approximately $5.7 million in revenues this year. Some of the revenues from the fee increase will be set aside for scholarship assistance for students who will be facing hardship in trying to pay the mid-year increase.

In his proposal, Duffey said, "In proposing this mid-year increase, I ask our students and their families to consider whether an inevitable spiral into mediocrity -- which is accepting what the full loss of state funding would mean for the campus -- is, in the end, an acceptable way to prepare young people for the future."

The Student Trustee at UMass-Amherst, Angus McQuilken, said he attempted to convince the Board to reduce the undergraduate fee to $500 per semester and the graduate fee to $400 per semester. However, the trustees passed Duffey's original proposal by a vote of nine to five.

The $45 total reduction in mandatory fees and room and board charge for next semester will be divided as follows:

- The Athletic fee will be reduced by $1.00 to $74 per semester.
- The Fine Arts fee will be reduced by 50 cents to $23.50 per semester.
- The Student Activities will be reduced by $1.00 to $55.25 per semester.
- The Student Health fee will be reduced by $7.50 to $182.50 per semester.
- The rent for residence halls will be reduced by $19.00 to $907 per semester.

Duffey also stated in his proposal to the trustees that he would direct the University administrative and academic offices to absorb further cuts in their budgets totalling $1.5 million. He said the cut would reduce the budget for the library and computing centers and further reduce budgets for travel, equipment and staffing of programs which have been "substantially reduced by previous cuts."

The proposal said that the state reductions would be countered by a temporary lay-off of all personnel on campus for up to five work days. The impact of the furlough on campus employees would be spread out over a three-month period of deductions.

Duffey said that he would prefer that the pay reductions resulting from a temporary lay-off be graduated in relation to salary level. A pay reduction would have to have "the specific agreement and cooperation of union representatives," he said.

Bush talks tough on Iraqi hostage plight

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) -- President Bush declared yesterday "I have had it" with Iraq's treatment of U.S. diplomats and hostages in Kuwait, but said he has no timetable for deciding on a possible military strike.

Later, when asked if the nation was moving closer to war, he said, "I don't think so" and that he still has hopes for a peaceful solution.

But, Bush said, "You don't use pretext when you have force deployed. You just do what's right."

The president escalated the administration's anti-Iraq rhetoric but said the harsh comments of the past few days from senior officials should not be interpreted as a sign he had decided force was the only way to resolve the Gulf crisis.

Yesterday, he seemed eager to elaborate on his feelings. He took questions from reporters as he arrived for a campaign stop in suburban Virginia for Republican Rep. Stan Parris, and again as his helicopter landed back on the White House grounds.

"The embassy is being starved," Bush said of the U.S. embassy in Kuwait, where a handful of staff members are confined during the Iraqi occupation. "The people out there are not being re-supplied. The American flag is flying over the Kuwait embassy and our people inside are being starved by a brutal dictator."

"Do you think I'm concerned about it? You're darned right I am. And what I'm going to do about it -- let's just wait and see, because I have had it with that kind of treatment of Americans," Bush said.

He referred to reports from other foreign hostages who had been held with Americans in Kuwait describing grim conditions. "That worries me," the president said.

When asked if the hostages have become more important in his strategy for how to deal with the Persian Gulf crisis, Bush replied, "I wouldn't say more, but I am very concerned about it."

The president responded with a blunt "no" when asked if he had settled on a time frame for ordering a military strike.

Bush gave a pessimistic assessment of the effects of the economic sanctions, to date the major weapon of the U.S.-led coalition demanding that Saddam Hussein pull his troops from Kuwait.

"I wouldn't say they haven't been successful at all, but they certainly haven't driven the man to do what he should have done, which was to get out of Kuwait and reverse this aggression," Bush said.

Bush said he was deeply offended by the suggestion that his heightened rhetoric against Hussein was politically motivated to help Republicans in next Tuesday's election.

Halloween lecture recounts persecutions in old Europe

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Between the 13th and 18th centuries, over 150,000 women were burned in Germany after having been forced to confess they were witches, according to Sigrid Brauner, a professor of German at the University of Massachusetts, in a lecture yesterday at the Campus Center as part of the Brown Bag Lunch Series sponsored by the Women's Studies department.

The signs that a woman was practicing witchcraft, as outlined in the guidebook Melas Magnificum of 1487, included signs such as cohabitating with the devil, practicing harmful magic against animals and people and making pacts with the devil, Brauner said.

"Part of the procedure of burning a woman for witchcraft was the confession," she said. "Since no veritable proof could be obtained, it was necessary for a woman to come up with details of her cohabitation with the devil, murder of innocents and nightly travels by pitchfork or broomstick."

Brauner said that many of the confessions she read were remarkably similar, mostly because the women were asked leading questions in conjunction with being brutally tortured.

"Some women did not confess," she said. "But most of them died from the beatings they incurred."

"Until the 16th century there was no particular iconography associated with witches," she said. "Many illustrations we have of witches merely show ordinary-looking women congregating together. Part of what made identification of a witch so difficult was that there were no distinguishing features about her."

Sigrid Brauner

The women targeted for prosecution as witches often were poor, widowed, unmarried or midwives. "There were towns that killed off their whole female population," she said.

A widow was considered sexually experienced and therefore lusty, as well as masterless.

SGA officers defend treasurer, label impeachment motion 'a witch-hunt'

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

In a Halloween evening Student Senate meeting, which Student Government officers called a "witch-hunt," Student Government Association treasurer Karen Talbot, to counter a motion to impeach her, said area governments were appropriated the exact amount of funds according to the SGA constitution.

The SGA officers opened the meeting with a clip of a Monty Python film, entitled "In Search of the Holy Grail," in which a mob haphazardly convicts a woman of being a witch. The officers correlated the witch hunt in the movie to the motion to impeach Talbot for misappropriations of area government allocations.

Last Monday, some 25 senators in the Governmental Affairs Committee filed a motion to impeach Talbot for underfunding area governments by $17,000 this year.

Alan VanTassel, the chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, said area governments should have received a $5,000 base in addition to a $1.00 per student head allocation. Area governments were only appropriated a 50 cents allocation per head.

Talbot said the senate contradicted itself in two decisions relating to the area government allocation when they passed a budget act to give $1.00 per head yearly after amending the constitution to give $1.00 per head for each semester. The area governments were funded by "A midwife could be convicted of infanticide with impunity," she said. "Until the 16th century, widows had more rights than married women, who had virtually none."

In 1522 Martin Luther, the catalytic force behind Protestantism, described the process by which women become witches.

"According to him, women turn to witchcraft because they fear their husbands. If they were not so fearful, or did not indulge in excessive love for their children, they would not turn to witchcraft," Brauner said.

"Witchhunts ended in the 18th century, largely due to the changing attitudes of the upper class," said Brauner, herself dressed in witch's regalia. "Prior to this, no one was immune to being called a witch. About 10 percent of witches were men and even prominent people such as mayors were accused of witchcraft."

Six barns destroyed by arson

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

HADLEY — Police and fire officials are investigating a series of overnight arson fires that destroyed six barns Tuesday night and caused an estimated $500,000 in damage.

According to Fire Chief Bernard Martula, the first fire was reported at 8:32 p.m., the five other calls came in at 12:53 a.m., 1:13 a.m., 1:16 a.m., 1:31 a.m. and 2:26 a.m. yesterday.

Martula said the blazes were started with gasoline, but said police have no suspects in the case and added finding a suspect seems unlikely.

"It will be hard to figure out who did something like this," he said. "It could have been a bunch of kids or it could be someone with a serious problem."

He added that in his 16 years as fire chief, Hadley has never experienced a rash of fires like yesterday's. "It was totally ridiculous. We've had barn fires, but we've never had six burn in one night," he said.

Martula said the incident may be related to Halloween or there may also be a "fire bug" in town.

The night before Halloween is commonly known as "Cabbage Night" and is usually highlighted by pranks.

"We're worried about tonight," he said. "We're all pretty burnt out after last night."

Most of the barns burnt to the ground, Matula said. None of the barns contained animals, but one contained 15,000 bales of hay. He said no injuries to either humans or livestock were reported in the fires.

The fires melted cables, knocking out electricity for 1,672 customers. Phone service was also lost for some 600 customers. Electricity and phone service was restored after several hours.

Vandalism was also reported Tuesday night in Northampton, where police said 100 eggs were stolen from a chicken coup at the Smith Vocational school. The eggs have a retail value of $100.

Other incidents were reported in Florence, Easthampton, Williamsburg and Amherst.

No new leads in Sutton accident

Amherst police said yesterday that they have no new leads in the investigation of the hit-and-run accident that injured former University of Massachusetts basketball star Lorenzo Sutton nearly six weeks ago.

On Sept. 23, Sutton, 25, was hit by a car as he was running along North Pleasant St. Police later reported that he had been involved in a fight with another man, and was chasing him, when he was struck by the car.

UMass junior Jean Kokoszka, 21, was cited by the police for leaving the scene of a personal-injury accident and for operating to endanger.

Sutton sustained head injuries as a result of the accident and also suffered from pneumonia and a collapsed lung. He recently emerged out of a month-long coma, and, according to his mother, Zenee Sutton, is now riding in a wheelchair and is able to talk to visitors.

Sutton played for the Minutemen from 1984 to 1988 and holds the all-time UMass scoring record at 1,718 career points. Since leaving the team, he played professionally for the Worcester Counts, of the World Basketball League, and the Charleston, Va., Gunners, of the Continental Basketball Association.

According to the UMass men's basketball coach, John Calipari, Sutton had returned to the University to complete his undergraduate degree requirements at the time of the accident.

College guide showers UMass with praise

By MARC ELLIOT
Collegian Correspondent

This year's Fiske Guide to Colleges gave the University of Massachusetts four out of five stars for academics, stating that "UMass is well on its way to becoming one of the finest state universities in the Northeast."

"The University of Massachusetts has for many years waged its own two-front battle for recognition," writes Edward B. Fiske, author of the guide and an education columnist for the New York Times, "fighting off the twin plagues of a stingy state legislature and a reputation as a poor substitute for New England's prestigious private colleges."

"While the state funding issue isn't getting any better, the bad old days of 'Zoo Mass' are now a distant memory," said Fiske.

"Come what may, UMass is well on its way to becoming one of the finest state universities in the Northeast. Though it will be a long time before UMass is up to challenging Harvard as the state's best liberal arts university, there's no denying it is improving by leaps and bounds."

According to a statement released by the UMass Press Office, the University was at three stars until 1988. A four-star rating means that the institution is "above average in some particularly distinguishing academic feature."

Some of the programs mentioned in the guide were offerings in engineering and management, which were described as "first-rate."

Also mentioned were the hotel, restaurant and travel administration and the environmental design programs offered by the College of Arts and Sciences.

The College of Arts and Sciences was complimented for its offerings in art, communication studies, computer and information science, women's studies and linguistics and language, especially Chinese and Japanese. The English and economics departments were said to be "highly rated." Programs that were cited to need improvement were fashion marketing, education and pre-medicine.

Professor Alby Reiner, whose course on Microbiology of Cancer and AIDS was praised by the guide, was listed as the most acclaimed teacher on campus.

Poets James Tate and Joseph Brodsky from the English department, and science fiction writer and critic Samuel R. Delany from the Comparative Literature department were also complimented.

UMass scored four out of five stars on the social scale and three out of five stars for quality of living.

the budget act and not by the amendment, she said.

She said the changes in area government funding was the recommendation of the Student Activities Trust Fund Planning Committee (SPC) and that area governments were informed of the implications the change from $9.60 per student to the $5,000 base and $1.00 per head each semester would have on their funding.

"How can the whole senate pass an act which was a violation of the constitution?" she asked the body. "All [the senate] does is fight over the SATF fund. The reality of the situation is that we do nothing and we don't even handle the SATF fund, the Student Activities Office does."

Jeff Turco, a senator, said he was "appalled" that the SGA officers used the film to "mock" the motion to impeach Talbot.

He said area governments were shown contradictory proposals by the SGA officers on how they were to be funded when the budget was passed last year.

Gov. attacks minority reps.

As an ex-representative of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance on the Board of Governors, I am writing to express the outrage and disgust I felt for Gov. Ted Maravelias' presentation concerning the striking of the two appointed LBGA seats to the Board.

Not only has Maravelias demonstrated a great ineptitude in discerning the issue, but he also offended members of the Jewish community, Third World Caucus and Abilities Unlimited. The structure of his presentation to strike the seats revealed the discriminatory intentions behind his actions.

He began his argument by challenging the constitutionality and democracy of appointed seats on the Board, and as such, only challenged those seats of the LBGA and the community's right to representation.

Maravelias obviously did not realize the inherent contradiction in his "logic" of attacking the LBGA seats and not those appointed seats of the Caucus, Abilities Unlimited and Stockbridge. This inconsistency reveals his hidden agenda to single out the LBGA. It destroys any credibility he had as governor or representative of the UMass community, for his attack also included offensive comments about "Jews," "Handicaps," and "Foreign Students (referring to the Caucus' constituency)."

The framework of the debate was clearly structured to guide the debate in justifying the "need" for LBGA seats to legitimize its existence. The fact is that the Board had already recognized that "need" when it amended the constitution and created the seats in 1986.

They carefully maneuvered the debate to do just that and missed the issue while jeopardizing the entire constitutionality of the Board itself. The result: Maravelias succeeded in questioning the legitimacy of appointed seats as well as the legitimacy of the Board. This is especially ironic when his original justification to strike the LBGA seats was to help preserve the constitutionality of the Board in the first place.

Therefore, can the LBGA and the LBG community believe Maravelias' declaration that his intentions in framing the motion were not homophobic? That it is nothing less than a personal attack on the community and its allies? Does Maravelias realize the dangerous precedent he will be setting if this motion should pass?

By excluding minority representation from a governing body, Maravelias is directly attacking those minority communities. This is dangerous behavior because without this representation, minority needs would not be met.

Maravelias obviously has a limited, if any understanding of the needs of minority communities and their representation. This is demonstrated by his argument, and, therefore, he destroys any credibility he had in sponsoring such a motion.

The LBGA, as well as minority communities need their point of view represented on the Board through appointed seats to ensure that the Board and its policies make the Campus Center/Student Union a safe and comfortable environment for all that use it.

Out of the closet and fighting back

When most hear the words "gay-basher" and "homophobe," certain images come to mind. We see white sheets, roving gangs and heavy boots. We see the weapons, the bats, the blade. We hear the language, and the screams. We see the blood, and smell the vomit. We see this in the street, in the city.

We see the sensationalized aspect of the violence, the hideous atrocities that desensitize us to the psychological brutality next door — such as this letter that but a few days ago was posted on my floor:

Owen Broadhurst

If you insist on "pushing" your homophobic empathy upon the residents of our floor, we will be encouraged to post such paraphernalia which will offend you. We have refrained from voicing our opinions concerning your supportive position on the rights of homosexuals. However, now that your views have been displayed on the walls of "our" lounge, we would like to take this opportunity to let you know that the expression of your irrational sexual behavior would be more appropriately displayed and performed behind closed doors.

— Concerned residents

The lounge over which this eloquent act of violence was posted is on my floor, not in some foreign neighborhood in a galaxy some unimaginable distance away. Moreover, this is no less an act of violence than that which I've already described. It is no less than psychological brutality to silence somebody through rhetoric.

Perhaps our "concerned residents" didn't realize that the posters to which they referred — advertising gay, lesbian and bisexual awareness week — were posted by the Resident Assistants on the floor, but it is clear that it would not have mattered.

In the narrow minds of these supercilious, if "concerned," residents, anyone who would dare to combat homophobic oppression must have homosexual tendencies.

In an effort to silence opinions which counter their "correct" ones, they will accuse those with different opinions of sexual deviance — as if their sexual orientation is the "norm."

I'm a bisexual, I'm out and I'm proud at this University. Perhaps "concerned residents" may despise me for that, but that is their problem. Perhaps some would see me dead for that, but the feeling is mutual. I'm tired of the continual harassment, the shredding of flyers and posters, the death threats.

I do not like to live in fear, to be told to go back into the closet or be buried in one, to be told I bring AIDS to the straight community.

What makes you think I deserve this? Why do you fear flyers? Do you fear you might change your mind if you see the truth? Do you still have a mind? Do you fear the truth? Do you fear the truth about yourself? Does this amuse you — this brutality? Have you been reassured of your masculinity, now? Phallus intact?

I'm out and proud, and intend to be free — free to breathe, free to live. I shall never let anyone take my positive sense of self away from me.

Never shall I return to the closet. You do not care how you've hurt me, scared me. You do not care how this has affected my grades. This will end.

Your psychological war must end. I'm tired of crying on friends' shoulders. I'm tired of beating my head against a wall. It's starting to bleed, and you want me to bleed. It's time for someone else to bleed.

I kicked my closet door wide open, and will not be shoved back in again. So please evolve. Your homophobia's your problem. If you try but fail to see me buried in the closet, I promise you, you will be buried, and not in a closet. I'm not alone.

From my friends and everyone I've known, I demand tolerance, acceptance, respect, and I demand that you celebrate sexuality, pride alongside me. To desire less is homophobia.

The doors must open. Today!

Republicans: bigoted, egotistical trash

When I came to this University two years ago, the definition of a Republican was very vague to me. All I knew was that they were more conservative, didn't agree with anything the Democrats said and couldn't win in Massachusetts. It wasn't until I arrived here that I realized that a Republican is a bigoted, egotistical moron whose only goal in life is his obsession to do whatever is necessary to make him look good in front of other Republicans.

Erik Sussbauer

This conclusion was easily arrived at by simply reading an issue of the Republican Club's waste of good trees, which they like to call the Minuteman. I admit that I do read it the very few (fortunately) times it is published. Although it has no concrete value to anyone except to those who get an ego trip from seeing their by-line, it is a fine piece of comedy. Letterman would love to get a hold of some of that stuff.

However, I was under the impression that much of the insulting they did was just exaggeration, to draw attention to themselves. That was until this semester, when I encountered a couple of members and found that it isn't exaggeration. It is sickening.

The first incident that led me to this conclusion came when I was at work, when out of nowhere a guy began discussing how he planned to vote "yes" on the CLT question. When presented with the question of tuition hikes, he responded by saying it didn't matter because he was in ROTC, so the Army was footing the bill.

The argument then switched to the effects this would have on the homeless. "Why should I give anything to the homeless? What have they done for me?" he asked.

Hello? Can people really be this uncaring for their fellow men and women? It's amazing how someone could be so selfish and demented. Of course, one must realize that before any of this started the man announced that he was in the Republican Club.

This, however, was nothing compared to an incident last Saturday night before a performance of Torch Song Trilogy. While waiting to enter the theater, a well-known Republican Club scum went up to a woman and whispered a few words. When he left, the woman was quite shaken up as she told us what he had said.

"Have you seen this play? It's about faggots. Don't you think that's sick?" he had said. There was more, but you get the point. This proves once again that this institution is nothing more than a haven for self-centered jerks who must continuously prove to themselves that they are on a higher level than the common individual — and will step on anyone to accomplish the task.

It's strange how people who are so interested in helping themselves can't actually think for themselves. They are force-fed this bigoted, elitist trash, then are told to press it upon everyone else. The statements I encountered does nothing but make people so disgusted that they will go against anything the Republicans do, even if some of their opinions do make some sense.

Perhaps someday these people will swallow a little pride and show some respect for other people and stick to issues facing all of us, but I doubt it. It's just easier to jeer everything in the Minuteman than to get a real life.

A little bit about Mark Adler, the person, the columnist

For those of you who read my columns regularly, I have something to say. The three of you may think that I'm a grumpy spoilsport with nothing nice to say about anything. Those of you who know me personally know this is true. But there may be some people out there who want to know what I do like and they may still be reading this column.

Mark B. Adler

I like staying up late at night. This means I do my laundry at 1:30 on a Tuesday morning. Since nobody is around, it's quick and I don't have to watch for thieves. By 3:30 I'm done, and it's time to go to Stop & Shop for my weekly supply of Oreos and lemonade. They don't play shopping-cart musak at four in the morning — mostly Zeppelin or Aerosmith. I race my cart, grand slalom, through the aisles to "Kasmir." Since I have a 9:30 class, I never really go to bed.

I like cats, but I don't like cat calendars, cat pictures, cat dolls or cat cartoons. I like real cats. I like my Apple IIe computer — it's old but I can still type these exciting editorials on it. I like growing my nails. I like getting angry about Collegian editorials. I like reading Asimov, the Bible and books on the U.S. Constitution. Go figure.

I like saying "Go figure." I use really old words and phrases like "flick" (movie), "specs" (glasses), "nifty," "swell," "neato," "gosh," "golly" and "oy vey." I picked up these expressions from friends. I like my friends — they're nifty-keen.

I like John Silber. He's so fun to hate, and I can't wait to blame everything on him when the revolution comes. I'm writing in Mario Cuomo again this year.

I like Voice Mail. Okay, I admit having to sign up for it and pay lots of dough rots. But as an RA, I got it free on the first day of classes. HA! Voice Mail is really neat-o. When I'm all alone at night, I can listen to a woman's computerized voice without calling a 900 party-line.

I really like being an RA, but I still can't figure out why. The pay is lousy; the bad reputation rots; and writing up people sucks. It makes them hate me, even though I didn't set up the keg in the classroom lounge... during class. I like to relax during a busy weekend with a few dozen write-ups — it's stimulating. But my floor is wicked cool and they know it. My staff is loads of fun and I get along quite well with my boss.

I like music. I need music in my room at all times, except when I'm sleeping. I have a cheap CD player that plays music of all kinds: Mozart's Requiem, Sinead O'Connor, Bobby McFerrin (the old Bobby McFerrin, of course), Laurie Anderson, Robert Plant, Boogie Down Productions and, especially, the Beatles. I love the Beatles. "If I Fell" is the coolest song.

I like eating. I love eating. But I'm very picky about what I eat. I don't like tomatoes, squash, ravioli or peaches. It's not because they taste bad. They just look weird. I don't eat weird-looking food. Why should I? It's going into my mouth. I want nice, fresh, crispy food like Cheerios, iceberg lettuce and peanut-butter Snickers.

I like reading "Doonesbury" when the Collegian feels like printing it. Gary Trudeau is a fresh voice of reason and humor, and he ridicules both conservatives and liberals. He makes sense to me, he's really funny. And best of all, he thinks the Beatles are nifty, too.

Friendly discussion is better than confrontation: Vote against GEO

The recent charges by the Graduate Employee Organization accusing the administration of disruption in the graduate employee union election only serve to prove that the GEO is not interested in running a fair campaign.

As a graduate employee, I have received countless pieces of literature over the last year extolling the virtues of the GEO. And yet when the administration tries to present their side it is called "disruption."

It is also evident that the GEO is not interested in presenting the facts and, unfortunately, the Collegian is helping.

The GEO claimed that the letter from the administration was mailed with the ballots, when in fact the letter was mailed separately.

By deliberately providing misinformation it is the GEO, not the administration, who is attempting to manipulate this election.

It has become quite clear that the GEO and District 65 UAW are not the group that we graduate employees should have representing us.

The leadership of GEO embraces what I call the "protest mentality." Given a choice between friendly, meaningful discussions and a strike, they will choose the strike every time.

Such an approach only serves to widen the rift between the administration and graduate employees, with the end result being that each side hardens its stance and refuses to compromise.

Friendly dialogue without the threat of a strike or protest, however, can and does lead to understanding of each other's view and an end result that is helpful to both sides.

If GEO is elected to represent us, we can only expect a long series of strikes and protests, while the University is destroyed by the budget disaster.

The administration's offer of non-affiliated representation is a way to achieve advances while at the same time working with the administration to save the University.

I urge you to vote "no" in this election. As graduate employees, we clearly need representation. The GEO and District 65/UAW are not the groups who should represent us.

'No' on Question 3, 'yes' on future

Lurking behind question three on the November ballot is the question of government's role in everyday life. Businesses and the wealthy have benefited for 10 years with changes in the tax code.

Ironically, it was Ronald Reagan who ran on a 'Government is the problem' platform, and the cut services boosted the Pentagon and left the American people with a debt we're still paying for.

Letting the rich off the hook helped to contribute to Massachusetts' financial mess. The chief proponent of question three, Barbara Anderson, says its passage will bring a necessary 'chaos' to state government. I say we have had more than enough.

The fact is that the wealthy sponsors of question three have exploited public resentment of state waste to protect their own vested interests. The wealthy don't fret about cutbacks in state services because they use private services. If question three passes, here's what the rest of us will have to confront.

Question three would force state tax code to revert to the 1988 level. This translates into cuts of at least 31 percent in police and fire protection, education, human services, public safety and construction. It will mean, as Massachusetts grapples with the recession, the services we need will be missing.

'No' on 3, 'yes' to Weld

On Nov. 6, our fate as UMass students will be decided. This is the day when we should all go to the polls and vote. Why?

Well, just imagine this worst-case scenario: John Silber gets elected, and question three passes. State colleges and universities will have their tuition tripled, under Silber's plan, and will suffer under question three.

If it happens, many UMass students can kiss a future goodbye.

So, let's go out there and vote! Okay, who's going to be our next governor? Is it going to be John "Triple-Tuition" Silber, or William "I-Think-Question-3-Is-A-Swell-Idea" Weld? Either way, UMass and other state schools could get hurt.

If we vote "no" on question three there is nothing to fear if Weld becomes governor. We can't vote "no" on Silber's plan, so just don't vote for him. I, as a Democrat, am voting for Weld. I urge you to do the same.

Don't allow Nov. 6 to be the day when your parents call up and say, "We can't afford the tuition increase. You're going to have to think about other schools."

You can stay here at UMass. Just vote "no" on question three, vote for Weld. Do not allow the worst-case scenario to happen.

Duffey alienating the community

America's capitalistic society is based on a hunger for a better lifestyle. We are taught early on that it is a good thing to work hard so we can have more. This seems to have been forgotten by John Silber and our President-Chancellor Duffey.

On Thursday, Oct. 11, Collegian article said that Duffey supports Silber's proposal of a $5,000 tuition increase. Duffey claimed that this is not a "Silber Shocker" but a means of providing "equity and justice."

Silber said the "increased tuition they (students who could afford it) pay could be used either for academic enrichment or to provide financial aid to students who come from poorer families." Our hard-working families should not be forced to take the brunt of overspending by our state and University.

The Silber-Duffey approach is one that says, if you drive a nice car or take a vacation, you are the bad guy. Many of the families with "substantial incomes" will be forced to give up what they have worked so hard for because they have to pay an unfair portion of the tuition of others.

The cost of tuition should be distributed equally in the Commonwealth and not put only on the shoulders of those who can afford to have their children go to a state school.

This would not be the case under the Silber plan. This is not "equity" or "justice" as Duffey so eloquently spoke of; this is an unfair burden on the middle class.

Duffey does not seem sympathetic of the plight of the middle class family. Duffey said parents are obligated to pay for their children's education. He said, "I will do everything in my power to make them [parents] take their responsibilities."

I fear Duffey has become so arrogant he believes he has power not only over students, but over their parents as well. I fear he is oblivious to how many students who are not of typical college age and are unable to go to their parents for financial assistance.

I suggest Duffey implement a fee to pay for a public relations team before he alienates the entire UMass community myself is how does William Weld expect to raise money for the state? What kind of a tax plan does he have for Massachusetts? Is he really going to make a difference in higher education? Is he going to chase insurance fraud criminals and make them pay back the money? Good luck, it worked once, maybe it will work again.

Both Gov. candidates stink

I don't believe that any one of the candidates running for the governor's position is qualified for the job. Massachusetts is in its worst fiscal crisis, and no one is going to pay for it more than the students.

UMass students are starting to feel the effects of what the budget cuts are doing to them. Every semester we lose classes because there is no budget to pay the professors. Programs are being eliminated due to the latest cuts in higher education. Students have to change major because courses are being cancelled.

The two candidates that won the primary for the gubernatorial race, John Silber and William Weld have never been in office. I never trusted Dukakis; that's why I didn't vote for him when he ran for President.

One question that I am really asking

Who is John Silber? What credentials does he bring to the Statehouse?

"Like Halley's comet, he came around the corner at the right time, to the right place. If he were a car, he would have no reverse, just about six forward speeches (Boston Sunday Globe, Sept. 23)."

Great! We have Rambo in the Statehouse.

Tactics deceitful

We oppose the tactic used by the Office of the Chancellor in sending a letter to every graduate student and graduate employee in which his office pressures all eligible voters in the issue of the unionization of the Graduate Employee Organization to vote against GEO's unionization.

Not only is this letter, dated Oct. 25, replete with deceitful information, but it also directly violates item 7 on the first page of the election agreement drafted on May 16, 1990. This agreement was signed and accepted by the administration.

It is appalling that the administration actually believes and trusts that a graduate student of this University might be swayed by the arguments posed in the abovementioned letter.

Nevertheless, the attempt is a violation of a signed agreement and serves to further demonstrate the critical need for the unionization of GEO.

'None of the above'

I'm sorry I cannot vote for Marjorie Clapprood on Election Day because a vote for her is a vote for John Silber. My vote instead will be for NOTA (None of the Above), the pro-democracy choice.

Bill Weld is a Republican Reaganite. Silber is a Democrat Reaganite. No difference there.

Weld's support of question three contradicts any lip service he offers for women's rights, civil rights and economically disadvantaged people. Question three discriminates against people who are vulnerable in the state and exacerbates Massachusetts' financial chaos.

Silber opposes question three out of political expediency. He is consistently against women's rights, civil rights, gay and lesbian rights, disabled rights, the poor... Silber is against people.

Both are millionaires.

When it is so clear that we cannot afford the rich, why do we let millionaires run the state and the country? To qualify as a democracy, a voter needs a choice. I encourage Clapprood and everyone to join me in voting for pro-democracy. Write in NOTA, on your ballot on Nov. 6.

CALVIN AND HOBBES
By BILL WATTERSON

ON THE ONE HAND, IT'S A GOOD SIGN FOR US ARTISTS THAT, IN THIS AGE OF VISUAL BOMBARDMENT FROM ALL MEDIA, A SIMPLE DRAWING CAN PROVOKE AND SHOCK VIEWERS. IT CONFIRMS THAT IMAGES STILL HAVE POWER
ON THE OTHER HAND, MY TEACHER'S REACTIONARY GRADING SHOWS THAT OUR SOCIETY IS CULTURALLY ILLITERATE AND THAT MANY PEOPLE CAN'T TELL GOOD ART FROM A HOLE IN THE GROUND
THIS DRAWING I DID OBVIOUSLY CHALLENGES THE KNOW NOTHING COMPLACENCY OF THOSE WHO PREFER SAFE, PREDIGESTED, BUCOLIC GENRE SCENES
MY "C-" FIRMLY ESTABLISHES ME ON THE CUTTING EDGE OF THE AVANT GARDE
DON'T YOU HAVE TO WEAR SILLY CLOTHES THEN?

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A bank statement or cellular may worry you. Check into it. A child does you proud. Find a meaningful way to reward this youngster. A financial project begins to show higher profits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Getting involved in a community project could prove quite enjoyable. You need to educate more. News from a loved one boosts your spirits. Look to your elders for helpful advice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Looking for romance is a waste of time today. It happens. It will fall into your lap. Do not be afraid to say no when you know you are in the right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone's comments could harm your reputation. Demand that this person come up with proof. Spend the evening relaxing. Get together with old friends or read a good book.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A fear that your luck is running out may slow you down. Stop being so superstitious - hard work will pull you through! Meet a ticklish situation head-on -- and be honest. Postpone romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 3-Sept. 22): A simple misunderstanding can be cleared up with a single phone call. Your interest in science is stimulated by something you read today. Children will do a lot to brighten your evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your creative talents enhance your reputation with those you meet. Mix business with pleasure where you can. Take the benefits of your vivid imagination and hide your feelings from mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pressure may lead you to do something that is not in your best interests. Check documents regarding children's welfare. Overcoming a minor mistake now could help fill future problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend may seek your counsel. Encourage this person to find the answer in his own heart. A visit from afar could make certain demands on you. Set rules but be polite.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-awaited phone call will relieve your concerns. A complicated family situation can be quickly straightened out if everyone refrains from making suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be careful where you put your keys, mail or money. Expect a surprise from a conservative friend who is about to make big changes. Do not try to limit a personal relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be prepared to do some sleuthing. Asking questions will help you understand a new friend. A feisty young person attracts new attention at work. Avoid trying to force an issue with a relative.

ball duty, newcomer Dee Brown, and the always improving Reggie Lewis, the Celtics look to do what they haven't done since the days of Tiny Archibald – RUN!

John Bagley, the man who looks more like someone who would watch a basketball game with a 12-pack rather than actually step out onto a court, will most likely start the season on injured reserve. Thank the man upstairs for that. Bagley, or should I say 'stone hands,' is one player the Celts don't need.

Question: Will the Celtics go all the way?

Answer: No. Not this year, not next year, not – well, maybe in '93.

Prediction: Portland Trailblazers – against the rest of the league. (I'll start taking bets now, and I'll tell you why as the season rolls on.)

Men's soccer stops Fairfield, 6-1

In season finale, team breaks 13-game winless streak

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

No, it wasn't a title game, and the opposition wasn't the Argentinian National team, but after 13 games without a win, any win will do.

Randy Jacobs scored three goals and assisted on two more, as the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team defeated Fairfield 6-1 yesterday afternoon in Fairfield, Conn., in their last game of the season. The Minutemen finished their season 3-13-3.

Junior Tri-Captain Dan Lawrence scored one goal and assisted another in yesterday's 6-1 win at Fairfield. The victory, UMass' last game of the year, snapped a 13-game winless streak for the Minutemen. UMass finished ninth in the Atlantic-10 with a 1-5-2 conference mark, and ended the season 3-13-3 overall.

UMass' offense uncharacteristically put the game away in the first half, scoring two goals within two minutes midway through the first half. Ray Cuhna scored the first goal at 29:47 on an assist by Jacobs. Jacobs struck a minute later, with the assist going to Aaron Zandy.

Jacobs scored again just before the end of the first half. Assists were credited to both Cuhna and Darren Stone.

The Rams' only goal came 10 minutes into the second half, as Bregoan Vasquez-Gill scored unassisted.

The Minutemen closed the scoring with three second-half goals. Andrew Bird scored his third goal of the year midway through the half. Dan Lawrence and Jacobs both assisted on the score.

Jacobs completed the hat trick 13 minutes later. The freshman attacker broke in from midfield and slipped the ball past Fairfield goalie Andy Tennant.

Lawrence finished the scoring with nine minutes left in the game, drilling a 25-yard shot into the net.

Jon Gruber had three saves for the Minutemen, while Rams goalkeeper Tennant had two. The Minutemen outshot Fairfield 15-12.

A Last Look At the A-10: Massachusetts finished the season in ninth place in the Atlantic-10 Conference standings. Rutgers won the regular season title, clinching first place by beating UMass 3-0 last weekend.

The difference between UMass' offense and defense shows in the A-10's statistical leaders. Minuteman goalkeeper Steve Armenti is sixth among A-10 goalies with a 1.06 goals-against average. The Minutemen have only allowed 26 goals all year, four less than second-place Penn State.

The offense, however, finished with only 21 goals, and placed no players in the A-10's list of top scorers.

For the fourth straight year, Rutgers, Penn State, Temple and George Washington will face off against each other in the Atlantic-10 Tournament, held this weekend at Rutgers Stadium in Piscataway, N.J. The Scarlet Knights, ranked fourth in the nation, look like the class of the league, and should beat fourth-seeded George Washington. Meanwhile, No. 2 Penn State gets another crack at third-seeded Temple. Look for Rutgers to revenge their only conference loss of the year and beat Penn St. for the title, and get the automatic NCAA Tournament bid.

Now is the time for hoop talk, predictions

Nike is at it again with a new line of commercials. First it was Mars, then it was Bo, and now it's Super Dave in the lineup for some more relief. If you're talking commercials, Nike knows.

If you haven't seen any of these commercials, then you haven't been watching your sporting events. They run about every two or three commercial breaks and are, perhaps, the best on the tube.

Mars Blackman and Michael Jordan started off the festivities with 'Money, it's got to be the shoes!' or, my personal favorite, the 'Bird's eye view.' Next was the long Bo Jackson string of cross trainer ads. These are the the commercials where Bo knows everything except Diddley, or does he know that now, too?

Finally, the latest in the Nike string, is the Super Dave gadgets versus the lightest Nike hoop shoe on the market today. Complete with laugh track and announcer, Dave goes through the roof and breaks his face on the backboard. As the commercial goes, 'You decide, the new Nike Air, or a broken face?' Take the Nike option.

Other companies cannot compete with Nike when it comes to TV ads. In other words, they don't know.

LA Gear has unstoppable Joe Montana on their lineup card and, until he retired, they had Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. Kareem's commercials were as lame as his last couple of years in the pros, and the only reason Montana is so unstoppable is that nobody can get through his offensive line to put a bone crushing stomp on him.

But enough about commercials and the hype of the players. I just needed to get that off my chest.

The real reason I am in this edition of the Collegian is to talk a bit about the upcoming NBA hoop season. (OK, that wasn't a great segue, but it's my column and I do what I do, so live with it.)

For you Boston fans, myself included, the only thing we have to look forward to is a running Celtic team. With guards Brian Shaw, back from his overseas wimp

Crews wrap up season, head into winter workouts

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

The men's and women's varsity eight boats wrapped up their fall schedule last weekend in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Schuylkill River Regatta.

Official times and places have yet to be made available to boats placing below the top three, but both coaches are pleased with their crews' performances.

"The teams seem to really like that course," said men's coach Dave Trond. "I'm happy with the weekend, all crews saved their best rows for last.

Fifty-nine boats competed in the men's race, whereas 49 entered the women's race. Trond said his unofficial finishing time for the men was 13½ minutes, a full minute behind the time of the finishing boat, the Pennsylvania Athletic Club.

The Penn AC also took first this year at the Head-of-the-Charles Regatta, raced Oct. 20. Trond said the crew was 1:20 behind the Penn AC at the Charles, and that he was pleased with the improved time.

The team competed without senior Rich Scannel, who has been stricken with mononucleosis and is currently recovering. Sophomore Steve Casco was summoned from the JV boat to help out the varsity in Philly. Trond said Scannel probably will not workout vigorously until after Christmas break.

Last year, the women's team placed 16th out of about the same number of participants as this year, and the men finished 19th.

A stroke and cox, one of 57 men's heavyweight eights competing in Philadelphia, Pa., vies for position at the Head-of-the-Schuylkill Regatta last weekend.

"It was a beautiful day," Trond said of this year's competition.

"From what I saw of the women's race, they looked a whole lot better than they did in Boston [at the Charles]," Trond added.

"They held onto a Navy crew," said women's varsity coach Deb Fine. "They were real excited about that."

Trond took both the men's and women's varsity eights to the Philly regatta, while Fine took the men's and women's JV and novice boats to Dartmouth to compete there.

The women's JV placed 6th of eight, beating Amherst College's varsity and New Hampshire's JV boats. UNH varsity, Boston University varsity, Vermont varsity, Dartmouth varsity and a Dartmouth-UNH combined JV boat placed, in that order. Because of the varsity competition, Fine said that explained the boat's placing, but their time was competitive.

The men's JV finished 4th of nine. In Casco's place in the boat, junior Christian Jaeger rowed. A transfer from Pacific Lutheran [Tacoma, Wash.] last year, this is Jeager's first year competing at UMass.

"It's good way to go into winter training, a nice way to wrap up the season," Fine said of the crews that competed at Dartmouth.

Unfortunately, the men's novice boats did not place as well. Out of 13, the crews finished 10th, 11th and 13th.

But the season has ended only for the varsity boats. Freshman/novice competition will continue until Nov. 10.

This Saturday a Halloween Regatta will be held at Wellesley College in Middletown, Conn. Over 30 schools will participate from all over New England. UMass will send three men's and three women's boats to the regatta.

The novice final regatta will be an informal invitational hosted by UMass on the Connecticut River. Springfield and Amherst Colleges will be invited Nov. 10.

Announcing: Poor Righteous Teachers and D-Nice at the S.U.B.

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

In North Trenton, N.J., three young men of African descent grew up together in the Donnelly Homes, a low-income housing project, where they shared a love for music and an interest in the Afrocentric teachings of Islam. Working in a basement studio on a low budget, using whatever donated equipment they could get their hands on, Wise Intelligent, Culture Freedom and DJ Father Shaheed spawned the now extremely popular, Poor Righteous Teachers, a rap trio whose blend of articulation, knowledge and sound collage make them one of the most listenable hip-hop creations to hit the scene in a long while.

But why should you pay extra special attention to them? After all, political rap groups come a dime a dozen these days. Educators such as Public Enemy, Boogie Down Productions and Urban Dance Squad have roamed in this terrain before. Poor Righteous Teachers are unique in the respect that their product is homemade from the heart, without shoving it down your throat, and free of political bias.

"The name is given only to those in the ghetto who gain what is known to us as knowledge of self," explains Wise Intelligent. "You see, poor is the condition in which ghetto children live until getting knowledge of themselves, which along with it brings righteousness and the ability to teach knowledge of self."

Of course, they've experienced their share of criticism, and have come under scrutiny by those who have a difficult time understanding the position of the African American.

"Poor Righteous Teachers speaking of what was spoken in their Bible/and now they're callin' me a racist?/But why must I be a racist for turning people on to the truth?" Wise raps in his song Words For The Wise.

He adds, "Ghetto people are so into this Bible, so dependent on it to answer their problems, they're forgetting about the power they naturally possess."

Now, more than ever, is there such a great need for rap trios such as P.R.T., not to cram militant politics down one's throat. The more intelligible place to start is to make African Americans aware of who they are, what they can achieve, to get off of their asses, do something and to stop feeling sorry for themselves. P.R.T are going to rock this message, and rock the house tomorrow night.

What many people did not realize throughout the existence of Boogie Down Productions is that much of the music was not created solely by the prolific KRS-ONE, but that D-Nice instituted many of their innovative sounds. With Call Me D-Nice, that will soon be evident to all who listen.

"I didn't really get too political," says D-Nice. "I didn't touch on too much social commentary because I wasn't raised that way."

But still he's not the generic L.L. Cool J. ego-and-gold-chain rapper who couldn't give a damn about Africa, her people and her struggles.

D-Nice appears to be a comfortable urban chronicler, generally devising a hard-hitting hardcore hip-hop album. He's also the opening act for Poor Righteous Teachers, and he proves to be a great dictator for the foot thumpin' youth that should attend this great bill.

Poor Righteous Teachers and D-Nice will be appearing at the Student Union Ballroom on Friday, Nov. 2. Showtime is 8 p.m. The show is sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Rock-n-roll with a conscience

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

When Ron DeHart was a Buddhist monk, he came upon a revelation.

He noticed that conscious music or music that encouraged inquiry and meditation always tended to be a new age-like fusion of folk and jazz. It just wasn't his jug of tea. He found listening to old time rock-n-roll and country more gratifying. So, he set out on a quest to combine Buddhist concepts with the music he liked.

He has found fulfillment of his quest with Live Dirty Die Clean.

The group formed back in May, when DeHart, dissatisfied with the acoustic country band he was in at the time, found UMass student and guitarist Adam Dellabarre. They added bassist Matt Hickler, his brother Sam — who plays keyboards and a drummer to make their line-up complete.

"We all enjoy that rock-a-billy, old time rock-n-roll sound. I do all of the writing. I think lyrically I tend to lean more toward the introspective side more perhaps than the band does. But all of us enjoy the same musical roots," DeHart said.

"What we call this is conscious rock-a-billy," he added. "It takes those old time progressions that I like and combines them with lyrics that foster inquiry or makes one wonder: 'What the hell is this life about anyway?' You can be conscious and still have a good time."

DeHart was able to get the group a deal on Della Records, on which they released a six-song recording entitled Dharma Boogie. The release has been very successful in our happy Valley, listed for several weeks as one of the best-selling local albums in the Valley Advocate. DeHart said that he is happy with this success.

"It's very gratifying. It makes me feel that the rock-a-billy style isn't just for the good old boy crowd. It can touch everyone," he explained.

One of DeHart's favorite tracks of the release, personally, not musically, is "Don't Mean a Thing," which was inspired by his grandfather.

"He was sitting in a chair and I was sitting next to him. I said, 'Grandpa, you know I've always thought of you as my teacher and I've always looked up to you. Now you're dying. Is there anything you want to tell me or anything you want to add before you go away?' He shook his head yes and said, 'It's all a crock,'" DeHart said. "I don't exactly know what that means but then I don't know what the song means exactly either."

People may think it farcical that a band tries to combine danceable rock-n-roll with serious minded lyrics, but DeHart claimed, "You can talk about art and creating and all of that is wonderful, but it feels so good to be up there and see people dancing and moving and really liking the music."

Live Dirty Die Clean will play at UMass in the Hatch on Thursday at 9 p.m. They will also play Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton on Saturday.

Holly Near plays the FAC Friday

Holly Near will be performing at the Fine Arts Center tomorrow night in a concert entitled "Unity, there's enough love and dignity to go all the way around."

A human rights activist in every sense of the word, Near will appear with pianist John Bucchino and an interpreter for the hearing impaired, Ariel Hall.

Once told by a music industry representative that she would never make it as a pop star because her voice was not "submissive enough" — since this was never a goal in her life — Near made a successful career and laid the groundwork for women to sing however they chose.

Her passions are clear in her music: political oppression and the swift and incalculable changes in today's world. Near's latest album Singer in the Storm closes with "We Dance Alone," a riveting English/Spanish duet of Sting's original.

In 1971, she joined Jane Fonda and Donald Sutherland for "Free the Army," an anti-war show, and worked throughout the 70s for peace in Indochina.

Holly Near appears at the Fine Arts Center tomorrow night at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 with a UMass ID and $10 for the general public. Today at 5:30, Near will be signing her new book at Food for Thought Bookstore, North Pleasant St., Amherst.

People learn 'ignorance and misinformation' in childhood

Singer/Activist Holly Near spoke to an audience of more than 300 people last night as the keynote speaker for BGLAD — Bisexual, Gay, Lesbian Awareness Days.

The talk, entitled, "The Courage to Be: Living Our Visions," co-sponsored by the the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns, the Everywomen's Center, and Hillel.

Near spoke of how people write hate-filled graffiti about those they think are the easiest targets; specifically, those who they perceive as different and at the same time frighteningly similar — women, gays, lesbians, bisexuals, people of color, Jews.

"We are full of the ignorance and misinformation that we have been fed from childhood," said Near. People are continually changing in small ways, she said. As a student in the late 60s at UCLA, Near watched a group of students hold weekly silent vigils in protest of the Vietnam War. When she finally decided to join them after a few weeks, she was amazed at how empowered she felt from that act.

Near pondered over why a particular man she knew was sexist.

She pointed out that people don't change quickly. She also noted that just because people are conscious of one form of oppression, doesn't mean that they automatically become aware of all oppression.

Prejudice in its many forms — racism, sexism, heterosexism — comes from a lack of confidence and self esteem in one's self. "As long as you are racist, you deny yourself the beauty of people of color. As long as you are heterosexist, you deny yourself the opportunity to experience gay, lesbian and bisexual culture," said Near.

"In this instant coffee generation, if we organize around an issue, we want instant gratification for our efforts...but

Umina blocked by system

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Independent gubernatorial candidate Len Umina had to go to court so his campaign could have access to the public which he said has been denied to him through the corrupt political majority party system in Massachusetts.

Umina, a University of Massachusetts alumni, has recently filed suit against two network Boston television stations, the Boston Globe, Boston Herald and gubernatorial candidates William Weld and John Silber for excluding him from the gubernatorial debates.

Umina said he belongs to the Independent High Tech party, which is "a group of professionals and middle-class executives who have decided to take over the state since political parties are the state's problem."

Although Umina said he has debated both Silber and Weld before, he said the state system prevents him from publicly campaigning because he opposes special interest groups and party patronage. He said major media excludes him because he cannot afford to pay $8,000 per minute for a prime-time political commercials like Silber and Weld can.

"My party [the Independent High Technology party] is composed of middle class executives who are Jeffersonians who want to restore the function of the government to the people," he said.

He said his Jeffersonian ethics are to let everyone know what the government is doing by making the

Dissection hotline hopes to cure frog in your throat

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

When Pat Graham discovered she could help students face ethical dilemmas about dissection in their science classes, she jumped at the chance.

Graham last year established 1-800-922-FROG as the "dissection hotline," through the Animal Legal Defense Fund. Callers are offered a pamphlet titled, "Objecting to Dissection," suggestions on alternatives to dissection, and in some cases, legal assistance.

"We recommend the student get clear on what they want, approach a professor in a non-confrontational manner, and offer alternatives," she said. Alternatives include computer simulators, diagrams, videotapes, and research papers, she said.

The hotline receives about 1,000 calls per month from students throughout the nation. Approximately one-third of these calls are from college students.

Graham said she developed the idea for the hotline in 1987 after her daughter Jenifer refused to dissect a frog in her high school biology class.

"If a professor forces a student to go against their ethical beliefs for a grade, then what are we teaching them?" she said.

Several professors in the zoology department at the University of Massachusetts said they would not force a student to dissect.

Judy Goodenough, director of the introductory laboratories, said, "Students can object, but if it's part of the course requirement and they know that before they sign up, they have the option of not taking the course."

Approximately 450 students are enrolled in the two-semester course, in which students are asked to dissect rats. UMass obtains the animals from nationwide supply houses, and the class uses about 390 rats.

Marjorie Coombs, who is an associate professor, teaches comparative vertebrate anatomy, in which approximately 100 students dissect dogfish sharks and ranch minks, which are also obtained from national supply houses, she said.

BOG motion to eliminate LBGA seats dies

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

Last week's proposed motion to eliminate the LBGA seats from the Board of Governors was not discussed at tonight's Board meeting.

Governor Laura Silver, an LBGA representative, in an interview after the meeting said that according to Robert's Rules of Order the motion is now dead because it was not discussed the first meeting after it was tabled.

The proposal will have to be resubmitted to the board before it can be considered again, a process that takes one week.

"I feel this demonstrates that any attempt to get rid of us will not work," said Governor Chris Thomas, LBGA representative.

Governor Ed Corrigan, a founder of the motion said he choose not to bring it up last night because, "the BOG does not need the negative publicity this proposal generates right now."

"It can come up at any meeting however, but it won't come up until the time is right," said Corrigan.

He said the time would be right when the board had less pressing business to attend to.

Governor Ted Maravelias interjected the time would be right "whenever we've got the votes."

In other BOG business:

- The board voted unanimously to petition the Campus Center Administration to give the Union Video Center lounge space which is currently called the Commuter Lounge (SU 218). The UVC would use this space as a studio.

"Right now no one has a claim to this space. Originally it was supposed to have a fridge and a microwave to give the commuters a feeling of home on campus, but this never happened," said Chairwoman Sue Gordon. The Commuter Lounge has never had a microwave or a fridge.

According to Gordon, although the space was called the Commuter Lounge and was designed to be a place for commuters to go, line-item accounts in the budget computer accessible throughout the state. He said Jefferson had included the public in all political processes by using the printing press to disperse information on all aspects of the government's economic decisions.

If the budget is accessible to all people, Umina said as more people are participating in the political process, then more waste will be eliminated from legislative spending without raising taxes.

Umina estimated a statewide computer system enabling access to the budget would cost $50 million, but the amount of waste that could be eliminated through more public participation versus party monopoly would be more than twice the amount to implement the system.

Umina supports the tax rollback petition because the level of taxation in Massachusetts is scaring away the middle class workers. Since he is not of a majority party, he said he could easily cut the middle bureaucracy of the state government created by patronage without cutting education and human services.

Umina, who graduated in 1974, said he believes that public higher education should be free and is a fundamental part of the economy. He said a plan could be implemented to give all high school students one year of free public higher education for every year they attend a public high school. In this manner out-of-state people could not take advantage of a free public higher education system.

Umina said he is pro-life and conservative on most social issues, but left the Republican party because the members considered him a "Populist."

that is not necessarily the way change happens."

A mother and father went to a Holly Near concert at their daughter's request. After the show, they came up to her and told her that they almost disowned their daughter, because they were so shocked when she came out to them as a lesbian. "Seeing gay couples, lesbian couples, straight couples, young and old people, all together having a good time that night had given them some information that helped them understand their daughter," said Near.

A male friend who was trying to deal with his own homophobia, asked her for some help. Years before when he had been in jail, he had been approached by men trying to rape him. Near told him that the men who are gay in prison are the quiet ones, the ones that hope they will make it through the night without becoming the victims of heterosexual men who use them in place of women.

Near said that sometimes the hardest thing for people to do is to get to a place where they can ask for other people to help to them educate themselves around issues of oppression. "Maybe we will be the generation that asks for help."

Prof: Weld may overcome

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

John Silber remains ahead of William Weld today on the gubernatorial campaign trail, but Weld may get a surge of support over the weekend, according to a political media analyst.

Ralph Whitehead, Jr., a professor of journalism at the University of Massachusetts who specializes in campaign critiques, said the large television audience who watched the two candidates debate last Tuesday night may have been turned off by Silber's temperament and demeanor.

He said the debates have had more of an impact on voters' opinions than election coverage by the media.

"Apparently since the TV audience for the debate was so large, many people, who were exposed to Silber for the first time, didn't like what they saw," he said.

Weld's performance in the debate also "left a lot to be desired," he said. He said it is hard to decide what are Weld's best points because he has yet to articulate them. Weld's downfall may be his continuing support of the tax rollback question although public opinion has been turning away from question three in the past month, he said.

"Weld hasn't showed much political prudence in handcuffing himself to the CLT petition," he said. "Weld's strongest suit is that he seems like a reasonable man."

As Weld has embraced the tax rollback throughout his campaign, Silber has attacked the ballot question in a manner that may damage Weld's campaign more than the actual passage of the petition, he said.

"Although Weld has pulled his punches on CLT, Silber has developed his critique of CLT that suggests challenges to Weld's intellectual bona fides," he said.

The voter support of the CLT petition could increase quickly over the weekend, although its passage is presently losing favor in the polls, he said. It is more difficult to project whether or not a ballot question will pass than whether a political candidate will win because voters are not able to contrive personal feelings on an idea like they can perceive a person.

"Voters make judgements about people which are stable over time," he said. "Ballot questions are ideas and assertions to which people don't develop a personal attachment and can change their opinion about a ballot question very quickly."

Although people were angry when voting in the primary, he said the defining mood of the general election will be confusion. He said the candidates and questions on the ballot are composed like "a Chinese menu," and voters will have to choose the combination which suits them the best.

"I don't think the theme [of the general election] will be 'throw out the bums' since about 80 percent of all the anger of the primary was directed at Michael Dukakis," he said.

Expert: Iraq won't have nuclear arms for 10 years

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

Should the current Gulf Crisis escalate into war, the United States would not have to fear a nuclear attack from Iraq, according to a noted nuclear weapons specialist.

Leonard Spector, speaking to an audience at Amherst College last night, said that currently Iraq does not have the capabilities to produce any nuclear weapons.

"Israel is the only country in the Middle East that can put nuclear weapons to use," he said. "Our one saving grace is that it would take a Third World country, like Iraq, about a decade to build a nuclear bomb."

Spector said he sees the role of the United States in the Gulf Crisis as an important test of the nuclear age, because they are in a direct conflict with a non-nuclear country.

"Currently, the United States is in an agreement that prohibits it from using nuclear weapons against non-nuclear states," states Spector. "And Iraq is a non-nuclear state."

Spector, who works with the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, believes that the risks of the nuclear age lie in other countries that have developed the bomb.

"The risk of nuclear war between India and Pakistan over the territory of Kashmir, is greater than the possibility of a nuclear war between the U.S. and Iraq," said Spector.

Pakistan, India, South Africa, and Israel all possess and have tested nuclear weapons, while other countries, such as Argentina and Brazil, are obtaining the capabilities which would enable them to produce the bomb.

The International Atomic Energy Agency, which was established in 1957, has been a driving force in checking nuclear facilities around the world. The aim of this organization is to hinder the development of the bomb by countries such as Iraq. The only other countries able to manufacture nuclear weapons are the United States, France, England, the Soviet Union, and China.

Spector said that the organization has been fairly successful in containing the illegal manufacturing of nuclear weapons. It has checked 98 percent of the nuclear facilities in the world.

The author of a new book entitled "Nuclear Ambitions," Spector believes that prospects for change in our nuclear future are still alive.

According to Spector, for some countries like Pakistan, the nuclear missiles assume a role of survival from outside attack.

"Our goal must be to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to other Third World countries," he said. "If Saddam Hussein had access to nuclear missles, the United States and the surrounding Arab nations would be in a much more vulnerable position."

Anti-war official gives options to Mideast war

By JOSEPH M. MONTAGNA
Collegian Correspondent

With the possibility of war increasing in the Middle East, the Bush administration must realize there are other solutions available, according to an American Friends Service Committee representative.

Brewster Grace, speaking at Smith College last night, gave an insider's report of the situation in the Persian Gulf and stressed war is not an option.

Recently returning from the Middle East, he views the present crisis as a result of miscalculations and frustrations which can be reversed through diplomatic solutions.

AFSC, the sponsor of the lecture, is a Western Massachusetts organization against U.S. military involvement.

The AFSC announced civil disobedience events planned at Westover Air Force Base in the near future.

Deferred salary plan illegal, officials say

By GAYLE LONG

Administrators at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday it would be illegal for them to agree to President-Chancellor Duffey's proposal for a deferred salary payment plan offered as an alternative to a five-day furlough plan.

Both plans were offered as a means to cope with the most recent 4 percent across-the-board cut to the University.

The deferred salary payment plan would allow the administration to take a loan from employees now, but would entitle employees to reimbursement once the University was on stronger fiscal standing.

Karin Sherbin, University spokesperson, said Duffey learned the loan plan was unacceptable from the Office of Employee Relations.

The office informed Duffey that the Board of Regents,

POWER sparked to fight for women's rights

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

A frequent insistence by many people is: "Give me space; I need room." And the frequent response to that cry is: "What do you mean?"

At the University of Massachusetts, one organization has responded differently.

What was once the UMass chapter of the National Organization of Women has evolved into the Progressive Organization of Women's Rights — only to be found at the UMass campus, touts Gina Gombar, POWER's president.

NOW, vying for for registered student organization status last fall, approached a subcommittee of the Campus Center Board of Governors and were advised that affiliation with a nationally recognized organization might discourage the group from being student-run.

Gombar said they then decided to adopt a new name. Simultaneously splitting from the main group, absolving them of steep dues and any responsibility to the nationals they became POWER. This enabled them to focus on student concerns and an opportunity for students who could not afford the membership fee to join.

But, there have been added responsibilities, Gombar reports.

"Since there is no longer a [pro-choice RSO], their duties, which might have been more equally distributed among the other RSOs, have tended to be handed to us."

Gombar explains that POWER functions in various capacities, primarily: working with state and national organizations for pro-choice, outreach work with Necessities/Neccessidades and the UMass Everywoman's Center, and issues of violence against women. Gombar states that, in conjunction with the current pro-life climate in the United States, they have been busy with much activity and foresee more in the near future.

Part of this action entails petitioning for an amendment to the Mass. Constitution as a safeguard to Mass. law should the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe v. Wade decision be overturned and abortion once again become a criminal act.

Gombar said POWER will be centering energy on the petitioning for this referendum question throughout the next few months, as there is a long process to be followed before the question can be brought to debate.

The amendment proposes that a woman should have the right to chose or refuse contraception or abortion.

POWER does have five officers, but has a non-traditional internal structure, Gombar said. "Basically, we do have officer positions, but the group is run collectively. We don't make decisions unless there is a group consensus. My role is mainly as facilitating [meetings], information and paperwork with [the Student Activities Office]."

"The [zoology department] has always operated on the premise that hands-on experience is important, not only to learn the parts of the body, but to learn the technique as well," Coombs said. She added that dissection is not required for the zoology major.

David Klingener, a professor who also teaches comparative vertebrate anatomy, as well as mammalogy, agreed that students are not forced to take classes which deal with dissection.

He added that while he does not disagree with animal rights activists, he said students should think about the implications.

He said, for example, "In veterinary schools, they teach surgical techniques by using dogs. Some students refuse to dissect. That means, if you have a vet that has had no experience [with dissection], your cat or dog will be their first."

it was never awarded to any one group.

The motion to allot this space to the UVC was suggested because the lounge was not being used. According to Governor Bill Hewitt, who recently surveyed the room, very few students came into the lounge.

● Program Council Coordinator Sean Linnane discussed charging $1-$2 admission to Comedy Night.

"In the financial situation we're in, I think it is important to raise money for programming, but I am concerned about how it will affect the attendance," Linnane said.

Because Comedy Night brings in a considerable amount of money in alcohol sales that might be lost if a charge were incurred, the board decided to research the matter more before making a decision. Charges would not start until next semester, if at all.

POWER

Membership in the group is close to 70 strong — contacts when there are events on campus, workshops, etc. — although meetings center around 10 to 15 core people, Gombar said, commenting she realizes this is true of most all campus organizations.

In time of fiscal crisis it seems no one goes untouched. POWER has recognized this and has taken on the task of dealing with, what they see as, disproportionate budget cuts at UMass levied on women and people of color.

Gombar offers as an example the formation of a coalition of University faculty, students and staff from the EWC working toward an acceptable settlement on the survival of the EWC.

Laura Cohen says she realizes there are women who haven't yet realized there are "women's issues" until they are confronted with pregnancy or violence against them until it stares them in the face. Partly for this reason, as well as to afford women a chance to join together with other women for a safe and comfortable environment, Cohen proposed a "Women's Space" time on Sundays in the POWER office.

"It doesn't have to be feminist issues [that we talk about]," Cohen said with an ominous voice. "It could be anything that they want to talk about. We encourage people to bring food, music, stories, anything — there is safe space there to talk or study, ... whatever."

She said it isn't completely formed yet, however. Meetings have begun and she is generally pleased with the way the semester is headed.

"I think once we get some posters up it'll work out great."

As far as the direction of the organization is concerned, Gombar states that both men and women are welcomed. Cohen said she thinks the group is definitely on the right track and says she is extremely pleased with the energy of those who have turned out for the meetings.

Last semester, POWER sponsored a "Walk-out for Choice" that centered on students voicing their pro-choice concerns and several men were extremely active in this event, Gombar said.

Also last spring, was a week of activities that raised $26,000 for Neccessities/Neccessidades. Gombar said there will be a similar fund-raiser next spring as well.

Disgusted with politics and myself

Preston P. Forman

To John, Bill and all those who cherish the democratic process, I want to apologize. I am ashamed for what I have done.

On Friday, I received my absentee ballot from my hometown. Since there was a little bit of time before the election to mail the ballot home, I decided to put off voting until Saturday.

In the brief 24 hours, I was going to carefully weigh the candidates stances and views, a cerebral action I have been trying to avoid since the beginning to this sad election process.

Saturday morning, after an English muffin laden with enough butter to call an ambulance, I slid the green ballot out of the carefully typed envelope. I unfolded the absentee list of candidates.

Like a movie, the surroundings of my living room blurred and faded away. I was alone staring at the ballot. In a trance, I punched box 3 for John Kerry, a man with faults but not a person trying to buy an election with cash out of his wallet.

Against my better beliefs, I voted for the local state senator that has been caught with his hands in the cookie jar by Boston area papers so many times that the man's figure should show so. He will probably do less damage in Boston than in my South Shore town.

I then breezed through the state offices of attorney general, secretary of state and auditor. These men seem competent for the jobs, although their role in government will probably never intrude on my life in the next four years.

I paused at the treasurer's race and voted for Joe Malone, for no better reason than he has run for so many state-wide offices and he deserves something. This probably raises the total Republicans I have voted for in two years to a half-dozen.

And then after rushing through the rest of the minor offices — county treasurer, clerk of courts and such — and voting politically correct to the six ballot questions, my mind unfogged and my eyes focused on the one race I had skipped over.

I looked at the three clusters of names and saw as much strength, leadership and potential as a soggy tuna sandwich. These people are meaningless and just a cut above irrelevant.

With the exception of John Silber's running mate Marjorie Clapprood (D-Sharon), passion, an essential element of leadership, is wholly missing from this race. Sadly, her passion is blocked by the repugnation of her beliefs.

Bill Weld and his running mate Paul Cellucci tax even charitable political analysis.

Weld claims that the Citizens for Limited Taxation initiative can produce a more efficient state government. Of course, this man has not yet visited the University of Massachusetts to see how effective this would be in practice.

And closer to home, none of the candidates look good for UMass, the highest priority on my election list.

I put my ballot in the mailbox Sunday afternoon without punching a hole for governor or lieutenant governor.

I am disgusted at my lack of fortitude, but I am more disgusted at the immature, irrelevant and stupid cast of characters placed before us.

The Editorial Desk is currently looking for an associate editor to serve during the remainder of the Fall semester, 1990.

A lot of time, energy and patience are required. You will be responsible for assisting the editor in doing layout, writing headlines, typing and choosing submissions for publication.

The position calls for working an average of 4 hours a day in the newsroom. A very flexible schedule is a must. It doesn't pay much ($20/week!), but the experience is invaluable.

Anyone interested can come down to the newsroom and pick up an application. For further information, ask to talk to Anna Regina Santiago.

GEO blasts $400 midyear fee hike

In response to the decision of the Trustees of the University of Massachusetts on Oct. 31, 1990 to increase the Curriculum Support Fee by $400 for the Spring 1991 semester:

● The Graduate Employee Organization regrets the decision. In the last year the mandatory graduate student fees have risen $468. This additional $400 increase seriously jeopardizes the accessibility of the University of Massachusetts. Through this increase, the mission of this University to render a public service has been put on the line.

● We are disturbed by the administration's determination to balance the University of Massachusetts' budget on the backs of the people that are least able to afford it, the undergraduate and graduate students.

● This fee increase represents a pay cut for graduate employees. As the only group of employees at the University of Massachusetts facing such pay cut, we propose a fee waiver for the full amount, $575, of the Spring Curriculum Support fee.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Sam Silverstein

A brief history of Notes from the Campus Center Basement: Craig Sandler founded the column in 1986; John Cassie inherited it in 1987; Nancy Klingener extorted it in 1988; David R. Mark was denied it in 1989; Peter Leon prolonged it last spring; Gayle Long avoided it all fall, and I've got it now. Motto: Careful what you wish for.

That is Jason Rabinowitz you've seen around campus. Rabinowitz spent last year in New York as a "political organizer," but is back to finish up a journalism degree, and plans to graduate this semester. Rabinowitz, like Ben and Jerry, McCartney and Lennon, and Laurel and Hardy, will be forever linked in my mind with W. Greg Rothman, with whom he waged an odd battle for the right to run the SGA throughout 1988-89. Remember those giddy days, pre-recession, when we had the energy to waste on such things?

The UMass Music Theatre Guild production of School House Rock on Wednesday night was a phenomenon.

First off, it was a great show. But a standing-room-only Student Union Ballroom, full of UMassties of every imaginable strain (and many singing along with every word), also proved that television, for better or for worse, is the common bond of our generation. Can there be anything else we all know so well as "Conjunction Junction (what's your function?)"

It's a shame ABC, or whoever owns the copyright, doesn't put together a soundtrack; Wednesday night proved they're sitting on a gold mine.

Oregon, where I spent the school year last year, is way ahead of us on conservation and recycling stuff (preach, preach). They have recycling stops on the highway, like we have rest stops here in Massachusetts. There's a metaphor there, somewhere.

It struck me Monday afternoon, anyway, as I was wading through a lecture hall full of newspaper, that though we don't have spotted owls, we can do a better job of not strewing Collegians around campus. The tradition at the University of Oregon is to put the campus paper, the Daily Emerald, back on top of the stack, which cuts down a ton on the amount of paper that is thrown away rather than recycled.

All Collegians collected from their distribution stacks at the end of the day are returned to our printer for recycling.

It looked for a moment there we'd finally found an issue we could all agree on. Who at this school could support cuts in the UMass budget, or a $5,000 tuition hike, right? Visions of 25,000 students together holding hands and singing the alma mater (yeah, we have an alma mater) outside Gov. Dukakis' office danced in my head.

Well, the last issue of the Minuteman burst that bubble. To go to UMass and still support the CLT petition is like paying a carpenter to take the roof off your house.

Halloween Day Collegian forgets power of language, responsibility

I am writing regarding the use of the word "bitch" in your cover article on Oct. 31 ("O'Brien calls O'Brien a 'classic bitch,'" Halloween issue). I am aware that this article was written in jest for the University community. I am also aware, however, that using sexist terminology to convey humor is not only sobering but hurtful.

Your paper has a responsibility to the college community. Included in this responsibility is an awareness of, and sensitivity to, social issues. We all need to be aware of and refrain from using language that is specifically designed to keep each other in the restrictive roles placed on us by an oppressive system.

"Bitch" is one such term, used to keep women from asserting themselves in a heavily competitive social atmosphere which is frequently dominated by men.

It seems that there are plenty of things in the world to laugh at without having to test the boundaries of such loaded issues. Given this, I ask your staff to be more aware of "catch words" and to choose less hurtful words to convey meaning.

Thank God Ted can take a joke

What I read in the Collegian on Oct. 31 was horrendous. Granted, the issue was supposed to be a "mock" type of newspaper, but you definitely went too far.

I know for a fact that a lot of students on this campus do not agree with what Ted Maravelias "preaches," but I will defend to the death his right to say it, and that he should not be subjected to the kind of treatment that he received in the Collegian.

It's a good thing that Ted can take a joke, and that he can pass it off as foolishness on your part. But do you honestly think that if you "mocked" the LBGA as you did Ted, they would have the same reaction?

Further, it seems as if your entire target of the issue was to play on the stereotypes of Southwest.

I didn't appreciate the ad for "Southwest bimbos." I found it degrading and biased. I don't consider myself, or any of my friends in the area, stupid and frivolous.

I'm not saying I can't laugh at the stereotype, but I'd rather see it directed to the University as a whole, rather than sectioned off to only Southwest. You do realize that Southwest populates almost half of the student body on campus — that's a lot of people to insult.

You say that ZuNews is a rag and an example of bad journalism. At least, they don't target their satire on just one area.

ENVIRONMENTALLY SAFE — McDonald's Senior Vice-President Shelby Yastrow shows the difference between the new paper wrappers and the old styrofoam ones, which will soon be replaced.

An open letter from faculty to graduate students and the administration:

We are disturbed by the university administration's tactics in sending graduate students a last minute letter urging a vote against unionization.

(1) The letter, raising a variety of new claims and arguments, was timed to arrive at roughly the same time as the ballot itself. This obviously reduces or eliminates the possibility of free and open debate, which ought to be the hallmark of an academic community.

(2) The letter involved the use of considerable university resources, both in preparing the letter and in reproducing and mailing thousands of copies. At a time when staff are being laid off and everything is being cut this money could be far better spent for other purposes.

(3) The letter proposes as an alternative to unionization that the administration itself create a new group, conduct elections for it, and then work with that group on the same issues GEO has been addressing for the past year. Except for the fact that the administration proposes to conduct the elections itself, this group seems to be very similar to the Graduate Student Senate.

If the administration has not in the past been able to resolve these issues with the Graduate Student Senate we are doubtful that they would be able to do so in the future. Virtually every other group on campus has chosen to have a union represent them to negotiate binding agreements, even if the union supplements an already existing organization (the Faculty Senate, PAUMA) that continues to discuss various issues.

(4) The letter's claims, and its version of recent history, at least need to be subjected to careful examination. For example, any comparison will demonstrate that at UMass the national ranking of faculty pay and benefits is far higher than that for graduate student stipends and fees. If the administration wants to claim sole responsibility for graduate student salaries, they need to explain why unionized faculty rank so much better than graduate students.

We urge the administration to let graduate students themselves debate the issues for and against the certification of GEO/District 65/UAW as the official representative of graduate employees, and to save its energy and resources for more constructive purposes than battling the recognition of GEO.

Count Basie leads an evening of great jazz

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Correspondent

Count Basie
Fine Arts Center
Wednesday, Oct. 31

REVIEW

When the Count went to play his piano at the all-star jazz gig in the sky in 1984, many thought they had seen the end of an era. Yet while the void that Basie left behind may loom large, have no fear, for the indomitable Frank Foster is here. Well, at least he was here on Wednesday night at the Fine Arts Center, leading the Count Basie Orchestra through an evening of great jazz. Playing before a nearly full house, Foster and his tenor sax led the audience on a trip down memory lane and right up to the presents with two hour long sets of great swing and blues tunes.

In the first set, the band came out at 8 p.m. sharp, and went right into a swinging jam which stemmed out of an opening riff from the Basie classic One O'Clock Jump. Sonny Stokes, with his Dizzy Gillespe like cheeks got the audience warmed up with a rousing trumpet solo. Doug Miller on flute and Clarence Banks on trombone gave a taste of their talents, and lead right into a full, smooth and mellow Foster solo which inundated the audience with grand hopes for the evening. We were not to be disappointed.

The second piece was "Shiny Stockings," a deliberate and strong swing tune reminiscent of early Basie, as the trumpet section used their mutes to help provide a sweet punctuation to George "Sonny" Cohns' trumpet solo. While the young child next to me began to fidget, the elder gentleman behind me sighed appreciatively as Foster introduced the next tune, "Angel Eyes." Alto saxophonist Danny Turner took us on a fine soulful journey while David Gibson on drums displayed some fine brush work.

The rest of the first set introduced us to the rest of the orchestra as we heard Ernie Wilkins' tune "Right On Right On," Freddie Greens' "Corner Pocket" and Neil Heftys' "Whirlybird" as well as "Without A Song" a tune recently recorded with George Benson, and "Skyhawk." Trumpeter Bob Ojeda gave a brash, proud and sure solo while teamed with Clarence Banks on the trombone who showed the audience jazz's strong connections to gospel and the blues.

We also heard from Doug Miller on tenor and David Glasser on alto. Miller, one of the more veteran members of the band gave a ripping fast fingered solo, while Glasser, one of the newest cats had a wonderfully rich and full tone to his horn which the audience appreciated greatly. Kenny Hing on tenor hammed it up to the delight of all on "Skyhawk" and Foster graced us with a furious chase on "Without A Song." "Corner Pocket" highlighted rhythm guitarist Charlton Johnson, and while the great Freddie Green is missed, Johnsons' mellow and confident strumming is more than welcome. "Whirybird," as Foster put it, gave the drummer some. A powerhouse horn sound preceeded David Gibsons' drum solo which saw some wonderful eye contact between Gibson and Foster as Gibson let Foster know just when to bring the horns in and out.

Closing the set with a small taste of "One O'Clock Jump" again, the band left the crowd of appreciative fans eager for set number two.

Starting with "Splanky," a Neil Hefty tune, the band picked up right where they left off as Glasses on alto gave a bright, toe-tapping solo. "We Be Jammin," from the Count Basie Remembrance Suite gave us a torridly hot solo from trumpeter Mike Williams, who had been making himself felt all evening.

Other cuts in the second set included Doug Miller and his tenor on "Do Nothing Until You Hear From Me," Carl "Ace" Carter on piano playing "One Word Says It All — Basie," and a stupendous bass solo on "Goodtime Blues" by Cleveland Eaton which received the biggest applause of the evening. We also got to hear the vocals of Carmen Bradford, who had a tone reminiscent of Sarah Vaughn, and a wavering flair influenced heavily by Ella Fitzgerald.

The band signed off with a rousing piece highlighted by strong solos from Foster and trombonist Bob Trowers, and as an encore to appease the applause of the audience, we were treated to a trio of tenor madness from Kenny Hing, Doug Miller and Foster on a slam-bang, blow your eardrums version of the Basie classic "Jumpin At The Woodside."

All in all, those who chose Basie's orchestra over Cecil Taylor on the Halloween battle of the jazz giants were not disappointed. Basie may be gone, yet his spirit, drive and professionalism are more than alive and well today in the Count Basie Orchestra.

Cecil Taylor at Hampden Theatre: Very Scary

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Cecil Taylor
Hampden Theatre
Wednesday, Oct. 31

Valley Jazz

It was the scariest Halloween I've ever had: Cecil Taylor and his trio at Hampden Theatre in Southwest on Wednesday night. This was one of those ya-hadda-be-there gigs. The music was as far beyond verbal description and as uniquely meaningful to each person as losing one's virginity — but I'll try to describe it anyway.

The band began offstage with Henry Martinez' conga drums and Taylor himself vocalizing, somewhere between poetry and speaking in tongues. The effect was like a deranged Vodun or Santeria ritual, chilling and ominous. Then, one by one, they came on stage, Martinez entering his massive percussion setup, William Parker picking up his bass, and Taylor dancing his way furtively over to the piano. And then the serious shit began.

They launched into a 45-minute improvisation that built higher and higher in intensity until it couldn't get any more intense — but then it did. Taylor attacked the piano with fingers, fists and forearems flying, a boundless outpouring of energy that the government should really harness as an alternative to foreign oil. Martinez played every manner of percussion from trap drums to African, Afro-Caribbean and Afro-Latin instruments, frantically (yet somehow methodically) searching for just the right tone color or rhythmic statement to complement what Taylor was doing at the given moment. Parker made his protean contributions, though unfortunately most of the audience couldn't hear him well.

The hyper-manic, mind-pounding intensity was occasionally relieved by moments of exquisite lyricism — like a glimpse of the sun breaking through the storm clouds — made all the more delicate by their juxtaposition with the torrent around them. That's right, folks: Cecil doesn't just "bang away," he really can play the piano.

At the end of the first set, I felt as if I had just run a marathon. Several people complained of the heat in the room and took their jackets and sweaters off — was it psychological? After the intermission, the band played a second set that introduced a couple of further surprises. First, an unnamed dancer joined the band on stage. It was amazing how well she fit in with the music; her every sinuous move reflected the sounds around her, and the band reacted to her as well. She really was a fourth member of the band. The second surprise came from Parker, who finally got his say via some stunning arco (bowed) playing.

Another half-hour of technicolor sonic bombardment went by, and Taylor ended the music abruptly. He acknowledged the standing ovation with a little bow and began to walk off stage . . . but changed his mind and quickly walked back on. The band followed suit, and they played a short piece that recapitulated some of the themes from the first set. Taylor ended abruptly again and pulled the same stunt: standing ovation, bow, walk offstage, go back on, play another short piece. He did this several times, thus lampooning concert-going conventions and bamboozling the audience as well as the hapless M.C., who had no idea when to go on stage and close the show.

And what a show it was. Taylor is a bona fide living legend who is widely admired but misunderstood. A lot of ink has been spent, this column included, in trying to describe his music. He has also put out a lot of albums. But the only way to really understand why Cecil Taylor is a national treasure who deserves to be appreciated while he is still with us is to see him perform. Only then can one "understand" his recordings as well as the plight of the poor schlep who has to describe him in print. Like I said, ya hadda be there.

Judas Priest returns from the fight with new Painkiller

By STEVEN SCHWANKERT
Collegian Correspondent

Painkiller
Judas Priest
Columbia

REVIEW

For those of you who have lamented Judas Priest's decline with such less-than-satisfactory releases as Fuel for Life and Ram It Down, your sorrow has come to an end. The "defenders of the faith" have returned after a successful legal battle against the evil forces of censorship, with their latest offering, Painkiller.

Since 1974, Judas Priest has been bringing forth tales of the metal apocalypse and of metal revolution, where headbangers rise to crush the hoardes of Tiffany clones. This album is no exception. However, since the release of Turbo, the band has taken on a distinctly more pop sound, but that is absent this time out. Judas Priest has obviously been influenced by the newer, younger, more thrash-orientated wave of metal, such as Metallica. There is a considerable amount of machine-gun guitar playing on several of the tracks, a much harder sound than in the Priest albums of the 80s.

"Painkiller," the title track which begins the record, starts with drum intro by Scott Travis, in his first effort with Priest. Rob Halford, the band's lead singer, demonstrates that unlike some of his metal counterparts, Geoff Tate of Queensryche and Bruce Dickinson of Iron Maiden, he's not afraid to use all of his unbelievable range. As usual, Halford sings his own back-up lyrics, which in parts of "Painkiller" and the following song, "Hell Patrol," are as high as or higher than I've ever heard him sing.

The songs on the album fall into a Priest-like pattern, with the title track first, followed by hard-driving music until midway through the second side, where there's a metal love song, and then a final crushing number for the conclusion. Painkiller is no different. Generally the album is a Judas Priest cliche. I don't think anyone could or would expect a major change in Judas Priest's style; they've been doing it this way for sixteen years, and people are still buying their records.

This latest release's best offerings are the title track, "Hell Patrol," and a song off the second side, "Between the Hammer and the Anvil." On the whole, it's a solid album, one that lifted me out of the disappointment in Queensryche's Empire. Good metal is so hard to come by these days.

Part of the increased hardness of this album is due to Judas Priest's recent involvement in litigation, a case in Nevada where they were accused of backward-masking the phrase "do it" on the song "Better by You, Better than Me" off their 1978 release, Stained Class. Some said that they thought it was possible to hear the phrase, but it was decided that it was coincidence. This is the second heavy metal suicide case in recent years, the first one stemming from Ozzy Osbourne's song "Suicide Solution."

Famous Bloom County lawyer Steve Dallas was once asked what he thought was the cause of these lawsuits, to which he responded, "I dunno. Maybe the proliferation of narrow, suffocating zealotry masquerading as parenting in this country."

The group's acquittal paved the way for this fall's tour, which will roll into the Worcester Centrum on Dec. 7. Judas Priest has been known in the past as a great live band, and with the strength of Painkiller, this show should be quite a spectacle.

Schoolhouse Rock cast enthralls the SUB with riveting ditties

By WENDY REISER
Collegian Correspondent

It was full house on opening night. As the lights dimmed, the crowd fell silent as their expectations of yesteryears claimed the best of them. Nobody could have expected more from the cast of Schoolhouse Rock.

From the opening act to the very end of the show, there were no animated characters, just an energetic, talented group of individuals using Kentucky Fried Chicken containers, Lipton Tea Bags, stuffed animals, a fly swatter and a few other inanimate objects.

Laughter began with "Conjunction Junction," the opening act, and prevailed through the evening, as did audience participation in the singing, intensifying with each number.

In "Unpack your Adjectives," a bit of modern dialect was introduced when Peter Kasperowicz held a stuffed bear in front of Steve Olivo, his singing partner, who was supposed to describe it with adjectives. Olivo responded: "That's one hairy, scary bear . . . Not!"

Director Bill Larkin's creativity, as well as the cast's, allowed for successful originality in the adaptation, to the delight of the crowd.

There were interpretations that were a little more mature than in the cartoon versions, though; one of these was in Act II when Joanna Shea seductively perched herself on top of the piano singing "Figure Eight." The way she sang the song, combined with the subject matter, made it all the more humorous. "Lolly Lolly Lolly" evoked much laughter as Geordie Keitt, Karl Rooxey and Ed McCarthy appeared on stage with bowties meanwhile dancing with rhythmic pelvic thrusts. The end of Act II brought quiet on the audience as they listened to Andrew Schrievar, accompanied by his guitar and slight piano, singing the words to "Great American Melting Pot."

Cast members aroused the audience many times: dancing single-file through the audience during "Conjunction Junction," and hid in the aisles during "Ready or Not Here I Come," and they encouraged everyone join in for an ultimate sing-along with Maggie Magner in the "Preamble."

"I'm Just a Bill" featured all the "Bills" in the cast, including a guest appearance from Larkin. He was also the crazed conductor capable of transforming the cast into a well-trained choir in the evening's finale "Interjection." This was one of the most rousing moments in the entire night as the audience responded with calculated "Awwws, Hey!s, Rats!" and "Hooray!s," and later leapt to their feet in a standing ovation.

As the show came to an end, everyone continued to sing their favorite song that may have sent them back to when they were 8, 9 or 10 years old. The cast should be praised for a job well-done. They succeeded in creating a nostalgic atmosphere. If you were present on one of the two nights of the performance, you might reminisce for days about your long forgotten past, or who even knows — you might find yourself waking up bright and early to catch those Saturday morning cartoons. Unfortunately, you won't find anything that even closely resembles Schoolhouse Rock and then you will count your blessings that you saw this fantastic group give you one last, final hint of what today's youth may never be able to appreciate.

THE HARD PART FOR US AVANT-GARDE POST MODERN ARTISTS IS DECIDING WHETHER OR NOT TO EMBRACE COMMERCIALISM.
DO WE ALLOW OUR WORK TO BE HYPED AND EXPLOITED BY A MARKET THAT'S SIMPLY HUNGRY FOR THE NEXT NEW THING? DO WE PARTICIPATE IN A SYSTEM THAT TURNS HIGH ART INTO LOW ART SO IT'S BETTER SUITED FOR MASS CONSUMPTION?
OF COURSE. WHEN AN ARTIST GOES COMMERCIAL, HE MAKES A MOCKERY OF HIS STATUS AS AN OUTSIDER AND FREE THINKER. HE BUYS INTO THE CRASS AND SHALLOW VALUES ART SHOULD TRANSCEND. HE TRADES THE INTEGRITY OF HIS ART FOR RICHES AND FAME

the overseers of the University, did not have the power to accept loans from employees.

The idea of the loan plan came during a Faculty Senate meeting, when a member suggested the plan, citing the use of deferred salary payment at the City College of New York in the 1970s.

However, New York City dealt directly with the College's employees and could accept the loans.

Sherbin also said Duffey was continuing to press for the idea of a progressive furlough. This would entail employees with less senority losing less pay than those with greater salaries and time. Sherbin said this proposal must also be approved by the local unions.

Sherbin said the talks between the five unions and the administration are continuing.

Duffey proposed the furlough to take place Nov. 23, Dec. 24 and Dec. 26-28 for the 5,600 campus employees, who have been asked to reply to the proposal by Nov. 7. Duffey estimated the furlough will save the University a total of $3.8 million.

Further information was also distributed by AFSC which urged student involvement starting with a regional conference to be held at Brandeis University on November 10.

Many don't consider war as an option because Saudi Arabia is not threatened. Also, an armed conflict couldn't take place without Israeli involvement, said Grace.

"If I was Saddam, my first step would be to bring Israel into the conflict," said Grace meaning it would be a different type of war; it would be an Arab and Israeli War.

Ambivalent feelings among Saudi and Israeli people make a war against Iraq less of a likely option, said Grace.

Grace said he believes the crisis began becuase of Saddam Hussein himself, and he said Kuwait's failure to write off loans to a bankrupt Iraq in return for Iraqi protection during the Iran-Iraq War prompted Saddam to invade Kuwait. Also, Kuwait taking oil from Iraq's oil fields may have led to the invasion.

'Hussein is a very angry person, not necessarily other things,' said Grace.

Both sides have made serious miscalculations and will continue to make them, Grace said.

U.S. mistakes have included being surprised by the Iraqi invasion but perhaps more significantly its failure to see that getting out of a war in the Middle East would be even more difficult than getting into one, said Grace.

Popular support against the war in the U.S. is a calculation of Saddam but is that a wise calculation asked Grace.

"I'll leave that question to you," he said.

Lewis.'

No introduction is needed. Lewis is the present and the future of the Celtics. He is an explosive offensive player who can post-up, and shoot from the outside. I look for Lewis to develop into the go-to-guy come crunch time this season. Oh by the way, Lewis will be an All-Star come February.

'The center is from Centenary, 7-foot-1/2 inch, number double zero, Roberrrrt Parish.'

The Chief is now the oldest player in the league since the retirement of Caldwell Jones. But like a fine wine, Parish gets better every year. He may only play 25 minutes a game this season, but make no mistake, when the game is on the line, 00 will be in the game.

'At forward, from Minnesota, 6-foot-10, number 32 Kevvvvin McHale.'

Ah, what a relief it is not to have to defend McHale. He is the game's greatest low post player, and with his new found outside shot, McHale will be twice as difficult to cover. If McHale can return to his form of 1986, the Celtics need not worry about the half court offense. Just give the ball to Kevin, sit back and enjoy.

'The other forward is from Indiana State, 6-foot-9, number 33 Larrrry Bird.'

Will Larry retire after this year? I hope not, but if he does, the game will be losing one of the greatest players of all time. As for this year, Bird should do the things that he does best, shoot, pass, rebound, and most of all lead the team to a championship.

But this team will be more than a five man team, it is 12 players deep.

The guards will be speedy and scrappy. Dee Brown will add excitement to the Garden. He can shoot, pass, and play Detroit Piston's type defense, and Charles Smith is as quick a player as the Celts have seen since Nate Archibald.

Kevin Gamble may not play a lot, which is a shame because he is an excellent shooter, but he must understand that he is not going to play ahead of Lewis or Bird, both of whom will play about 40 minutes per game.

The Celtics will be deep at forward. Michael Smith is silky smooth. His best trait is his ability to can the outside jumper. Smith averaged 15 points per game as a starter, and while he may not play a lot until Bird or McHale retires, he is an excellent insurance policy if one of the two were to go down with an injury.

Ed Pinckney and Dave Popson will each contribute more in practice than during the games, that is unless Pinckney re-establishes himself as a tough hard-nosed player.

Joe Kleine is a more than adequate replacement for Parish, and will be asked to contribute heavily.

Go ahead, toss it up, I'm ready for action.

Volleyball looking for win at Harvard

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

After a good night's rest, the University of Massachusetts volleyball team is heading to Cambridge for the Harvard Tournament.

The Minutewomen (4-22) will be taking on the Crimson (11-10) at 9 a.m. The teams have already faced off this season at the Brown Tournament where Harvard took them 3-1. But this time around, according to coach Carol Ford, UMass is coming ready to play.

"Our defense and our transition is good," said Ford. "We're going to try to put the ball away offensively. These teams are really tough."

Harvard is led by co-captains Peri Wallas and Carolyn Burger, who lead their team in kills. Their most recent encounter was a 3-2 win over Brown University.

"To win, we must key in on their best players," said Ford of the last time they faced Harvard.

While their game seems to be improving in most areas, they freeze when they see 11 points on the board.

"We get stuck," said Ford. "We are not playing tough enough at the end of our games." If UMass will gets its act together and holds it together, it could make an impression on Concordia College at 3 p.m.

As soon as their match ends against Concordia, they face the Princeton Tigers (14-4) at 5 p.m. The last time UMass played Princeton was two and a half years ago. And UMass won.

"[Princeton] are used to being attacked," said Ford. "They are really good on coverage. We'll have to play our best."

Ford said Princeton is always good. She added that their kids from the West and South are very good. Princeton is led by Christy Hackman of Hillsboro, Calif., and Lauren Montgomery of Santa Monica, Calif.

Captain Nancy Sullivan and the Minutewomen travel to Harvard for an early 9 a.m. contest. Sullivan and Co. are hoping to improve upon their 4-22 record.

Minutemen hoping to avoid Spiders web

Tailback John Johnson follows the lead block of fullback David Mitchell. The undefeated Minutemen travel to Richmond Saturday where they meet the Spiders.

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will get a second chance to tune its two-headed offense against a weaker team Saturday at Richmond (1 p.m.).

UMass is the No. 5 ranked team in the country and is in first place in the Yankee Conference (5-0). Climactic battles with Villanova (3-2 in the conference) and at New Hampshire (4-1) loom in the next two weeks; a win Saturday and in either of the final two games would guarantee UMass a share of the Yankee Conference title and a spot in the playoffs.

Tom Fasano will start at quarterback, with Paul Tornatore stepping in as relief pitcher when circumstances dictate a pass, coach Jim Reid announced this week.

Shuffling quarterbacks worked well enough in last week's 28-21 win against Northeastern, although the offense at times lacked the tempo that is a trademark of injured starter Gary Wilkos.

"If we didn't have Tornatore, Fasano would be the starter and that's that," Reid said. "Tornatore has a cannon. He has the ability to go in and be a starter as a throwing quarterback. Problem is, we don't have the surrounding cast to get it done."

Freshman Dave McGovern, described by Reid as "maybe a step faster in the option," has been taking a lot of snaps in practice, and may also enter into the mix Saturday.

The constants for this team, however, are its defense and rushing game.

UMass leads the conference in total defense and has allowed 85.6 rushing yards per game, one of the lowest totals in the nation.

Tailback John Johnson had his finest game against Northeastern (188 yards), and is the third-rated rusher in the Yankee Conference at just under 100 yards per game. Add fullback David Mitchell (72.7 yards per game), and UMass has the top rushing attack in the Conference.

Richmond (1-7) enters with the Yankee Conference's worst ground game (100.3 yards per game), passing attack (133.1), and pass defense (235.4). Their defense against the run yields more than 200 yards a game.

The Spiders opened with three straight losses, beat Maine 24-16, and have since dropped four in a row, including a 42-24 thrashing by UConn last Saturday. UConn led 42-3 at one juncture, as quarterback Matt DeGennaro hit on 23 of 30 passes for 246 yards and three touchdowns.

Though the Spiders have won only two games in the last two years, there are some signs of life in second-year coach Jim Marshall's program.

Several of the Spiders' top performers this season are freshmen and sophomores. Linebacker Eric Johnson, a sophomore, leads the conference in tackles with 122 (15.3 a game), and freshman quarterback Greg Lilly engineered three scoring drives in the fourth quarter of last week's UConn game, subbing for injured starter Mark Mascheck. Lilly will start Saturday.

Game Notes: The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM and WTTT 1430 AM . . . Matt Tulley, who has missed two straight games with a bruised shoulder, will start at linebacker. Cornerback Don Caparotti and defensive lineman Steve Brothers remain out with ankle injuries.

Field hockey travels to Penn State for A-10 Tournament

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

This weekend four field hockey teams will fight for Atlantic 10 bragging rights, as they compete in the A-10 Tournament.

The tournament features three top-10 teams, and Rutgers. Penn State, the host of the tournament is ranked fourth, the University of Massachusetts is fifth, while the Owls of Temple are seventh.

The Penn St. Lady Lions are seeded first, UMass second, Temple third and Rutgers fourth.

In game one, Penn State takes on Rutgers, and in game two UMass duels with Temple in what should be the more exciting of the two games on Saturday. Some of you may remember that when UMass journeyed to Temple earlier this season, they came back losers 3-2.

Penn State has already beaten Rutgers, and unless there is a major upset (which is what it would be if Rutgers were to win this game) the Lady Lions will be in the championship game Sunday.

Penn State: Coach Charlene Morett-Newman's crew is 18-2. They are led by senior, Kristen Winters' 28 goals, and eight assists; senior Chelle Frates (16 goals, 18 assists); and Eleanor Stone (20 goals, eight assists). Sophomore goalie Michele Brennan has 102 saves in 20 games with a goals against average of 0.47.

The strength of this team is its vereran leadership, and ability to dominate a game offensively. The fact that Penn St. is playing at home throughout the tournament makes them that much tougher to beat.

UMass: Pam Hixon and Co. are 15-4. They are led offensively by senior Mara Frattasio's 11 goals and eight assists. Junior Dawn Trumbauer (six, six) and senior Kerri Fagan (seven goals) are the other offensive threats. Sophomore goalie Philippa Scott has 113 saves in 19 games with a 0.60 GAA.

The strength of the Minutewomen is balance. Seniors Beth Thornton and Lisa Berardinelli marshall the midfield as well as any two players in the A-10. At stake for the Minuteowmen is a chance to earn a bye in the first round of the NCAA Tournament next weekend.

Temple: Michele Madison's Owls have compiled a 16-4 record. Jane Catanzaro, who leads the A-10 in scoring, has 49 goals. Catanzaro can and has carried the Owls all season, making them a legitimate threat to win this tournament.

Strengths: Catanzaro and more Catanzaro.

Rutgers: Coach Ann Petracco's Lady Knights have been up-and-down all season and have a 10-9-2 record to show for it. The Lady Knights' strength is defense. Their top goal scorer Christie Miller has only nine goals. Jodi Deem (1.62 GAA) has had some good games and some bad games — 128 saves in 21 games. She'll have to be near perfect for Rutgers to win the tournament.

Pam Hixon, who won her 200th game last Sunday, will be looking for win 201 as the Minutewomen take on Temple Saturday. The Minutewomen need two victories to return to Amherst as Atlantic 10 Champions.

One Celtic fan ready for action

My juices are flowing, I'm pumped. Lets start the 1990-91 basketball season.

Toss it up. I just want to sit in my Lazy-Boy and watch Larry Bird can three pointers, Robert Parish jam one through the iron, Kevin McHale scoop one under, up and in, and Reggie Lewis wheel and deal on unsuspecting defenders.

Tamir Lipton

Toss it up ref, not even you can stop the Boston Celtics this year. They're going all the way, hoist up another championship banner.

Lets not lament on Dennis Johnson's departure, lets celebrate the new era with a Dee Brown steal and stuff, a Stojko Vrankovic blocked shot, a Brian Shaw bullet pass on the fast-break, and a Dave Popson jumper. Come on already throw it up.

All summer I had to live with the memory of Bird missing a dunk, and Patrick Ewing tossing in a fall-away bomb from International waters that ended not only the Celtics season, but a great stretch of sheer dominance. Please Andy Jick, announce the starting lineups so the refs can start the game.

'Good evening ladies and gentlemen, and welcome to Boston Garden . . .'

'And now introducing the Boston Celticssss . . .'

'At guard, from the University of California at Santa Barbara, 6-foot-6, number 20 Brian Shaw.'

Shaw will receive the many warranted boos for his off season antics, but once he feeds Lewis for a tomahawk dunk, all will be forgotten, and Shaw will be a real key to the success of this team. Shaw gives the Celtics a leader, someone who can run the offense and shut down opposing point guards like an Isiah Thomas or a Magic Johnson (even though no one really stops the Magic Man).

Celtics to tip off tonight

BOSTON (AP) — The memory of their first-round playoff loss to the New York Knicks has faded. So have thoughts of their strident summer battle to get Brian Shaw to rejoin them after playing in Italy for a year.

The Boston Celtics had more immediate things to worry about before Friday night's NBA season opener against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

First, coach Chris Ford waited nearly until Thursday's 6 p.m. deadline for reducing his roster to 12 players.

He waived free agent guard Sasha Dordevic and placed guards John Bagley and Charles Smith on the injured list.

Bagley was sidelined the entire preseason schedule with tendinitis in his right knee. The Celtics said Smith, who played in exhibition games, sustained a partial dislocation of his left shoulder in workouts and has a strained rotator cuff in his right shoulder.

Ford also was concerned with stopping the Cavaliers, who beat the Celtics 121-115 in an exhibition game last Saturday night.

"We're not getting the effort individually" on defense, Ford said. "Until each one of these guys makes a commitment to play defense, we're going to have breakdowns."

Ford a former teammate of Boston's enduring frontcourt of Larry Bird, Kevin McHale and Robert Parish, took over after Jimmy Rodgers was fired following last season's playoff elimination.

In training camp he emphasized tight defense and running on offense. Things worked well enough in the preseason that the Celtics had a 6-2 record. But two wins were against Denver, which plays little defense.

Unlike his predecessor, Ford apparently has the players who can make an up-tempo attack and pressing defense work.

Shaw, Boston's first-round draft choice in 1988, spent last season with Il Messagero in Rome, but signed with Boston to return for this season. He changed his mind and wanted to spend another season in Italy. But the Celtics won a court case against him and he is now their starting point guard.

On Friday night, he'll play against forward Danny Ferry, who joined the Cavaliers after also playing with Il Messagero last year.

Silber accuses media of distorting the facts

BOSTON (AP) — With polls showing the governor's race tightening, a fiesty John Silber returned Sunday to the caustic style that has dominated his campaign.

His opponent, Republican William Weld, countered that Silber's ranting wouldn't produce results on Beacon Hill.

In a string of local and national television appearances, Silber came out punching. He denounced one television reporter, corrected another, demanded an apology from CBS and said Weld would cry if he was subjected to similar media scrutiny.

On the CBS Sunday television talk show "Face the Nation," Silber predicted voters won't be fooled by media distortions of his views. He told reporter Leslie Stahl she had misrepresented his attitudes about Jews, Blacks, and working women.

"The voters out there know perfectly well I'm totally in control and I just nailed you for three distortions on which somebody ought to nail you," he said.

A stunned Stahl replied "wow" several times, observing: "You're angry; you sound angry."

When it came Weld's turn to appear on the talk show, Stahl asked: "Are you going to attack me?"

Weld reserved his criticism for Silber, suggesting, as he often has, that the on-leave Boston University president is too unstable to govern.

"Just because someone may demonstrate a lot of ill humor, that doesn't prove they're going to have the ability to go and change the system," Weld said.

Silber said later Sunday CBS owed him an apology for implying he believes Jews are racist, and saying he offended women with statements about how the feminist movement has led to child abuse.

"If anything were left of the libel laws and the laws of slander, I would retire on the assets of CBS," he said.

Stahl questioned Silber on comments he made several years ago that he felt unwelcome at a Connecticut synagogue because his mother was not Jewish.

Political observers have suggested Silber is unaware of the effects of his dramatic speaking style. But he repeatedly asserted Sunday his words and actions are deliberate.

"I was in full control this morning when I explained to Leslie Stahl she was way off the mark," he said in a late broadcast. "The difference between the way she interrogated me and (the way she) interrogated Bill Weld was monstrously clear to the voters. I was angry and had every right to be angry."

"If you beat up on Bill Weld a little while the way I've been beat up on, I think he'll cry," Silber said.

"The only whining we've heard in this campaign has come from the Silber camp," said Weld Spokesman Ray Howell.

Observers: mixed views on negative campaigning

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

European political observers, here to study the U.S. election process, had mixed reactions about the November election and U.S. politics as a whole.

In a briefing with reporters on Friday, delegates from Poland, France, and Portugal, focused primarily on the role of the press and of negative campaigning in U.S. politics.

Christian Bigaut, a former government official from France and the author of book on lobbying, said he sees negative campaigning as a positive aspect of American politics although he condemned the personal mudslinging between U.S. candidates.

He said in France, where negative campaigns are not allowed, the papers are controlled by individual political parties and thus in any one newspaper you can only see one candidate's arguments.

"In the United States you can see both arguments in the same newspaper. This negative campaigning makes the opponent answer," he said.

Teresa Ogrodzinska, from Poland's Solidarity Party, agreed with Bigaut.

"Negative campaigning is really important because it's the only chance you have to show that your arguments are better than your opponents," she said.

Luciano Maunel Ferreira dos Anjos, from Portugal, disagreed. He thought it was more important to have a positive campaign and criticized the power political television advertisements had to "manipulate large groups of people."

Jan Oziadon, from Poland, agreed with Ferreira regarding television. "TV is at a very low intellectual level, it makes people lazy so they don't want to engage in politics," he said. "Some TV advertisements look like they're addressed to children. . . In Poland, the TV political campaign is more serious."

The delegates said in their countries

Library brought home

Over phone, students can check on books

By KATHRYN CRAWFORD
Collegian Correspondent

A new computer system will allow students to check the availability of books in the Five College libraries from the convenience of their rooms, according to a University of Massachusetts Tower Library spokesperson.

The new system has been installed in all the libraries at UMass, according to Gordon Fretwell, associate director for Public Services. It is a computer package coordinating the electronic card-catalogues at the other four colleges in the Valley, as well as the four campus libraries here at UMass.

However, according to Fretwell, there is a major snag in the system. The AVAILABLE message which appears on the screen applies only to books in the Physical Sciences Library.

The On-Line circulation system is not linked to the other three libraries and the message is not changed when books are taken out. Therefore, a book that is cited as AVAILABLE may in fact be off the shelf.

For the last three years, the library staff has been loading electronic records into the UMass data base. The library caught up with its back-log in mid-June 1990; now 95-99 percent of the library materials are in the On-Line system.

Fretwell said the card catalog must still be consulted for government publications, archival information, and books and journals published in non-Roman alphabets.

According to Fretwell, the On-Line system is now adequate for "typical undergraduates."

It is now possible to dial into the On-Line system from outside the library building with the Terminal and Actor Unit attachment, a personal computer, and the appropriate software. The TAU attachment is available at the Housing Assignment Office at 235 Whitmore for no cost — it's rental cost is included in student fees.

UM grad looks to bring education views to the Hill

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

In the midst of current budget cuts, and the impending possibility of Question 3, Gerry Grady, a former University of Massachusetts professor, sees it as a positive sign that recent UMass alumnus Dan Valianti made it through the primary and is now a main contender for the state legislature.

Grady, who held a fund raiser for Valianti (D-Marlboro) in Amherst recently, saw Valianti's campaign as a great opportunity for the University. Citing the low prestige of politicians in Massachusetts, he said, "many people don't understand that in a democracy, you need politicians."

Jim Collins, a lawyer and fellow sponsor of Valianti's fundraiser, said he didn't think UMass is fighting hard enough against budget cuts. "I think the University has to start aggressively fighting for its future. It's got to support UMass alums running for office."

Valianti, a 1988 UMass graduate with a double major of Communications and Political Science, and a self-described "zealot" when it comes to public higher education, said he was pleasantly surprised when he took his campaign to Amherst.

Though his district is in Marlboro, Valianti said he came back to Amherst to let people know that he would support UMass, and to appeal for funding for his campaign.

Democrat would seek Jimmy Carter's help

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: The Collegian is profiling candidates running in Tuesday's election.

John Arden, the area's Democratic candidate for U.S. Representative, said the federal government needs severe restructuring in order to reduce the national deficit so that funding can be reappropriated to human services and education.

"The deficit which we have been running for the last ten years under the Reagan and Bush administrations has really imperiled the government from providing services," Arden said.

He said if uncontrolled spending continues on the federal level, then the amount of money the government must pay to match the interest on the deficit will exceed the portion of the budget allocated for military spending by the turn of the century.

The task of restructuring could be given to former president Jimmy Carter, he said. If Carter is appointed to eliminate waste from the governmental structure, then monies can be reprioritized to services such as education which would revitalize the economic outlook in the future, he said.

Arden said President Bush should have former-president Carter head a restructuring effort similar to the Hoover Commission created by President Harry Truman in 1945.

Arden is running against U.S. Representative Silvio Conte in a second attempt to win the House seat for the First Congressional District of Massachusetts, which is partially comprised of Amherst, Northampton, Holyoke and Pittsfield. Conte has held his seat in Congress since 1958.

Arden said the laws and regulations governing campaign donations and incumbency and seniority ought to be seriously revised as the present system allows for campaign contributors to become firmly entrenched in the political processes.

Arden cited legislation passed by Congress in 1980 which allows candidates to claim campaign donations as personal income if they are defeated or retire from office. This legislation allows allows candidates to use donations for purchasing personal luxuries, he said.

"[This legislation] sounds to me like the biggest legitimization of government payola that I have ever heard of," he said.

He said his opponent has a "political war chest" which amounts to more than $300,000 this year. Arden's own campaign funds used for this election have only totaled about $2,000, he said.

The financial gap which Arden has faced in his campaign against Conte is a common problem that candidates up against incumbents face on Capitol Hill, he said. Out of 298 House seats up for reelection, 88 seats are uncontested. In the race for the remaining 217 seats, every opponent to an incumbent has less than $25,000 to spend on campaigning.

Candidates square off over CLT for state senate race

● Dagarin hoping for restructured govt.

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

Referring to the passing of Question 3 as a series of "indiscriminate cuts," attorney Douglas R. Dagarin (R), a challenger for the Massachusetts State Senate, said he is hoping for a "restructured state government."

Dagarin said he believes that Question 3 is about controlling the excess waste of government, which can be attributed to a "top-heavy administration," and "out of control spending."

"If Question three passes, the cuts made would be immediate, but not intelligent," said Dagarin in a recent telephone interview with the Collegian.

"We need to bring a fresh squadron of people into the State House, people that will get our house in order," he said. "We have to stop spending what we don't have."

Dagarin, an accounting graduate from Florida State University, has been practicing law for the past 12 years. He has also been employed as a chairperson with a finance company in Williamsburg, a position that has given him the best perspective on the budget.

Dagarin said he sees the deficit as being attributed to the legislators, pointing to four years of increasing deficits as evidence that our legislators have promised more than they can deliver. Statistics show that in 1987 deficit spending was $349 million, compared to the estimated 1990 figure of $704 million.

Dagarin said he views public education as an investment in the future, and believes that cutting it would be like "shooting ourselves in the foot." However, he also said he understands that the educational system in the state needs to be changed.

Due to his religious beliefs, Dagarin opposes all abortion laws, claiming that the decision [to have children] "should be made in the bedroom," and not in the doctor's office.

Dagarin is also anti-abortion when dealing with victims of sexual crimes. He believes that statistics back the fact that rape is not common, and that the government should not be concerned about "building policies on something so improbable [as rape]."

Dagarin said he thinks that this state can rebound from its current recession, but will need the proper leadership to do so. Among his suggestions are introducing private businesses into lower income communities, and providing a healthy private economy.

"We can not be socially responsible if we aren't fiscally responsible," he said.

● Olver says CLT would be disastrous

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

Saying "No" to Question three on the November 6th ballot is the first step in rebuilding the state's sagging economy, according to Massachusetts Senate incumbent John D. Olver (D).

At a rally on the Amherst Town Common Saturday, Olver, speaking to a group of Democratic supporters, stressed the importance of voting against the tax-rollback question, stating its effect would be "disastrous."

"If Question 3 passes, we will see the effects of it everyday," Olver said in an interview before the rally. "Social services and education will be cut between 30 and 40 percent."

Both Olver and opponent Douglas R. Dagarin agree that cutting back on education would be a severe blow to the state. But unlike Dagarin, Olver believes that the proper response is a no vote on three, saying that it would have a "severe impact" on this state.

Olver, who has occupied a seat in the senate since 1972, is the co-founder of the Tax Equity Alliance, an organization dedicated in the fight for Massachusetts and its residents.

"We must get our priorities straight, and that means having to rebuild our economy from the ground up," he said.

Massachusetts has done very well during good economic times and Olver said the state has done extremely well with so very little during the recession

"There are some very difficult choices facing the state in the future, but with the correct leadership making the right decisions, we should be able to get out of this fiscal mess."

Olver is a staunch supporter of the arts as well as the Pro-Choice movement. He said he believes that the right for a woman to have an abortion, as well as the right for artistic expression, should not be taken away by the state.

"An attack on a woman's right to have an abortion is an attack on her civil rights as a human being," he said. "We have to make sure that this right is maintained."

Olver said the economic condition of the state is bad, which has led the public to adopt a "mood of accusation."

The state has adopted a two class system, which is providing wealthy families with all the benefits of health care and education.

"Priorities need to be changed, and new ways to provide reasonable and affordable services to lower income families need to be adopted," he said.

Candidate unveils budget plan that could cut $1.4 billion

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Stephen Erickson, interrupting his pursuit of a doctoral degree at the University of Massachusetts, is challenging incumbent Shannon P. O'Brien for the Second Hampshire District state representative seat.

O'Brien, (D-Easthamton), and Erickson, (R-Hadley), previously faced off in 1988.

One of the major divisive issues in this year's race is Question 3, the petition on the November ballot that would roll taxes back to their 1988 levels.

EMPTY CHAIRS Chairs stand outside the Lord Jeff on the Amherst Common.

Erickson said he will vote in favor of the petition and then work to restore vital services in western Massachusetts. "What we have seen over the last two years is continual cuts into vital services while the waste is left intact," said Erickson in an interview with the Sunday Republican.

Erickson's campaign is also focusing on the quality of education in Massachusetts. He said he favors smaller classes. He also has called for teacher certification requirements that stress facility with subject matter and subsequent testing to encourage teachers to keep up with the changes and advancements in their fields.

He spoke against bilingual education; however, he favors tutoring bilingual students to keep them up to par in English. He said he believes they must keep up with the dominant language.

"I would lay off almost every single government employee before I cut one teacher, because except for law enforcement, I cannot think of a more important function of government than education," Erickson said in a written campaign statement. Erickson unveiled a plan that he maintains could cut $1.4 billion from the budget.

Cutting payroll for state employees who earn above $30,000 per year and issuing low-interest loans instead of state scholarship grants for higher education are among 36 cuts Erickson is proposing.

"Right now we are paying to send students to Harvard and other private universities. This money should be used to maintain our public colleges," Erickson said of his announced plan.

A Collegian Guide to the 1990 Ballot Questions

Question 1

QUESTION 1 is a proposed amendment to the Constitution, entitled "Abolishing The State Census."

Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in joint sessions of the House of Representative and the Senate on December 17,1987 by a vote of 180 to 6, and on June 11, 1990 by a vote of 186 to 6?

SUMMARY: The proposed constitutional amendment would repeal the constitutional provision that a state census must be taken and used as the basis for determining state representative, senatorial and councilor districts. The proposed constitutional amendment would provide that the federal census shall be the basis for determining such districts.

A YES vote would change the state constitution to abolish the state census and substitute the federal census as the basis for state redistricting.

A NO vote would leave the state constitution unchanged, thus continuing the state census and its use as the basis for state redistricting.

Question 2

QUESTION 2 is an initiative petition for a law, entitled "Restricting use of State Consultants."

Do you approve of a law summarized below, on which no vote was taken by the Senate or the House of Representatives before May 2, 1990?

SUMMARY: The proposed law would place restrictions on the state's use of consultants. It would place various limits on the amount of profit, overhead charges and expenses that the state could pay consultants. It would limit the duration of consultant contracts to two years and any extension to one year, and it would limit the degree to which such contracts could be changed to require payments in excess of the original contract. The proposed law would limit to $100,000 the amount the state would pay on a consultant contract with an individual and would require all other consultant contracts in excess of $25,000 to be sought through competitive bidding. It would prohibit consultants from supervising state employees, and it would limit the use of consultants as substitutes for state employee positions.

In addition, the proposed law would place limits on the total amount of money state agencies, departments and authorities could spend on consultants each year. Subsidiary provisions would also establish a method for these entities to gradually come into compliance with the new spending limits and would give authority to the Secretary of Administration and Finance, on request, to permit some spending in excess of the new limits. The proposed law would also require state agencies, departments and authorities as well as the Secretary of Administration and Finance to submit yearly reports concerning the state's consultant contracts to certain legislative committees and to the Inspector General.

Finally, the proposed law provides that any of its provisions, if found by a court to be unconstitutional or otherwise unlawful, would be severed from the law and the remaining provisions would continue in effect.

A YES vote would establish the proposed restrictions on the state government's use of consultants.

A NO vote would not establish the proposed restrictions on the state government's use of consultants.

Question 3

QUESTION 3 is an initiative petition for a law, entitled "Changing Laws Concerning State Taxes and Fees."

Do you approve of a law summarized below, on which no vote was taken by the Senate and the House of Representatives before May 2, 1990?

SUMMARY: This proposed law would change the state income tax rate, affect language contained in certain tax provisions, and regulate the setting of fees by state agencies and authorities.

The proposed law would set the state income tax rate on Part B taxtable income (in general, earned income) at 4.25 percent for 1991 and 4.625 percent for 1992, except for income from unemployment compensation, alimony, Massachusetts bank interest, rental income, pension and annuity income, and IRA/Keogh deductions, which would be taxed at 5 percent.

The proposed law also provides that the fee imposed by any state agency or authority shall be no more than the fee that was in effect on or before June 30, 1988. The state Secretary of Administration and Finance would determine the amount to be charged for any service, registration, regulation, licence, fee, permit or other public function, except for the rates of tuition or fees at state colleges and universities or any fee or charges relative to the administration and operation of the state courts. Any increase or decrease in a fee, or the establishment of any new fee, would require the approval of the Legislature.

The proposed law provides that for tax periods commencing on or after Jan. 1, 1991, language in certain provisions of the Massachusetts general laws relating to taxes shall be the same as it was on Aug. 2, 1989, or the effective date of the proposed law, which ever language yields less tax revenue. The tax provisions affected include sections relating to the surtax on business income, corporate excise taxes, corporation taxes, taxes on security corporations, taxes on Part A income (in general, unearned income), bank taxes, excise taxes on alcoholic beverages and cigarettes, excise taxes on deeds, estate taxes, payments to the commonwealth relating to horse and dog racing, boxing and sparring matches, taxes on utility companies, gasoline taxes, taxes on insurance companies, excise taxes on motor vehicles, taxes on urban redevelopment corporations, sales tax, use tax, room occupancy excise tax, property taxes and taxes on proceeds from raffles and bazaars.

The proposed law also contains a provision that if any sections of the law are held to be invalid, all other sections of the law are to remain in effect.

A YES vote would make the proposed changes in laws concerning state taxes and fees.

A NO vote would not make the proposed changes in laws concerning state taxes and fees.

Question 4

QUESTION 4 is an initiative petition for a law, entitled "Changing Requirements for Political Parties and Candidates."

Do you approve of a law summarized below, on which no vote was taken by the Senate or House of Representatives before May 2, 1990?

SUMMARY: This proposed law would change the state election laws governing the establishment of political parties and the nomination of candidates.

The proposed law would allow voters to register under a political designation other than "Independent" and in addition to the two political parties previously recognized by law (Republican and Democrat), if at least 50 voters request to be permitted to do so. It would allow any group to qualify as a political party under Massachusetts law if at least 1 percent of the total number registered voters register to vote using that group's political designation, or if at least 3 percent of the votes cast at the preceding election for and statewide office were cast for a candidate running under that group's political designation. The proposed law would set the minimum number of signatures needed on independent or minor party nomination papers for state office at one-half of 1 percent of the entire vote cast in the previous state election for governor (as compared with 2 percent as of 1989), and would also establish this number of signatures as the upper limit needed for major party candidates. The proposed law would permit voters to sign the nomination papers of any number of candidates for the same office, would require that all blank forms to be used for nomination papers and initiative and referendum petitions be no more than 8½ by 14 inches in size, and would allow signatures to be collected on exact copies of these forms.

A YES vote would change the legal requirements for establishing new political parties and for nominating certain candidates.

A NO vote would leave unchanged the legal requirements for establishing new political parties and for nominating candidates.

Question 5

QUESTION 5 is an initiative petition for a law, entitled "Allocating State Aid to Cities and Towns."

Do you approve of a law summarized below, on which no vote was taken by the Senate or the House of Representatives before May 2, 1990?

SUMMARY: This proposed law would regulate the distribution to cities and towns of the Local Aid Fund, which consists of at least 40 percent of the revenue generated by the state income, sales, and corporate taxes, as well as the balance of the state Lottery Fund. Subject to appropriation by the Legislature, the state treasurer would distribute the Local Aid Fund to cities and towns on a quarterly basis, and each city or town would receive at least the same amount of local aid it received in the previous fiscal year unless the total Local Aid Fund decreases.

In fiscal year 1992, if there has been any increase over the fiscal year 1989 fund, half of the increase would be distributed in accordance with the distribution formula used for fiscal year 1989, and half would be distributed to each city and town in proportion to its population.

In each year after 1992, if the fund increases, the excess would be distributed through a formula devised by the state Secretary of Administration and Finance, with the advice and consent of the Local Government Advisory Committee. If the fund decreases after 1992, each town or city will have the amount it receives decreased by the same percentage.

This proposed law also requires that the treasurer publish an annual report about the Local Aid Fund, that the state auditor publish an annual audit of the account, and that the Secretary of Administration and Finance issue to each city and town an estimate of funds it will receive from the Local Aid Fund.

Each city or town would be allowed to bring a lawsuit to force distribution of the account, and would be entitled to a late payment fee if distribution is not timely.

A YES vote would establish the proposed allocation of state aid to cities and towns. A NO vote would not establish the proposed allocation of state aid to cities and towns.

Question 6

QUESTION 6 is a legislative advisory question, entitled "Free and Equal Broadcast Time for Candidates."

SUMMARY: The Legislature has placed this question on the ballot in order to determine whether the people favor or oppose requiring radio and television broadcast outlets to give free and equal time to all certified candidates for public office in the commonwealth. The vote on this question is advisory and does not establish law nor bind the Legislature.

A YES vote would advise that the voters favor requiring radio and television station to give free and equal time to candidates.

A NO vote would advise that the voters do not favor requiring radio and television stations to give free and equal time to candidates.

television is state controlled and thus candidates all receive the same amount of air time.

The Polish delegates, who are currently helping to build a democratic system in their country, also discussed more fundamental aspects of democracy.

Ogrodzinska said it was "good and attractive," that citizens could change the law, but that it could "be boring and reduce the activity of people in office."

Oziadon agreed, saying that Poland, like the United States, has similar problems in balancing efficient democracy with public participation.

The European visitors came to Amherst as part of an exchange program sponsored by the American Council of Political Leaders.

State Representative Stanley Rosenberg, who has traveled to Indonesia, the Phillipines, Israel, and Egypt with the program, hosted the group during their stay in Amherst and described the delegates as "as the rising stars in their countries."

"During their stay, these delegates will hopefully build relationships with young American leaders in the hope that some day they'll be sitting at the negotiating table together," Rosenberg said.

UCS supports two separate software packages which may be used to access the library catalog: PC Connect for DOS environment hardware and Kermit for MacIntosh applications.

Library systems across the country are slowly phasing out 'paper' card catalogs. There are advantages to a computerized system besides apparent convenience and the rapid transfer of information, he said.

Information about a document in an 'electronic' card catalog is accessible through many access points, such as key words and cross references, instead of the usual Author/Title/Subject reference.

The card catalog is limited by physical and economic factors. According to Fretwell, the advantage of telephone access into the On-Line system is purely one of convenience.

"I was shocked at the amount of assistance I've gotten," he said. "I thought I was kidding myself to expect any money, but I've received wonderful support."

Public higher education was always a concern for Valianti. While he went to UMass, concern over President Reagan's and the state's cuts of financial aid and public higher education prompted him to become active in Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Valianti said he was asked if he would help UMass if he got into the state legislature. His answer was yes. "You can't argue against education," he said.

"I would go to those in the University and ask them what they need. I'm outraged at the fact that we are the only state in the union that cut higher education."

To make it easier for people to go to college, Valianti proposes tuition prepayment plans and encouraged parents to invest in savings bonds when their children are young. He also advocates deducting funds from payroll to pay back student loans, making it easier for community college students to transfer to four-year state colleges, and expanding business/government partnerships, such as the Massachusetts Educational Employment program.

Valianti sees his efforts for public education as necessary. "We as graduates of this school have got to give something back," he said. "I'm the youngest of nine children. We've all gone through public education. That's worth me doing what I'm doing, going to the state legislature and fighting for public education."

Iraq ready to fight rather than give up Kuwait

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

In a new outburst of belligerence, Iraq said Sunday it was ready to fight a "dangerous war" rather than ever give up Kuwait. One European official warned that divisions over the hostage issue are endangering the anti-Iraq alliance.

"Iraq is not going to negotiate on Kuwait," Iraq's Information Minister, Latif Jassim, told a news conference in Baghdad. He insisted Iraq's annexation of Kuwait, which it overran three months ago, would stand.

"We are going to defend our 19th province on any condition, even if we have to fight a dangerous war," he said, referring to Kuwait.

Iraq also said it was recalling an unspecified number of retired army officers to active duty.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III visited U.S. troops in the Saudi desert earlier Sunday and said it was hard to say whether they would be called into combat. The presidents of Egypt and France expressed hopes that economic pressure rather than military might could force Iraq out of Kuwait.

Meanwhile, four American ex-hostages were on their way home a day after being freed, and fifteen Europeans arrived in Jordan after being released by the Iraqis. They were among thousands of foreigners trapped in Iraq and Kuwait when Saddam Hussein's troops took over the emirate August 2.

The first POW's of the Persian gulf crisis — three French soldiers — had a homecoming of their own in Paris on Sunday, but it wasn't exaclty a hero's welcome. French officials have said the soldiers, who were captured last week, might have strayed into Iraqi territory, and that they probably face punishment for their carelessness.

The new Iraqi vow to keep Kuwait at all costs came only hours after a former Japanese prime minister, Yasuhiro Nakasone, met with Saddam, and said the Iraqi president had demonstrated "great earnestness and seriousness" about seeking peace.

Nakasone's visit, aimed at winning the release of Japanese hostages, comes as Japanese lawmakers are considering a plan to send troops to the gulf to join the multinational force arrayed against Saddam.

The troop-deployment proposal has drawn strong criticism from those who say it would violate Japan's postwar peace constitution, even though the troops would be confined to non-combat roles.

Iraq's official news agency said Nakasone had told Saddam it was unlikely lawmakers would approve the proposal. Nakasone, speaking to reporters, made no mention of such assurances, but the report underscored the way the hostages can be used a leverage.

Belgium's foreign minister complained that efforts by individual nations to win their citizens' freedom are eroding unity against Iraq.

"Saddam is creating this royal court of all sorts of Western pilgrims who visit him to obtain the release of hostages," the Belgian official, Mark Eyskens, said in a television interview Sunday in Brussels.

has given incumbents excessive financial leverage against their opponents since campaigning for a federal public position is so expensive, he said.

Arden said in order to make the competition for house seats more competitive, the present legislation governing campaign donations should be repealed and the length of an incumbent's term should be limited to 12 years.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990, which was recently vetoed by President Bush, was a means for protecting minorities, women, and the disabled in the workforce and would not force industries and businesses to submit to hiring quotas, as Bush claimed, Arden said.

"If I am the representative for this district, I will help to co-sponsor the bill and we can start it from the beginning again," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Our Picks:
'No' on Question 3

In light of the serious cuts that have already affected this University in terms of substantial fee increases/tuition hikes, the severe reductions/eliminations of 14 departments coupled with the threat of layoffs, UMass would be destroyed if question three passes.

Question three, otherwise known as the Citizens for Limited Taxation petition, proposes to roll taxes back to 1988 levels, thereby taking away monies already budgeted, already promised to UMass and other state institutions. Twenty-five million dollars would be taken out of this school in the middle of the semester if this question passes.

President-Chancellor Duffey is having a difficult enough time trying to shave off the remaining $10.6 million from the latest round of budget cuts. It is frightening to think of what would happen if we were cut more.

While CLT proponents claim that CLT would force state institutions to cut the fat out, just look around and see what has been happening at this University over the past year and tell us that we still have extraneous fat left in our budget.

Question three is a killer, not only to UMass but to an entire state which has already had to grapple with a series of three consecutive 4 percent across-the-board cuts. The state is in sorry shape as it is.

CLT would not save us anything. The money we would supposedly save in taxes would come out of our services, making them not leaner and more efficient, but lacking and sub-standard.

CLT would not cure us, it would just make us sicker.

Vote 'no' on question three.

Not much of a choice

The Collegian editors were very disappointed with the choices voters have left for governor.

A bare plurality of the editors have decided to endorse Democrat John Silber for governor, primarily because he is a Democrat and does not favor the CLT petition, which we feel, is the most important decision in this election. Democratic candidates, as a whole, have expressed the willingness to accept the fact that a more equitable distribution of the tax burden and reasonable cuts will be needed to try to revive the high quality of the programs we once had before this fiscal mess started.

In addition, Democrats would be more sensitive to where the cuts would be distributed, instead of callously cutting indiscriminately where no fat is to be found.

While the demeanor and attitude of Silber is not ideologically pleasing, editors contended that it is more important to make a voting decision on competence rather than personal appeal.

The rest of our picks

We overwhelmingly endorse Senator John Kerry for re-election. Rappaport's money and scathing commercials have done nothing to impress us or sway us into thinking that he would do a better job than Kerry.

For state representative we endorse Democrat Stan Rosenberg. Rosenberg has shown care and sensitivity about issues concerning higher education, always lending an ear and yielding some influence for the benefit of students. He should not be lumped in the category of scurrilous incumbents who steered this state into disaster. Rosenberg is one of the good guys.

- Question one: The Collegian has voted to endorse this question and abolish the state census.
- Question two: We suggest you vote 'no' on this question which seeks to limit the amount the state can spend on consultants, limiting the amount we can spend to get a job done, and done right.
- Question four: Editors overwhelmingly voted to endorse this question which would allow independent candidates easier access to the ballot.
- Question five: On this question the editors reached no plurality. This question seeks to place a base limit of 40 percent of the state budget to be allocated to local aid.
- Question six: Editors rejected this proposal to allow free and equal access to the media by candidates.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian board of editors.

"I ONLY REGRET THAT YOU HAVE BUT ONE LIFE TO GIVE FOR MY COMPANY!"

The joke that plagues us

Wonders will never cease.

The Boston Globe, the pinnacle of Massachusetts liberalism, has done something which woke me from an early-morning stupor while reading the morning edition.

Gayle Long

They endorsed a Republican (gasp-gag!) for governor.

They supported William Weld over the infamous and evil John Silber.

And do you want to know what's even more frustrating and fascinating?

It's the fact that I can't blame them.

Seriously, after story upon story and headline upon headline lambasting the supposedly liberal Democratic candidate, how could the Globe support him?

How could they put their tails between their legs and cry to their hundreds of thousands of readers Silber was their man?

They couldn't.

And they sure weren't going to support Len Umina, from the Independent High Tech Party, because he's busy trying to sue them for not covering his campaign.

And they couldn't vote for "None of the Above."

In two weeks, we are going to have one joker or the other sitting in that office, they might as well support one or the other, right?

Whatever.

But let me tell you, the editors of the Globe must have pondered long and hard, and dreamed they would find their dream candidate.

Unfortunately, the candidate never came.

So, here we are, the day before the election, and for the most part, the press is still waiting for their prince/ss in shining armor, to fight off the disatrous deficit, save the university students, balance the evil budget, and yet still show they are electable.

Because that's what this election is all about.

So, let's guess who is more electable

For the Globe, there was no choice.

Picking Silber was an editorial death. It's like pulling their own fingernails out.

But picking Weld was ridiculous.

So, he claims to be pro-choice. He claims to be for the environment. Great.

But that's where it ends.

I can see no hope for the economic recovery of the state with Weld in the governor's chair.

CLT won't pass, and Weld has absolutely NO clue as to what he's going to do when it doesn't pass. Go ahead, ask him. See if he really has a clue.

But chances are, he's going to have to listen to the Legislature, listen to the people in the state, and get a grip on reality.

Because CLT is not a reality. It's a nightmare.

But Silber is another story. A man consumed by his own mind, he won't give the voters in this state a say — he'll figure it out for us.

Gee, thanks. That's what democracy is for.

Want to try to come to a compromise on your idea to triple tuition, Dr. Silber? Think again.

The Globe had no choice for the most part. They had to pick someone, pick him fast, and pray that in four years, no one would remember who they picked.

The state of politics in Massachusetts is a bigger joke than most think it is.

But, when the election results come rolling in, I doubt any of us will be laughing. Especially the Globe.

P.S. I'm still rooting for Harvey Gantt.

THE PROMISED LAND

ARTS & LIVING

Epic LBG Cafe

By CHRIS MACEK
Collegian Staff

Saturday night in Hampden Theatre was an evening of fun-filled comedy, theatre and musical performance, marking the first series of "Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Cafes."

The evening opened with the witty, charming humor of Julie Waggonner, comedian and emcee for the event, doing her own version of the Five College quiz, her cat from hell and growing up a WASP.

Her stories, confidence and easiness on stage served to break the ice and her devilish insider smile and twinkling eyes warmed the evening and brought the audience right into an intimate evening.

The first performance was the premiere showing of "Fraternity Prank," an original comedy piece by Dan Cantor and Edgar MacIntosh. A one act play, in which the main character, Edgar — played by McIntosh, recounts his story as a young gay man coming of age in a heterosexual world. Cantor accompanies this with an array of characters ranging from Edgar's mother, to his effeminate friend, Ronald, to a little girl representing Edgar's Jungian enigma, to Dick Dubinowski, his high school health teacher, to Intense, the San Franciscan new age performance artist, to your local door-to-door Jehovah's Witness and many more.

With minimal lighting and costume effects (all created on-stage), the piece folds in and out of different vignettes as Edgar describes what different aspects of "coming out" were like for him.

The piece produced a certain rhythm and moved very naturally into and between vignettes, as the frame shifted from story-telling to it suddenly being brought to life on stage. Some of the characters were on stage for less than a minute, rendering the performance a rapidly changing collage and giving the impression of looking back at one's life and seeing it as a composite of dozens of significant people, places and events.

Stereotypes were utilized to quickly capture the characters that swirled through Edgar's narration, but the character of Edgar seemed quite genuine and original. Although the play served mainly as a comic critique of our heterosexually dominated society, it didn't hold anything sacred. Gay and lesbian caricatures were exaggerated into their extremes: like Saphire, the lesbian separatist manager of a "wimmin's" bookstore, cursing at Edgar's testosterone levels. Or Ronald, the two-faced effeminate "friend" who loved Edgar as a "lover...oops! I mean brother." Yet, throughout it all, the humor was good-natured, and the piece was fair in that it revealed the (false?) stereotypical nature of people from many walks of life. And judging from the rousing applause and cheers, the play succeeded in that purpose, which as Brecht says needs no justification, entertainment for pleasure's sake.

The coffeehouse had two other acts: Sarah Greene with her New Folk and Blues style of singing and performing and Justina and Joyce, a superb duo whose harmonies filled the Hampden theatre bringing a smile, if not a tear, to many faces.

Effects of minstrelsy discussed

By SUZY HERRING
Collegian Correspondent

Fervent discussion in Amherst this past year on racism has led the Fine Arts Center to respond with humanities symposiums, with part of an October 24th lecture concentrating on the effects of Minstrelsy.

Minstrelsy: A Cause of Racial Stereotyping? was a part of the symposium The Reconstruction Legacy and Racial Conflict Today, led by Professor Horace Clarence Boyer of the Music Department.

He opened the evening with a discussion of "Minstrelsy from an African American Perspective." Boyer explained that in minstrel shows of the 19th century, White actors blackened their faces with burnt cork and applied white powder to their lips. In this costume, he said they grotesquely imitated slave music and dance. Between musical numbers, an emcee called Mr. Interlocutor and members of the troupe engaged in derogatory "comic" banter that portrayed Blacks as subservient, unintelligent and lazy. Sadly, this degradation was by far the most popular form of entertainment during the Reconstruction Era, Boyer said.

Talk Radio more than airwaves

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Correspondent

Talk Radio
Student Union Ballroom
Friday, Nov. 3

Humor. Tension. Frustration. These words describe the mood of Talk Radio — both the play and the cast — as of Friday night. The University Players hit the Student Union Ballroom stage Saturday night, and will perform their adaptation of Eric Borgosion's play through, November 7.

The play is about radio talk show host Barry Champlain, his attitude about radio, fame and his attitude. The feeling portrayed by several cast members was that: "This is a serious play." It seemed to be closer to comedy though, with serious themes spaced throughout the better part. Toward the end, the focus was on these serious tones. (I must admit that my upbringing leads me to see this as a comedy. It may not be so).

I saw this play through the eyes of a Long Islander. Anyone who has grown up in the New York metropolitan area could see it this way too. You see, Barry Champlain is almost a mirror image of Howard Stern, morning radio personality for WXRK, New York. Both Champlain and Stern are intelligent, love themselves, are generally rude and refuse to conform their shows for commercial gain. I found myself back in my car, where I listened to Stern every morning last summer on the way to work. For those New Yorkers and Jersey-ites who are fans of Stern, watching Talk Radio could be like a call from mom or an overdue visit home.

As for the rest of you, do not be afraid of being surrounded by people with Mets hats and Giants shirts. Talk radio is not only about a rude deejay, it goes deeper to show a man who has taken his job too seriously and the despair he faces.

Here is the big difference between Stern and Champlain: Stern is friendly with the people in his crew. Champlain is not. Stern goes home to his wife and children. Champlain? — maybe you should go and see.

Still time to catch this drama/comedy. Shows start at 8 p.m. and ticket prices are only $3 for students $5 general public. You can't get to New York and back for a better price.

French troupe in Southwest

By RUSSELL RYAN
Collegian Correspondent

The compagnie Claude Beauclair is a well-renown French theatre troupe slated to perform a 15th century French comedy "Maistre Pierre Pathelin" in Southwest Residential area today.

The play is about Pathelin — a lawyer, and his wife, who manipulate a clothier out of his possessions and his sanity. He is saved by a "lowly" shepherd, who traps the deceiving couple in their own web.

A brief interview with professor Donald Maddox, chairman of the French and Italian Department and author of the first complete study of the play, highlight several important details of the play and the performing company.

Professor Maddox said: "The play is considered to be the first great comedy in the French language." The professor discussed the importance of the play, due to its cultural and historical significance. The play describes the rise of the middle class, the importance of late midevial culture, and details the beginning structures of today's monetary and legal systems in Western civilization.

The company performing the play is headed by Claude Beauclair, a professional performer of French poetry and monologues. The company has performed widely in the United States and four other continents and have given over 2,200 performances. Professor Maddox has seen the troupe play several times and describes them: "They are consummate artists, devoted to producing great French masterpieces."

REVIEW

The play is in French, but you need not worry. Professor Maddox assured that the play would appeal to those whose understanding of French is minimal.

Maistre Pierre Pathelin will be performed tonight at 8 p.m., Hampden Theatre in Southwest. Tickets are $3 for students, five dollars for the general public. Action summaries will be avaiable for those skeptical of their French capabilities.

Beatles *Pepper*ed with success

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Correspondent

Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band
Beatles
EMI

They're back! After last year's Revolver, the Fab Four took to the studio for their longest session yet. What they brought out — Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, is an amalgamation of harmony and symphony, with hints of Rock and Roll.

The cover itself is a wonder. Crammed into one photo shoot were Albert Einstein, Marilyn Monroe, Fred Astaire, Karl Marx and Edgar Allan Poe, among others (okay, so they are only cardboard representations). In addition, there are statues, wax figures, instruments, dolls, and a flower bed. The green plants beyond the flowers appear to be of the marijuana type, but The Beatles wouldn't place them there, would they? . . .

FLASHBACK REVIEW

The complexity of this cover is an example of The Beatles' transition. At first they were simply four faces who we were being urged to meet (ie: Meet the Beatles, Introducing the Beatles). Most of the older album titles included the band's name, as shown above. Now that they are a different band musically and physically, they have symbolically changed that name for this record.

Lyrically and musically, these songs are not simple. Throughout most of them, there is a background of strings and horns, in what could be described as "The Beatles Orchestra." It would be interesting to see them bring an orchestra on tour to reproduce these songs. Despite a flurry of concert rumors, they still say they will not tour.

Sgt. Pepper begins with the title track, which leads into "With a Little Help From My Friends," sung by Ringo. Maybe he means he gets his songs 'with a little help,' as he has never written one. John and Paul were nice enough to write this one for him. They seem to do this on each album.

The next tune is "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds," a psychedelic journey through John Lennon's seemingly jibberish lyrics. This is followed by "Getting Better" and "Fixing a Hole," two mellow rock songs.

George Harrison's spotlight — "Within You, Without You," is his effort in one song to send his message. He sings, "When you've seen beyond yourself/Then you may find peace of mind," his voice is surrounded by Indian instruments.

The Beatles excel at setting moods for songs. "Being For The Benefit of Mr. Kite" gives the feel of being at a circus. "Good Morning, Good Morning" is a Beatles' style wake up call. Another, "She's Leaving Home," shows the parents' point of view after their daughter ran away. Here, the string section is put to good use. Combined with Paul's sad lyrics, McCartney makes his point.

The album closes with the ups and downs of "A Day In The Life." In this Lennon/McCartney composition, actually comprised of two songs, the orchestral sound is mixed with their psychedelic one, creating what many fans are calling a masterpiece.

WAIT! Don't pull the needle off to quickly. The groove of the record leads the needle to the center, where it enters a loop of odd sounds and voices. I urge you all to spin it backwards. It is pretty interesting.

Interesting. That is about all you can say if you are still holding on to the days of "Love Me Do." Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band is proof that those days are ancient history.

The poet in you

By LEAH ARINIELLO
Collegian Correspondent

Why did you come to class today? Everything is much more interesting outside. Your professor's voice is background music, as you start doodling in your notes. Phrases and words combine to complete a thought . . . a poem? Scribble it out quick before anyone sees.

Poetry has many insecurities attached to it and Doug Banks said, "The Poetry Society on campus helps students learn more about poetry and overcome their fears of it."

Banks is a member of the group and explains: "We read our poetry and get input and peer criticism." The group also helps students in getting their works published.

Another outlet is the UMass undergraduate poetry journal Troy. Editor Joshua Ives said he feels the Poetry Society offers himself and others a chance to exhibit works that would normally go unnoticed and unpublished. It is a training ground to help people develop their poetry for publication and their journals.

After a few jokes, UMass student Jeff Langone explained that poems come from the heart and are very personal — he said a person should keep it to themselves.

The society helps people get over the fear of showing a personal side to others. People write music all the time, which is just as private as poetry, but for some reason more acceptable.

Carl DiFronzo has opened up for bands like Stevie V. and Snapp, and said: "Most songs are just poems with music. People who write good poems could probably be great songwriters."

Next time you're in that boring class, don't hide what you've just scribbled. Go to the next Poetry Society meeting and share it, or submit it to Troy located in the Student Activities Office.

Pointing out that perhaps the most unfortunate aspect of minstrelsy was that it was the only means for an aspiring Black performer to work in entertainment, Boyer said serious Black actors were not accepted by White audiences. To be successful, they had to blacken their faces even more and exaggerate their speech and movements. Boyer said he could hardly imagine the pain these actors must have felt as they applied the cork to their faces and the powder to their lips.

Introducing the minstrel demonstration, Boyer emphasized that it was only "selections from a minstrel show, not an actual minstrel show," in other words, the performance, directed by Esther Terry of the Afro-Am department was not meant to be degrading as the original minstrel shows were. The all-Black troupe was a local quartet and special guests from North Carolina Joe Thompson on fiddle and his cousin Odell Thompson on banjo. They performed songs from the original minstrel shows such as "Swanee River" and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny." Bass vocalist Leroi Blair gave a memorable rendition of "Old Black Joe." Some of the songs carried over Reconstruction Era attitudes, for example: "All the darkies am a-weepin' 'Massa's in de cold, cold ground." Unacceptable to modern audiences, these lines were the norm in the 19th century, Boyer said.

Doris Abramson, of the theatre department, followed the performance with a discussion of stereotyping resulting from minstrelsy. Although the Reconstruction may seem to long ago to affect modern thinking, she reminded the audience of Amos and Andy, two White radio actors who portrayed Blacks in a manner similar to the minstrel shows. Amos and Andy were popular as recently as the 1950s.

ONE MILLION OF THE BEST MINDS IN AMERICA HAVE ALREADY CHOSEN THE BEST RETIREMENT PROGRAM.

TIAA-CREF.

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people in the education and research communities. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities.

We currently offer you Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) and are working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan (ORP) in Massachusetts. ORP-type plans are currently offered at public institutions of higher education in 41 of the 50 states.

SOLID PERFORMANCE AND TIMELY INNOVATION

Whether you are just starting your career or you are nearing retirement we can help you prepare for the future. Since 1918, we've been dedicated to making sure that people in education and research can count on a comfortable retirement.

We pioneered the portable pension. We invented the variable annuity. In 1988, we created the CREF Money Market Account to give you more flexibility. And in March of this year, we introduced two new accounts, the CREF Bond Market Account and the CREF Social Choice Account, to let you shape and diversify your retirement investments even further.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe that steady incremental growth over the long term is the best way to build retirement income. This investment philosophy has worked well for over seventy years, and has provided retirement income for hundreds of thousands of people like you.

THE KEYS TO RETIREMENT INVESTING

Security, growth, and diversity are the keys to sound retirement investing: security, so the resources are sure to be there when it's time to retire; growth, so you'll have the income you need for the kind of retirement you want; and diversity to help protect you against volatility and to let you benefit from the strengths of several types of investments.

TIAA AND CREF—A SMART COMBINATION

TIAA's traditional annuity provides maximum safety, guaranteeing your principal and a specified interest rate. It also gives you the opportunity for growth through dividends—which we've declared every year for 41 years. In fact, TIAA's net earned rate has beaten the industry average for every one of those years.[1]

With CREF's variable annuity, you can choose from four different investment accounts, all managed by experts who understand the long-term strategies essential to sound retirement planning.

THE FIRST CHOICE IN EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

The TIAA-CREF retirement system is specifically designed for people in education and research. You may move from one institution to another many times in your career, so your annuities move with you to any of over 4,200 institutions with TIAA-CREF retirement plans. You need financial security, so the system provides retirement income you cannot outlive. Plus, the TIAA-CREF system offers:

Performance: The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.[1]

Responsiveness: Our experienced counselors are ready to answer your questions. Call our toll-free numbers for performance figures or information about your personal annuity accumulations.

Strength: Your future is protected by the largest private retirement system in the world. We have done so well, for so many, for so long, that we currently manage over $80 billion in assets.

Eagles run wild, amass 48 points in blowout of Patriots

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles finally recognized a patsy when they saw one.

The Eagles, embarrassed losers twice this season as 14-point favorites at home, crushed the hapless 1-7 New England Patriots 48-20 Sunday as Randall Cunningham threw four touchdown passes and scrambled for 124 yards.

The Eagles also got 113 yards form second-year running back Heath Sherman in reaching the .500 mark (4-4) for the first time this season. The win was the Eagles second straight and the loss was the Patriots sixth in a row.

All week the Eagles were reminded of Phoenix and Indianapolis, the two underdogs that made them eat crow. The players were told to pretend that their opponent was the San Fransisco 49ers, not the Patriots, and that the 9½ point advantage didn't exist.

Cunningham completed 15 of 24 for 240 yards and threw scoring passes of 37 and 3 yards to Keith Jackson, 37 to Fred Barnett and 3 to Calvin Williams.

Cunningham's 124 yards on eight carries was the best of his career, exceeding the 110 against Detroit on Nov. 16, 1986. His best TD passing day was five against the Washington Redskins last year.

Sherman, starting in place of the injured Anthony Toney, gained his 113 yards on 24 carries. It was the first time since Dec. 17, 1978, that two Eagles rushed for 100 yards.

Cunningham tries to pass the credit to the much maligned offensive line.

"This is the best game I've ever seen the offensive line play. They had a great game," he said. "I can see now that we've turned the corner on the offense. Guys have confidence in themselves. I'm more confident of myself and my team than I've ever been in the past. New England is not a bad team."

Sherman said the Eagles just clicked.

"Everybody was on the same page," he said. "We blocked well and I ran at the right hole. I didn't know I had a shot at a hundred yards. I just rand hard on every play."

But coach Buddy Ryan said he did not consider the game a "cakewalk".

"Every time we punted, they seemed to pick up 50 yards. Our punt return team was their best offense for a while," he said, referring to three fumbles by the Eagles' punt returner.

New England coach Rod Rust said he couldn't remember his team playing worse on defense.

"I thought we were ready to play, and we didn't play well," he said. "Every Sunday is beginning to be a mystery to me."

Steve Grogan, 37, started at quarterback for the Patriots but neither he nor his relief, Marc Wilson, could counter the Eagles' 514 yard offense.

"Right now we're not a good team," Grogan said.

Grogan was 2-of-9 for 31 yards and Wilson 11-of 24 for 207 yards and two touchdowns.

The Eagles took a 3-0 lead with 6:19 left in the first period on Roger Ruzek's 27-yard field goal, the fifth time in the last six games the Patriots' opponent scored on its first possession. Sherman carried four times for 26 yards and caught a pair of passes for 31 in the drive.

New England tied it on a 39-yard field goal by Jason Staurovsky after Philadelfphia's Marvin Hargrove fumbled a punt and Marvin Allen recovered for the Patriots at the Eagles' 24. Three plays gained two yards and Staurovsky kicked the tying points with 3:35 left in the period.

The Eagles went ahead 10-3 with 0 seconds left in the quarter on a six-play, 71-yard drive capped by Cunningham's 37-yard touchdown pass to Barnett. The key play was a third-down 15-yard scramble by Cunningham to the New England 37.

With 2:52 left in the half, Philadelphia boosted its lead to 13-3 on Ruzek's 34-yard field goal. A 38-yard pass from Cunningham to Williams to the Patriots' 22 set it up.

But 58 seconds later the Patriots pulled to 13-10 on a two-play drive. After the kickoff, Wilson connected with Jones for 24 yards and then threw a 36-yard TD strike to Irving Fryar.

The Eagles got the margin back to 10 pints just 78 seconds later on a four-play, 80-yard drive with Cunningham throwing the final 37 yards to Jackson in the end zone. Starting at the 0, Cunningham scrambled for 13, Sherman ran for 17 and Cunningham deserted the pocket for 13 more and a first down at the Pat's 37.

Philadelphia made it 27-10, driving 80 yards on eight plays after taking the second-half kickoff. Keith Byars' 23-yard run and Barnett's 1-yard gain threw to Williams for his third TD pass of the game.

The loss should not keep UMass from qualifying for the NCAA tournament. The Minutewomen are 15-5, and unless they drop below 12th in the polls this week, they will be in the tournament.

"My unbiased opinion is that we will be in the tournament no matter what happens this weekend," said UMass coach Pam Hixon before Saturday's loss.

Also this weekend, Hixon was named the Atlantic 10 coach of the year. Senior Mara Frattasio was named first team All-Conference. Kerri Fagan, Sherlan Cabralis, Philippa Scott, and Dawn Trumbauer were each named second team All-Conference.

Thimas played on artificial grass in High School at West Haven, Conn., and had said all week he was looking forward to UMass' first game on AstroTurf this season. "It was like going home for me. It accents any running back's quickness, you can cut quicker, you can accelerate quicker. It's a great advantage," Thimas said.

Richmond tailback Eric Hopkins (46 yards, 37 in the first half) and receivers Sterling Brown and Curtis Jefferson held the advantage over the UMass defense in the first half, however. Richmond had twice as many first downs (10 to UMass' 5) and total yards (174 to 96) as the Minutemen, and held the ball 18:37 to UMass' 11:23.

However, UMass took a 7-6 lead into the locker room at halftime, on a 31-yard drive late in the second quarter in which Thimas carried the ball on every down.

In the second half, the UMass defense rebounded. Richmond was held to five first downs and 39 yards in the half, and quarterback Greg Lilly was sacked five times (twice by guard Jim Mancaruso.)

Option options: Freshman Demetrious Owens, a heralded 6-foot-1 180-pound tailback from Teaneck, N.J. would have forfeited his redshirt and replaced Thimas if the need arose. "We haven't unleashed Demetrius Owens on anybody yet," Reid said. "He's something else." Next fall the Minutemen will have four such tailbacks, including Johnson, Thimas, Owens and Jerome Bledsoe, who is expected to return from a broken ankle suffered in the season opener at Holy Cross.

Thimas, who also had six returns for 127 yards, explained why he let a fourth quarter punt roll to the UMass 9 yard line: "Actually, I was tired"...Matt Tulley started at middle linebacker and recorded 11 tackles, including a sack...Lilly used an inadvertent pick by the referee to avoid a sack in the third quarter.

Newcomers lift Minutemen over Spiders, 26-9

Tailback Eric Thimas (4), shown here against Boston University, rushed for 135 yards and two touchdowns in Saturday's 26-9 win. UMass extended its winning streak to seven games.

SAM SILVERSTEIN

RICHMOND, Va. — On great teams, everybody contributes.

In Saturday's 26-9 win at Richmond, freshmen Eric Thimas and Dave McGovern carried the University of Massachusetts one step closer to a Yankee Conference title, a bid to the playoffs and its first undefeated season since 1963.

The win, coupled with New Hampshire's second-straight Yankee Conference loss, guaranteed UMass (7-0-1 overall, 6-0 in the Yankee Conference) a share of the conference title. A win in either of the final two games, against Villanova and UNH, would give UMass the league crown outright.

Shockingly, the Spiders (1-8, 1-6) controlled the game through the early third quarter, scoring on Rob Courter field goals on their first two possessions, and again on their first drive of the second half, to hold a 9-7 lead.

From that point on, Thimas and McGovern — who had not played this year and was headed toward a redshirt season (preserving a year of eligibility) before entering to start the third quarter — settled into an offensive flow, and UMass pulled away while the defense tightened its hold.

Thimas, listed at 5-foot-5, 150 pounds, scooted around blocks by fullback David Mitchell and tackle Kai Dietiker into the right corner of the end zone to put UMass on top 13-9 (a 2-point conversion try failed) with 2:34 left in the third quarter.

Two possessions later, McGovern engineered UMass' best drive of the day, a 10-play, 52-yarder capped by a 2-yard touchdown pass to tight end Ron Villone that gave UMass a 19-9 lead.

Redshirt freshman Matt Rajotte capped the win with an interception and 63-yard return for a touchdown with less than two minutes to play.

McGovern brought shades of consistency back to the UMass offense that had been missing since starter Gary Wilkos was injured in the third quarter of the Delaware game two weeks ago. Since, Tom Fasano has started at quarterback with Paul Tornatore in as designated passer.

But when Fasano was hobbled by a sprained ankle in the first half Saturday, the decision was made to play McGovern, brother of UMass assistant coach Bill McGovern and Kansas City Chiefs linebacker Rob McGovern.

McGovern (5 of 9, 58 yards and a touchdown) threw an interception on his first collegiate dropback pass, and fumbled the Minutemen out of field goal range on their next possession ("I was a little nervous," he said after), then settled down to direct scoring drives of 54 and 52 yards.

"It wasn't a bed of roses for him early, a lot of guys could have gone into the tank," Offensive Coordinator Bob McConnell said. "He's a competitor...it's not going to take many games for him to be equal in terms of game experience."

"It's tough to break a guys redshirt with just three games left, but we've got a chance to go to the Dance, and we need to make sure we use everything we can," coach Jim Reid said.

Meanwhile, the AstroTurf at Richmond stadium turned Thimas, quick anywhere else, into a blurr. Thimas, who had lost his job as a punt return man earlier this season after several drops, then won it back with a 61-yard return for a touchdown at Delaware, entered at tailback when fellow freshman John Johnson was banged on consecutive plays in the early second quarter.

Two touchdowns and 135 yards later, Thimas earned a hug and a kiss from coach Jim Reid, and Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week, ECAC Co-Rookie-of-the-Week and the New England Football Writers Association Gold Helmet honors.

Temple, Catanzaro too tough for UMass

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Temple eliminated the University of Massachusetts field hockey team from the Atlantic 10 tournament Saturday afternoon by defeating the Minutewomen 2-0.

Temple forward Jane Catanzaro netted two goals, and goalie Jill Marple shutout the Minutewomen for 70 minutes, to lead the Lady Owls past UMass and to the finals.

UMass entered the contest ranked fifth, while the Owls were seventh. However, Temple had beaten UMass earlier in the season 3-2.

In the previous meeting, Catanzaro scored two goals, the second of which was a game winner. She is one of the toughest forwards in the league to contain, as her 49 regular season goals would indicate.

However, if you can stop her, Temple becomes a sub-par scoring team; Lori Warneka, and Monique Scally Temple's second and third leading scorers have

Volleyball drops four

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team came back from this weekend's Harvard Tournament empty handed and tired, but with good reason.

On Saturday the Minutewomen (4-26) took on the Crimson early in the day and lost, 8-15, 11-15, 12-15. But according to coach Carol Ford, these were no easy matches.

"They're all big women on the Ivy League teams. They're not the quickest, but they can block," Ford said. "At this time in the season most teams are really good."

Next UMass faced Concordia College from Quebec, Canada, which was predicted to win the entire tournament. UMass lost again, 5-15, 9-15, 5-15.

"They (Concordia) started out slow, probably from the long bus ride," Ford said. "But they turned it on pretty quickly. They served tough and really hit the ball. They were huge and a little slow, but their blocking was great."

Blocking turned out to be the biggest problem for UMass throughout the tournament. Looking back at their season Ford said, "We must have been blocked more times this weekend than all season."

Next UMass took on the Yale Elis, and lost again, 3-15, 10-15, 10-15, leaving themselves in last place in their pool.

"We just did not play well," Ford said.

On Sunday UMass found itself seeded to play the Elis again with hopes of snatching its first win, but never got out of the gate. UMass lost, 4-15, 9-15, 7-15.

"We were slow in warm-ups," Ford said, "and in the game we couldn't get our offense going and our transition was slow, too."

But according to Ford, the Minutewomen did very well on defense. "Danielle Michael was outstanding in the back row and had six service aces," said Ford "her passing on defense was incredible."

Another standout player this weekend who seems to be coming into her game is 6-foot-2 sophomore Rachel Bredemeier. "This was one of her best matches. Her blocking is improving and she's hitting and blocking really well," Ford said.

UMass will wrap up its season with games this week against Hartford and Seton Hall.

Swimmers impress in debut win

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

If you were anywhere on the University of Massachusetts campus on Saturday around 1 p.m., you probably heard battle cries echoing from Boyden Gym. However, you need not worry; it was only the crazed, high-spirited UMass women's swim team psyching itself up for the first meet of the season against Smith College.

After nine weeks of training the Minutewomen were ready to go, and they overpowered Smith 207-93. A UMass swimmer finished first in 12 of the 14 races.

"It was a great way to start out the year," UMass' seventh-year coach Robert Newcomb said. "We swam better than I thought we were going to."

Sophmore Teresa Konieczny led the way with two wins, and was a member of the victorious 400 meter freestyle relay team. She was just shy of her lifetime best in the 500 meter freestyle, and finished the 1000 meter freestyle in 11:35.14.

"She's worked hard and is really going to surprise people," Newcomb said.

Freshman Jennifer Jackson also dominated both the 200 meter freestyle (2:00.43) and 100 meter butterfly (1:02.15).

Other notables were freshmen Jennifer Saunders and Kim Broad. Saunders swam her lifetime bests in the 100 meter breast stroke (1:13.06) and the 400 meter individual medley (4:51.03). Broad was first in the 400 meter individual medley (4:50.90) and second in the 200 meter freestyle.

UMass was also dominant in the one and three meter diving competitions. In the three meter contest, freshman Allison White qualified for the NCAA zone meets with a total score of 247.75 points. White was also the winner of the one meter dive.

Although it was beaten, Smith coach Kim Bierwert was pleased with his team's overall performance in its first meet of the season.

"I think our people did real well. We honestly didn't think we'd beat UMass," he said. "I just wanted to give our swimmers a good opportunity and the experience against a good team."

Last year, the Minutewomen swimmers were 8-4 in dual meets, sixth in the New England Tournament, and 16th in the Eastern Tournament. Coach Newcomb plans on improving on all three this season.

"We're going to make a few New England coaches sit up and realize that we're alive and not floundering," Newcomb said.

Coach Newcomb has lost the services of last year's top swimmer, Michelle Leary, to graduation.

"This season no one can sit back and rely on a swimmer such as Leary. The whole attitude of the team is very much team oriented. They're all helping each other out," Newcomb said.

Newcomb said he also believes a newly adopted training schedule of more yardage and faster swimming will improve the team. The team's response has been very positive, he said.

As for the battle cries, get used to them, because for now there is no way of stopping or silencing this fiery squad.

'None of the above' votes to be counted in six towns

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Six towns in Western Massachusetts will count the write-in votes for the "None of the Above" campaign, considering it a reflection of what communities want.

The six towns, Amherst, Northampton, Leverett, Wendell, Holyoke and Springfield have all decided to tally the votes for the NOTA campaign, according to the town's clerks and election commissioners.

Dennis Kelly, from the Pioneer Pro-Democracy Campaign, said the NOTA campaign voices voter dissatisfaction with the election system.

He said, "Our opinion is that the level of voter dissatisfaction stems from alienation. Far too often, candidates receive large campaign contributions from the wealthy and those with vested interests, and not from those within the constituency."

Kelly also said the towns of South Hadley and Gill have decided to tally NOTA votes.

In the city of Holyoke, ballot-counters will count the "None of the Above" stickers, according to Holyoke City Clerk James Shea.

"It's not a great problem," Shea said. "We've got to count everything in the voting machines, and if someone puts the 'None of the Above' sticker in the write-in slot, we'll count it."

Springfield voters using the "None of the Above" stickers may or may not be counted, according to James Sullivan, the town's election commissioner. Sullivan said the votes are counted at each individual polling place, and most of the counters will disregard the write-ins unless the write-in is a person with a local address.

However, if the tallies from each precinct forwarded to him include the "None of the Above" votes, then he will report them in the city's final tally.

Wendy Mazza, assistant city clerk in Northampton, said the citizens of Northampton have voiced a desire to have the NOTA votes counted.

"Most of the community decided to go along with counting the NOTA votes, and we decided we should as well," she said.

In Amherst, the town will count the NOTA votes as a matter of consistancy, according to Joan Longton, a member of the town clerk's staff.

"We have always counted all of the write-in votes, and we will be consistant by counting the 'None of the Above' votes," Longton said.

D-Ann Kelty, the town clerk in Leverett, said the "None of the Above" campaign is "perfectly legitimate."

People want to voice their opinion. They don't like any of the candidates," Kelty said.

Kelty also said Leverett uses paper ballots, and therefore counting the NOTA votes would not be a problem.

In the town of Wendell, residents asked Anna Hardjens, the town clerk, to count the NOTA votes, and she said she would comply.

"Because they asked me, I said I would. They want to send a message," Hardjens said.

Question 3 to further state cuts

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Barbara Anderson, the executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, wants the voters to send the state legislature a message. She said the answer to the state's financial woes is "chaos" on Beacon Hill, caused by the tax rollback question.

With the defining theme of this election year being anger, Anderson hits a nerve with people who feel the Dukakis administration has betrayed them, making Massachusetts the laughing stock of the nation.

NEWS ANALYSIS

One thing Anderson has never mentioned in her arguments for question three is the future of Massachusetts, a state which is presently teetering on the edge of financial bankruptcy. When Anderson and her cohorts concocted the CLT initiative petition in 1988, the state was not in an extreme recession. There is no fat left in the budget to weather any sort of chaos.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst can testify to the decreasing amount of state revenues during the last three years. Since 1988, the University's budget has been cut nine times, including five mid-year reductions. State subsidies to the operating campus budget have declined from 53 percent to less than 40 percent. The library acquisitions budget has been reduced by more than $1.5 million.

High Court lets homosexual re-enlist

WASHINGTON (AP) — A homosexual soldier yesterday won a Supreme Court battle to re-enlist in the Army despite the military's ban on homosexuals.

The justices, without comment, let stand a federal appeals court decision requiring the Army to allow Perry Watkins of Seattle to re-enlist. Watkins is a 16-year veteran with an excellent service record.

Yesterday's action does not affect in any sweeping way the military's ban on homosexuals. The case nevertheless has been closely watched by gay rights advocates.

The appeals court ruling in Watkins' case did not address the validity of the ban, but noted that the Army had repeatedly re-enlisted Watkins while knowing he was gay.

"Sgt. Watkins has greatly benefited the Army, and therefore the country, by his military service," an 11-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said last year. "In addition, Watkins' homosexuality clearly has not hurt the Army in any way . . . Equity cries out and demands that the Army be [prohibited] from refusing to re-enlist Watkins on the basis of his homosexuality."

The appeals court vote was 7-4.

In the appeal rejected yesterday, Bush administration lawyers had argued that the federal government never should be barred from applying a valid regulation such as the Army's ban on homosexuals.

Watkins was drafted during the Vietnam War, in 1967. He was 19.

In filling out a pre-induction medical form, he marked "yes" in answering a question that asked whether he had homosexual tendencies. He was inducted anyway, and subsequently was allowed to re-enlist three times.

After two tours of duty in Korea, Watkins was stationed at Fort Lewis, near Tacoma.

Military official defends U.S. intervention in the Third World

A lecture last night on military relations between the United States and the Third World by a Pentagon official ended with controversy.

Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Low-Intensity Conflict Albert Coll addressed about 80 people about the changing world after the cold war, and the options facing the U.S. military strategy.

The key changes in world political atmosphere which Coll pointed to were the decline of the Soviet Union as a world power, and the increase of terrorist and guerrilla warfare. Deeper rooted controversies, such as "hundreds of unresolved boundary disputes" worldwide, and an increase in mass destruction capabilities among Third World countries, including chemical and nuclear weapons, led to his discussion of the U.S. role.

Coll specified three regions, Europe, the Middle East, and the Pacific Basin, where the U.S. would continue to be concerned with the balance of power. He referred to "flexible alliances" which would help the nation toward its goals. The reduction in defense spending throughout the decade, he claimed, pushed U.S. government toward the use of Special Operations Forces. These are small, specially trained forces used to provide an "element of assistance" to a society which is headed toward disintegration. He described these SOFs as "useful instruments."

Coll dedicated much of his talk to justification of U.S. intervention in the Third World. During the cold war, the U.S. could back guerrilla groups on the basis of Soviet Containment. He questioned the reasoning for future action in that respect. Humanitarian reasons, Coll indicated, would remain the foremost of reasons for supporting insurgencies.

At this point, two onlookers suggested the use of peace-keeping forces and bargaining as alternatives. Another questioned whether there are any countries where the U.S. does not intervene. Coll pointed to Africa as an area where there is generally low military action. Pressed on

Group teaches self-help

By SEAN SULLIVAN

Closing out Bisexual, Gay, and Lesbian Awareness Days at the University of Massachusetts, a local self-help group for the loved ones of gays, lesbians, and bisexuals sponsored a workshop yesterday.

The group, Pioneer Valley Parents, Families, and Friends of Lesbians and Gays, offered participants a myriad of printed materials as well as personal accounts by people who have gay and lesbian family members.

Referring to his initial sense of guilt and shock, Jim Genasci, co-founder of Pioneer Valley P-FLAG, said that after his son "came out of the closet, I went in." He stressed how valuable it was for him to educate himself, to go "past stereotypes and gain information."

Although Kristina Arscott knew that her father was gay since she was 12 years old, they never spoke about it. She only "came out" to friends while in college, and before she could share her knowledge with him, he died.

Now, she wants to work with children of gay, lesbian, and bisexual parents so they don't have to experience suffering or go through life silently.

Other speakers, including Jean Genasci, the other co-founder of Pioneer Valley P-FLAG, discussed the coming out process experienced not only by individuals, but by everyone around them.

Now the campus is in turmoil. Departments and programs are facing the budget axe. Tuition and fees for students have skyrocketed 70 percent higher than in 1988. The University's physical facilities are being left unrepaired and major construction plans have been postponed. State employees and faculty have not had cost-of-living increases in two years and may have to take a week furlough. The UMass-Amherst campus has had ample experience with fiscal chaos.

If question three passes, rolling back state tax and fee rates to 1988 levels, UMass-Amherst will lose $28 million in state funds before next semester. The petition specifically states that fee and tuition increases for public higher education will remain at present levels and will not be rolled back.

The administration would be forced to either increase annual tuition by $4,000 per student or to lay off more than 1,400 state-funded employees, of which 520 will be faculty.

If faculty is reduced to this drastic extent, student enrollment will have to also be cut by more than 40 percent. The loss in student enrollment would cost the campus more than $32 million in lost fee and research grant revenues. To compensate for this added loss, another 500 employees would have to go.

The $400 fee hike passed last week by the UMass Board of Trustees has already caused many students to question whether or not they will return to campus next semester. The increase in the cost of attendance resulting from the passage of question three will further the privatization of the campus by making education less accessible to the lower and middle-classes in the state. That is, of course, if the campus is still operating at all.

The dwindling numbers of college students attending public schools will punish the state economic system much longer than even perhaps Anderson wants. More industries and businesses will flee the state, not to avoid excessive taxation, but the lack of a trained and educated young workforce. As Massachusetts is the only state to decrease public higher education funding by a double-digit percentage over the last three years, industries would not have a hard time finding a more suitable place to settle than here.

Although Anderson sent her own son to UMass-Amherst for four years, she cannot seem to grasp what her petition will do to public higher education this December and later to the future of the workforce in the state. She prefers to regressively punish the people of Massachusetts for the past political sins of Dukakis with question three as her club.

The time has come to look ahead and work to rebuild the state. A vote against the chaos of question three will be a start.

Question two threatens program for disabled

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Correspondent

A residential program in Belchertown which helps people who have been in institutions gain their independence is in danger of closing if ballot question two passes in the polls today.

Shelton's Inc. operates a residential program in which 23 individuals, labeled "developmentally disabled," who have spent most of their lives either in institutions or at home with their families are placed in a community setting "where they are encouraged to develop the skills to become as independent as possible," explained Jennifer Lerner, a Resident Director at Shelton Inc., a state-funded human services agency in Belchertown.

The program, which was founded in 1972, "provides an environment in which clients are encouraged to reach their fullest potential as human beings," she said.

"We had to give justification for putting developmentally disabled people back in the community. I turned around and said you justify why we took them out. You don't need justification to be a member of the human race," said Paul Shelton, founder and director of the program.

Shelton and Lerner stressed that the key to this effort is the development of a healthy self-esteem by each individual client. "It's nearly impossible to be a long-term resident in an institution without developing mental health problems," Lerner said. "The entire system is designed to be degrading – it completely strips a person of any sense of self-worth – these people are told they are of no use to society – that they don't belong."

Each of the five clients in Lerner's program live in apartments. Two apartments are shared, and one apartment is a single. Everyone has their own bedroom, Lerner explained, which for some clients has been a new experience. "Some of these people didn't even understand that food was cooked," Lerner said, "because in the institution all they ever experienced was its daily arrival on a steel tray. They didn't understand about washing clothes, because the dirty ones just disappeared and clean ones appeared."

Lerner said question two poses a direct threat to many private agencies, like Shelton's, because the private agencies may be defined as "consultants" under the proposal. She said if the question passes Shelton's will lose all of its funding and will be forced to close.

Lerner stresses the institutional conditioning that many of her clients have to overcome in order to begin a new life: "All of these individuals were denied a normal childhood – they weren't given toys or contact with normal children. They never had an opportunity to interact in a normal social environment – their main interaction was with all-adult staff. The first thing we taught people was how to play . . . "

"We're undoing a lot of things that have been done wrong," Shelton said. "We work with people who have been thrown aside, whose early formative years were distorted . . who learned early in life that they had no value . . . Can you imagine taking a four-year-old child to a state institution and signing him in – he kisses his parents goodbye and may never see them again . . . this shouldn't happen."

"In the ideal world," Shelton continued, "every child would be given a normal family setting. Every child needs parents – sometimes they can't be the birth parents . . . but [developmentally disabled children] should be given the same kinds of opportunities to develop as normal kids – to promote them becoming the best that they can be."

Shelton's Inc. was a pioneer in this concept, which reflected Shelton's own personal convictions. "It seemed like, when raising my own kids, I would want the same things for developmentally disabled people that I would want for them – to learn to be responsible, to take care of themselves, to develop self-respect."

State agencies boost resort

Plan discussed for $200 million state project

ADAMS, Mass. (AP) – The proposed construction of a state-backed $200 million vacation home resort in the Berkshires has gotten a boost from two state review agencies.

Alden Raine, the top economic aide to Gov. Michael Dukakis and a strong backer of the Mount Greylock project, said yesterday that the endorsement of the departments of environmental management and capitol planning could allow the Dukakis administration to complete the basic planning and business agreements for the resort before the governor leaves office in January.

"If those things are in place I am confident that we will have left the project in as good a shape as we can leave it in," Raine said.

But, he said the developer would still have to obtain private financing, which would "depend on the market place" and it would be the next administration that would oversee specific reviews and decide how the state's share of the project would be financed.

Since the state legislature first voted five years ago, the proposed state contribution has risen from $8 million to more than $18.5 million.

But Raine said the additional money could be taken from previously approved environmental and transportation bond issues without going back to the legislature.

But one legislator, who has a bill pending to shelve the project, predicted, "regardless of who is governor come tomorrow, it will not survive."

"If it was possible to get people more angry they did by coming out with this a few days before the election," said Sate Rep. William P. Nagle (D-Northampton). "What planet are they on to even consider spending this kind of money on a dubious second-home development for wealthy New Yorkers given the depressed state of the real estate market at a time when the state is laying off hospital orderlies and workers in the most sensitive areas?"

Laurie Martinelli, director of public policy for the Massachusetts Audubon Society, said the society has not yet prepared its comments on the agencies' findings, which are subject to 30 days of reviews. But she said environmentalists, who have threatened to sue, remain opposed to the construction on the state's highest peak.

The latest proposal calls for a mix of 850 condominium and single-family units adjacent to the protected upper slopes of the wild 3,491-foot mountain in the state's far Northwest corner.

It also calls for a range of recreational amenities, including a golf course, swimming ponds, an amphitheater and a "norpine," or recreational facilities would be built by the state.

Gary Schiff, project director for Heritage Development Group of Southbury, Conn. said the developers were not discouraged by the current slump in the real estate market.

"This is a long-term project. We never envisioned it as a fast process and always anticipated that it would weather all sorts of economic cycles," he said.

"It's opportune that we are in the planning and not the building or selling phase," Schiff said. "By the time we are ready to build it will be a different economic climate."

Civil rights policy passes unanimously

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

A hotly debated civil rights policy, which was tabled at last Monday's Town Meeting, was passed last night after being amended by the Civil Rights Review Commission.

The policy "seeks to protect and promote the civil rights of all persons in [the Amherst] community," and comes in response to a racial incident between Black and White youths which occurred on the Amherst Common last summer.

The policy states that the Amherst Select Board and Town Meeting acknowledge that discriminatory acts do and have occurred in Amherst and adds that any such "infringement" of civil rights will be "vigorously opposed" by the town.

Sue Lee, a member of the CRRC, advocated the policy, saying that it would establish that "this town will take definitive action to condemn discrimination."

Rick Edwards of the School Committee also urged the meeting to vote in favor of the policy.

"Voting it down will be seen as a lack of concern on the part of the town on this issue," he said.

Although the Town Meeting unanimously approved the policy, some Town Meeting members criticized the way it was presented.

"I feel my civil rights and freedom of speech are being violated by the subtle tone being established here – that we shouldn't even be discussing [the policy]," Michael A. Cann, a Town Meeting member said.

Cann then proposed to add a preamble to the policy which specifically states the rights of residents to freedom of speech.

His ammendment was approved by the meeting. Cann was backed by resident Edward Bisson who said, "We need to be able to disagree without being disagreeable . . . Everyone should be able to speak their minds."

Apart from these arguments, the intention of the Community-service activist encourages student activism

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

College students and graduates alike should challenge themselves to become involved in the community and help work on issues that concern them, rather than become isolated from society's problems, a national community-service activist said last night.

"I challenge you to have vision in what can be and what can happen," said Wayne Meisel, the founder and former director of Campus Opportunity Outreach League, a group which recruits students for community service projects.

Addressing an audience of nearly 50 people, Meisel said that many students feel disempowered, and that they also feel that others are apathetic. He cited a survey conducted at the University of Minnesota in which students were asked how concerned they were about problems in society. Eighty percent of those questioned said they were very concerned with the issues, Meisel said, while 25 percent said they felt other students were very concerned.

Meisel said that there is an "anxious paralysis" among young people, caused by the need to choose where they want to focus their energies. He added that people should not let the anxiety keep them from helping to create change.

"We have to strive to be confident and to be committed in our work," he said.

Meisel also said that many people he admires, such as Civil Rights pioneer Rosa Parks, started out as reluctant activists, only becoming involved when they saw an immediate need to become involved.

"While Rosa Parks didn't go looking for a fight," he said, "she was prepared for one."

He said that activism is not restricted to those with official titles, because every student has a sense of authority.

"I challenge you to accept your authority," Meisel said. "Because you are a student and have an ability to help, you have an authority."

Research Group, the Student Government Association, the Graduate Student Senate, Housing Services, and the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority.

MassPIRG has put together a voter packet of information about the candidates and referendum questions, that, with the help of Housing Services, will be distributed to every Resident Assistant on campus. The RAs held meetings last night to discuss this information and give students the opportunity to ask any questions or voice any opinions they might have.

"We feel it is essential that students receive this information and we see the floor meetings as the most effective medium to get his information across," said Larry Moneta, director of Housing Services.

This is the latest in MassPIRG's efforts to get out the student vote. Earlier this semester, 2,200 students were registered to vote in a massive on-campus registration drive. According to Aaron Rome, coordinator for voter registration, efforts have led to the registration of 14,000 voters statewide.

A voter bus will be available to transport campus residents to the polls. The yellow school bus, staffed by volunteers from the PVTA, will leave from Haigis Mall every half hour from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The bus will stop at the Franklin and Worcester Dining Commons and at the Horseshoe in Southwest every 45 minutes from 5:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. Polls in Amherst will be open until 8 p.m.

policy was widely endorsed and the criticisms of vagueness which had dominated the debate at the last Town Meeting were not discussed.

Howard Ziff, a voting member, and a journalism professor at the University of Massachusetts, endorsed the policy without reservation.

"There is a lot of vagueness in this document, and there ought to be," he said. "This is not a document of procedure, it is a document of policy."

In other business, the Town Meeting voted to appropriate $100,000 from the water fund for the removal of 80 underground fuel tanks located in the Lawrence Swamp aquifer. The money will be used to aid residents who own the tanks in paying for the removal, which must be completed by July 31, 1992.

According to the Chairperson of the Board of Health, the tanks would each cost between $1,000 and $2,000 to remove.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

All out to stop Silber and question three

Bill Rosenblatt

I am about to do something I didn't think I'd ever do in my life. I am voting Republican for governor. Not because I particularly like William Weld (I don't) or because I am in favor of ballot question three (I'm not). Simply because I can't bear the thought of John Silber as governor, and voting for Weld is the only realistic way to prevent it from happening.

Yes, folks, I consider myself a "liberal," and I am a registered Democrat. I feel that the most serious attack on the socially and politically disaffected in this country is not specific fiscal or even legal actions (though these are pretty depressing, too), but the moral tone set by our alleged leaders.

By now we're all familiar with the tone Ronald Reagan set and/or represented during his crippling eight years in office. But it is important to realize that the Reagan oeuvre sowed the seeds for the full flowering of the likes of Jesse Helms, David Duke, Newt Gingrich, Clayton Williams...and John Silber.

As columnist Derrick Z. Jackson said in last Friday's Boston Globe, Silber is "David Duke with a Ph.D." This analogy is totally appropriate, and very scary. It makes me begin to understand why some African-Americans say they prefer the blatant, Southern-fried bigotry of a Duke or a Helms to the more subtle form we tend to have up here in Yankee country: at least it is obvious and therefore easier to avoid. That this kind of backward ideology has infiltrated the Democratic party is also scary; it means that the party's ideological base is faltering, and that we Democrats should stop automatically supporting a candidate just because of his or her party affiliation.

It should be abundantly clear by now that Silber doesn't give a damn about anyone but himself, and maybe White males under the age of 65. The tone he would set as governor will cause deep scars in the social fabric of the state that will be far more difficult to heal than a piece of legislation that can be nullified with a single vote or signature. Which leads us to the persnickety problem of question three. Like most sane people, I am against it, while Weld is in favor of it. However, he has recently expressed doubts about its practicability.

Furthermore, I am willing to gamble that a mandate against it from the electorate will cause him to accept the "no" decision; unlike Silber, he seems to be the kind of guy who would listen to what others have to say, and after all, the voters are the ones who decide question three.

I am also willing to gamble that Weld's lack of leadership ability will allow us to muddle through the next four years without things getting appreciably worse; under Silber, they are sure to get far worse.

One more thing: I know that a lot of you who (like me) are disgusted with the election choices plan to vote "None Of The Above" (NOTA) in accordance with the local campaign that is pushing that option. In doing this, you think you will "send a message."

But, the NOTA votes are not being officially counted, although some town clerks will unofficially tabulate the number of NOTA votes. And even if 10,000 people vote NOTA, the statistic would be quickly forgotten as we settle into the grim reality of four years under a racist, sexist, ageist demagogue.

Silber is the kind of scapegoat-hunter that people in desperation turn to for the false promise of quick fixes (blame child abuse on working women; blame the fiscal mess on Cambodian "welfare bums"). This is the same Hitler-like rationale as that behind question three. The only practical way to defeat Silber is to vote for Weld. Any other choice just puts Silber one vote closer to the corner office in the Statehouse. Another thing you can do is vote yes on question four to reduce the chance of a similar non-choice in the future. And, vote no on question three!

No more premature decoration — Part 2

Meredith O'Brien

It was Oct. 19. I looked around and gasped, unable to believe what appeared to be utter lunacy.

"No, not again," I angrily whispered to my roommate. "I can't believe it!"

Right before my eyes history was repeating itself. My mind quickly shuffled back in time to a column I had written last year. The situation had not changed. It had only grown more sadistic.

There were Christmas decorations — lights, fake holly, mock packages, snowflakes, Santa Claus, cheap-looking tinsel, Christmas cards and wrapping paper — saturating a local department store on Oct. 19.

The Halloween decorations, which were in season, were pushed aside in a sloppy pile — marked down.

Just last year, I had been in this store two days before Halloween and saw the same thing — premature yuletide decorations. I had ranted and raved that it was decorated two days before Halloween.

Not that I really thought what I had written would suddenly prompt stores nationwide to have the decency and respect to wait until after Thanksgiving before decorating, but I really didn't think it would get worse.

Every year decorations are put up earlier and earlier. The religious meaning of the holiday is desecrated in the face of tacky pink, plastic nativity scenes put up in September or August. Every year retailers try to make people buy earlier so they will start spending their money earlier — thinking if money is spent over an extended period of time, we'll spend more.

This year, instead of simply airing my utter disgust with this practice of decorating by mid-September, I decided to go straight to the source. For over a week, I diligently tried to reach the "visual production manager" (i.e. the fiend who has sought to ruin my Christmas year after year with premature decorations) from the villainous store I had seen the decorations in.

When I finally tracked her down, in between her criminal decorating binges in other stores, she told me why her department store chain, and feasibly every other store, decorates so early.

"It's a question of man-power," she said. "With so much square footage to cover in so many stores, it would be impossible to start decorating after Thanksgiving. The decorating wouldn't be done until New Year's Eve."

She went on to say that about 20 years ago, Macy's (the Christmas store in New York City — the scene of Miracle on 32nd Street) would shut down its store two days before Thanksgiving and bring in hired help to specifically decorate the store. By the "biggest shopping day of the year," Macy's was all decked out to greet the avid shoppers.

But the visual propagandist said that decorating just before Thanksgiving would not be feasible in today's world. There is no way for her store to close down for a few days to decorate, she added, saying, as an aside, that early decorating does prompt more and earlier Christmas spending.

Just what I expected to hear. The good old days of celebrating holidays at the appropriate season have long since gone by.

While I loathe those tacky, demeaning Christmas decorations, I would be somewhat satisfied if retailers could hold off a bit on their decorating frenzy, just to allow us to at least enjoy our turkey dinners without having "the (commercial) Christmas spirit" squeeze Thanksgiving and all of its meaning out of our minds.

Rudolph and Frosty will have to wait.

'NOTA' and the law

In some jurisdictions, write-in ballots which do not name a person eligible to hold the office will result in the entire ballot being discarded. Writing in "Mickey Mouse" for dogcatcher can result in the ballot being literally thrown in the trash can, and perfectly valid votes for other offices not being counted.

Persons who wish to write in "NOTA" (None Of The Above) should consult the Registrar in the municipality in which they intend to vote.

Thus, while there is an argument in favor of writing in "NOTA," persons intending to do so should reflect upon the impact which this may have upon other candidates on the ballot, whom they would like to see elected.

Rep. Conte works for renewable energy

A front page article in the Collegian on October 25 announced that Congress had approved $1.9 million dololars for renewable energy research at the University. Regrettably, the article failed to mention that it was Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) who was responsible for successfully shepherding the necessary legislation through all the many steps of the appropriations process.

Rep. Conte has been a strong supporter of renewable energy research and education at the University since the 1970's. In fact, it is safe to say that without his efforts, there would be no program here now.

Other people in the United States are now finally waking up from their energy coma. They are realizing again that the supply of oil is indeed finite and the source is not secure. Even when it is available, there are other problems, just as serious, which are exacerbated by its use: air pollution, acid rain, and global warming. The best approach to mitigate the effects of these problems, and prepare for the time when all fossil fuels are exhausted or prohibitively expensive is devise ways that will allow us to have sustainable energy future. It will be based on renewable energy sources, such as wind, hydro and solar electric; solar heating, ocean thermal differences; and biomass; all used as efficiently as possible.

We should all be very grateful to such far-sighted leaders as Rep. Silvio Conte who have helped to make that possible.

I'm splitting the ticket

Massachusetts is a state in distress. Whether or not question three passes, the next governor is going to have a difficult job in front of him. But, when I look at this year's candidates for governor, I find that I am frightened by one of the candidates. I think John Silber is singularly unsuited to be the governor of Massachusetts.

I have some doubts about some of William Weld's positions on the issues, but I think he has the integrity to do the job. I don't think Silber does.

And Marjorie Clapprood strikes me as the only candidate even approaching "liberal" status. So I've decided to vote for a split ticket this year. If Weld had Clapprood as his lieutenant governor, that would send the right message.

You might have heard that voting a split ticket isn't possible. The Massachusetts constitution provides that the candidates for governor and lieutenant governor are listed by "tickets" on the ballot and a vote cast for a ticket counts as vote for both candidates. But there's a loophole: the ballot also includes a provision for write-in votes and that's just what I'm going to do: William Weld for governor and Marjorie Clapprood for lieutenant governor. I hope you'll join me.

Administration's anti-union letter undermines real discussion of issues

As a member of the Professional Staff Union (Local 509, Service Employees International Union), I want to comment on the letter that was sent by the administration to graduate students eligible to vote in the union election. That letter, and the distortions it contains, does not contribute to any full and fair discussion of these issues.

Here are some of the inaccuracies and distortions:

1) On campus unions bargain with the Board of Regents or the Board of Trustees, not the Office of Employee Relations; the administration certainly has some influence there.

2) Graduate stipends have increased at a higher percentage than faculty salaries because they were so pathetically low to begin with. They were raised under pressure from organized graduate students, and because the University was having a hard time recruiting graduate students to come here — certainly not out of the goodness of the administrations heart. In fact, the faculty was only able to improve their salaries by unionizing and negotiating increases years before the period mentioned in the letter.

3) The only reason that graduate students are unaffected by the proposed layoffs is that because of their low salaries, it would be too much trouble to include them given the low savings that would be achieved. To date, none of the unions have accepted these "layoffs," and, because we have unions, the administration must negotiate with us over these proposals.

4) The idea that a non-union alternative would serve graduate students better is totally disproved by the history of this university, where every other employee group has seen it in their interest to unionize. The same of rhetoric was used in the professional staff election last year, and we rejected it when over 70 of voters chose Local 509 over the options of no union or an offshoot group of the existing professional association.

5) The idea that District 65 will not truly represent graduate students is totally false. District 65 has always been strongly committed to union democracy, which means that graduate students here will make all of the decisions that affect them, but will have the counsel and resources of District 65 (of which other graduate students are already members) to back them up.

6) Unions cannot provide absolute protection of jobs or improved salaries. But, unions with active member involvement can greatly increase the prospects of protecting jobs and increasing salaries and working conditions of employees—this is true in virtually every organized workplace in this country.

Graduate employees shouldn't be fooled by this latest anti-labor tactic of the administration. Look at the history of graduate student concerns, and the improved lot of other employees on campus who have the protection and benefits that union membership offers.

Social Distortion gets back on track in Noho

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

A young boy, pubescent hormones raging through his veins, stands in front of a mirror with a guitar slung around his neck. He dreams of the day when he is awarded a Grammy for his effort, or of the day he composes the greatest musical piece known to man.

Bulldinkies. He dreams of how many girls he can bang and how many drugs he can sample before he turns 30, if he turns 30.

Unfortunately, it is this attitude that leads to the untimely death of many bands, as it almost did for Social Distortion.

Lead vocalist and guitarist Mike Ness founded the group in 1979 during the late 70s punk explosion in Southern California. The group, influenced by Eddie Cochran and the Rolling Stones, released their first single, "Playpen," in 1980, followed by "1945" in 1981, released on their own label, 13th Story.

In 1982, they toured the United States for the first time. The tour was promoted and publicized by the quasi-anarchistic underground network called the Better Youth Organization.

Their debut LP, Mommy's Little Monster, released on 13th Story, came out in 1983. It was simultaneously released with the single "Mommy's Little Monster" b/w "Another State of Mind." Their future looked promising. They were opening for acts like the Ramones, Public Image Ltd., X and Joan Jett. But then the lethal stigma of the "sex, drugs and rock-n-roll" stereotype held the group in a four year limbo as Ness tried to come to terms with his drug and legal problems.

"I like a lot of kids," Ness explained, "I joined a band for sex, drugs and rock-n-roll. My problem, for a long time, was in not realizing that music was the most important thing."

In 1988, the group was back on track with Prison Bound, an album inspired by Ness' experiences. The album was very successful, leading to a record deal with Epic, who released their self-titled LP this summer. Their major label debut was put together by the present line-up of Ness, guitarist Dennis Danell, bassist John Maurer and drummer Christopher Reece and has caused a major uproar within the ranks of old fans who have charged that the group has sold out. The verdict is ultimately in your hands.

Social Distortion will play at Pearl Street. The 18-and-over show starts at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $8.

Guitarist Michael Hedges mesmerizes Academy crowd

REVIEW

The guy is amazing.

Saying that Michael Hedges plays guitar would be a gross understatement. He hits, slaps, wrings, stretches, caresses and flails away on his guitar. Armed with only two acoustic guitars, an amazing instrument called a harp guitar and a stunning sound system, Michael Hedges mesmerized a packed house at the Academy of Music in Northampton on Sunday night.

Although his music is classified as "new age," he describes his style of playing as "acoustic thrash" or "savage myth guitar." I'm not sure if his fingers were bleeding or not, but a number of times during the performance it sounded as if the guitar was going to snap in his hands. His work contains none of the endless, arid meandering that plagues so many new age artists, and he displayed his droll sense of humor throughout the show.

It would be safe to say that Michael Hedges is the Joe Cocker of guitarists. Just as Joe Cocker flails around and becomes one with the song, Michael hunches over and flails away and becomes one with the music. When he spoke on stage, alone between two spiral staircases of speakers and casually dressed in an oversized, rumpled t-shirt and baggy pants, he was reserved and almost seemed small, frail and weak.

His unassuming appearance disappeared the second he slammed on his guitar, though! His head constantly shook back and forth and bobbed up and down while the rest of his body wriggled away uncontrollably. Much of the enthusiastic audience bobbed along with him.

He shuffled on stage with a cover version of the Who's "Eminence Front," and before the night was over he threw in a few more covers as well. Among them were the Rolling Stones' "Gimme Shelter," Neneh Cherry's "Buffalo Stance" (and he's new age?), a sing-along rendition of "She Drives Me Crazy" by Fine Young Cannibals and a hilarious encore which scrambled up Sheila E.'s "A Love Bizarre" and the Fifth Dimension's "Aquarius/Let the Sunshine In."

Michael included plenty of originals, of course, and the set list ranged all the way from a song he wrote 16 years ago to a trio of original instrumentals from his brand new album Tap Root. He played a number of new songs from the album, one of which, "Ritual Dance", was a great showcase for his unique craft. Other highlights were "i carry your heart," which is an e.e. cummings's poem that he set to music, "Watching Life Go By," and of course, "The Funky Avocado," which threw in a line from another Stones classic, "Miss You."

On, "Because It's There," one of his best instrumentals, he showcased the intricate harp guitar which is a six-string guitar with an extra six bass harp strings fitted on top. To see Michael Hedges take control of this instrument and become totally absorbed in the music has to be seen to be believed. By the close of the show, he was drenched with sweat and visibly exhausted. To think that he had to play a 10 p.m. show just 45 minutes later was unbelievable.

After the show ended and most of the audience filtered out, he came out, talked (well, panted and mumbled) and signed autographs for the few totally enthralled fans who were perched outside the stage door. Maybe in the future he could release a videotape of his concert and call it "The Michael Hedges Workout!" If you missed him, do yourself a favor and buy one of his CD's, especially Live on the Double Planet, but make sure you catch him next time around.

The guy is amazing!

Asian American play to perform

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

Students and community members will have the opportunity to view Asian American theater talent this week. The University of Massachusetts' New WORLD Theater is scheduled to present Philip Kan Gotanda's Yankee Dawg You Die this Thursday, Nov. 8, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Yankee Dawg You Die, performed by the San Francisco-based Asian American Theater Company, tells the struggle of two Asian actors in mainstream Hollywood.

Yankee Dawg is a timely representation of social issues inhibiting Asian American talent. Vincent Chang and Bradley Yamashita represent two generations of Asian Americans facing the same problem; getting legitimate and dignified acting jobs in a predominately White-male-controlled Hollywood.

Like all "minority" actors, their job opportunities have been limited to small roles and walk-on parts depicting stereotypes of Asians. Vincent, representing the older generation, never turns down a job although he tries to bring as much dignity to them as possible. Bradley, representing the younger, more socially aware generation, refuses acting jobs which are demeaning to his community.

Vincent and Bradley represent the abundant amount of Asian talent and the lack of job opportunities for such talent. Their story reveals the struggle between working for survival, to pay for food and rent, and compromising their ideals and values, thus misrepresenting the Asian community.

Yankee Dawg is directed by Lane Nishikawa, the Asian American Theater Company's Associate Artistic Director, who wrote and performed the hit I'm on a Mission from Buddha.

Philip Kan Gotanda is an accomplished playwright and screenwriter whose credits include A Song for Nisei Fisherman and The Wash.

Yankee Dawg is another New WORLD Theater presentation that offers alternative sources of theater entertainment which raises social awareness of "minority" experiences.

Tutors needed for TEAMS

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

"Tutors can make a world of difference in a student's education," said professor Robert Maloy, director of the Tutoring Enrichment and Assistance Models with Schools project at the University of Massachusetts in a recent interview.

The TEAMS Project sends University students into area public middle and high schools to tutor culturally diverse students for whom English is a new language.

Tutoring takes place both in and after school and spans all middle and high school subjects. "Tutoring language-minority students does not automatically mean English," Maloy said. "We focus, however, on the functional use of the English language within their various academic subjects and in everyday communication," he said.

In its seventh year, the TEAMS Project has provided public schools with some 275 University students spanning 55 academic majors who have tutored over 12,000 hours.

This year, with 60 University students, TEAMS gives tutoring services to Amherst, Northampton, Greenfield and Holyoke public schools and the Chicopee Job Corps.

Tutors engage in one-on-one and small group assistance to Asian, African, Latin American, European and other students who are in the process of learning English.

"In addition to academics, tutors help culturally diverse students adjust to 'American culture' and represent positive aspects of higher education," Maloy said.

"Tutoring puts one's education to a test. You discover what you've learned when you can turn around and teach it to someone else," he said. "It's an opportunity to apply your knowledge and help others."

Maloy said that tutors also learn a great deal from tutoring culturally diverse students. "The learning that takes place is mutual — both tutors and their students benefit a great deal," he said.

"Tutoring not only makes a difference in someone else's life, it makes a difference in your life as well," Maloy said.

"TEAMS puts University students into a non-mainstream academic environment," said Boreth Sun, a UMass graduate student in the School of Education. Sun said that dealing with people from foreign cultures challenges your American beliefs and ideology when exposed to racist and prejudiced attitudes towards non-native Americans.

"TEAMS is about more than just tutoring students, tutors also go through a great mutual learning experience," said Noelle James, a senior psychology major. James said that the students she has tutored have taught her about their cultures and ideas. Things she said she would have never learned in the classroom.

The TEAMS Project is a three credit class offered by the School of Education in conjunction with the Division of Continuing Education. University students from all academic majors, cultural backgrounds or who speak a foreign language are welcome to apply.

TEAMS will have an information table on the UMass Campus Center concourse for five days beginning this Wednesday and there will be an open house on Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 7 p.m. at the United Asia Cultural Center.

In the future project organizers plan to expand into additional school sites and provide tutoring for additional cultural groups as schools become more diverse.

"TEAMS also looks forward to increased Five-College student participation," Maloy said.

Maloy added that there is a possibility of linking TEAMS to secondary teacher certification programs so that undergraduate students can explore teaching as a career alternative.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Now, more than ever, details matter. Avoid making impulsive decisions. Take time to get all the facts before you commit yourself to anything.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) What you know is more important than with whom you know. And confidence and a clear, calm outlook are depressing thoughts. Use them to make important decisions positive ones.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Listening to the views of others will benefit you greatly now. A new friend may be extremely attracted to you. Be careful, though, not to overdo the flirtation. Romance is highlighted.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can let someone's hospitality get you into selling your territory. It's possible that you remain. Both relatives and friends are eager to help out during an emergency.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) Staff members can lead helpful profits now. Key goods can be reached by forging an alliance with a shrewd acquaintance. Romance is a source of delight. Spruce up your home on the weekends.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) You're back on track where your career or finances are concerned. A big business deal deserves closer scrutiny. Behind closed doors you can wheel and deal all you want. But romance isn't hold.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) You may be tired of pretending. Cooperative meeting is good for both business and romance. Your sweetheart will be very willing to help you with your career.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) A good deal includes personal interaction. Be careful in dealing with a member of the opposite sex. Your partner's jealousy could be a problem. Be patient.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) Take a more active interest in financial and professional matters. You are getting a chance to show the powers-that-be what you're capable of. Don't be afraid to speak up.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) Your career is undergoing changes. Don't be surprised if you're asked to do extra work. Be willing to pitch in. Your reward will be worth the effort. Romance takes a turn for the better.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) Keep a low profile today to avoid clashing with those who have power over you. All goals will be achievable if you're intelligent and promise is there.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) The first order of the day is to determine which ends have not flowing. The next step is to otherwise value dedicated to juggling with your ideas. A close relationship needs nurturing.

"My high school coach said I would improve and I am pleased with the results so far," Liljeblad said. "The work outs here a much more difficult than in high school, but the added mileage has helped me."

After sharring the spotlight with teammate Becky Johnson during the regular season, Liljeblad broke out and starred at the A-10s. There she finished seventh overall and missed winning Freshman-of-the-Year honors by one second.

"She was simply tremendous that day," said LaFreniere. "It was the best race of her life."

It is not just Liljeblad's athletic performance that LaFreniere raves about but also her team spirit and personality

"She is a great person," said LaFreniere. "She is just a very pleasant kid with a good head on her shoulders. Kelly has a ton of talent and is a great competitor who won't quit."

After battling the flu for five days Liljeblad finished 20th overall at the New England Championships. Although Liljeblad was obviously affected by the flu, LaFreniere said she gave it everything she had.

"After the meet Kelly was almost in tears because she felt she let the team down," said LaFreniere. "She ran well even though she had been sick. I could not have asked for a better effort but she hated to let them down."

As for Saturday's ECAC Championships, Liljeblad is not making any predictions.

"We are just hoping to finish the season strong and place well as a team," she said.

This kind of team spirit suits her coach just fine.

"I couldn't ask for a better recruit," said LaFreniere. "I only wish I had ten more Kelly's."

Norris, a division more interested in mayhem than hockey — three of last year's top four penalized teams play there. Clagary isn't that much better than any other Smythe division team, but they easily have the most talent.

As for a Stanley Cup pick, it's way too early to say, but I like the Sabres' chances. But don't be surprised if St. Louis wins, either.

Catharine Hoehl are the Big Green's biggest threats.

The Vermont swimmers have only been training in the water for four weeks, compared to UMass' nine weeks. In addition, several Vermont swimmers are hampered by sickness. Nonetheless, Nichols said he is confident his team will be competitive.

"I'm sure we'll give them a good meet," he said.

UMass has backstroke threats of their own with Kiri Binning in the 100 meter and Barbara Banks in the 200 meter. Both Minutewomen were victorious in their races on Saturday. Others to watch are sprinters Denise Reimer in the 50 meter freestyle and Keira Cruz in the 100 meter freestyle, also winners Saturday.

UMass freshman Allison White looks like she could dominate the one meter and three meter dives as she did on Saturday.

"We're looking to go in and continue rolling," Newcomb said. "We hope to get another set of eye-opening information out to coaches throughout New England."

Ford also mentioned the improved play of middle blockers Rachel Bredemeier and Sharon Panoff as well as Patricia Diorio, who has returned to proper form.

Despite the improved play of the team, Ford admitted, "We have a tough match ahead of us."

Rugby falls to Yale, 21-14

By DAVE SZPILA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts rugby club suffered a 21-14 defeat this weekend to a visiting rugby squad from Yale.

UMass started off the scoring in the first half on a try by Paul McClelland. The score was set up by solid passing from Bobby Hill and Bob Carney. The kick after failed.

Yale came right back, however, and scored a try of its own, tying the game at 4-all.

UMass was not to be denied though and, taking a pass from Bob Hill, Paul McClelland scampered 25 yards for his second try of the match. The kick was good this time from Hill leaving the score 10-4 at halftime in favor of UMass.

Yale opened up the scoring in the second half with a try upping the score to 10-8. UMass came right back with a try from Dan Halloran and UMass, with 25 minutes gone in the half, were looking to rap up the match.

Yale was not ready to lay down as they came back with a try and a conversion to tie up the contest at 14. UMass got the ball back but were called for an offsides.

Yale hit the penalty kick to go up 17-14 with time dwindling. UMass could not score but Yale scored a try on the last play of the game to end up with the seven-point victory.

"The Yale players were easily the biggest we have seen all year," said UMass captain Bob Carney.

Other on-the-field activities included a trio of fights which broke out during the match. The first was initiated after a late hit by an Eli. The second ensued after a Yale player at the bottom of a ruck. The third saw Ed Doyle leave the game after popping a Yale player in the head.

Standouts for UMass were Dave (Warpa) Lalley and Jim Counihan, who overcame stomach problems to play in the match, as well as the above-mentioned players.

Dan Halloran went out with an injury in the weekend contest and was replaced by Greg Champeau, who was out all week with an injury himself.

The rugby club travels to Springfield this weekend to face a Springfield men's club team.

Water polo takes Harvard, advances to Easterns at Navy

By JOE DEGLORIA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts water polo team had to beat Harvard at the New Englands in order to get to the Eastern Championships — and it did just that.

UMass lost their second game to Brown but the Harvard game was the most important. Only the top two teams of the event would go on to compete in the Easterns. UMass beat the Harvard team by a 6-4 score but UMass coach Russ Yarworth said that the score is not indicative of the game.

"We had a very strong defensive game, we slowed a bit in the fourth and let up some mistake goals," he said.

With the crucial Harvard win past them, UMass played Brown Sunday and played similar to the day before. UMass scored first but then failed to convert on a man-up opportunity and the momentum turned in Brown's favor.

Brown then went to score five straight goals, setting the precedent for the rest of the contest. The final tally was Brown 12, UMass 7. Yarworth did not seem too distressed with the loss since his team had won the more important game Saturday.

"We came there to beat Harvard and go on to the Easterns and we did that," Yarworth said. "The Brown team was real fired up and they just out played us, moving the ball all over the pool."

Yarworth felt that if the team played to full capability they could fair well next weekend. "It is right there for us to take," Yarworth said. "If we play as well we can we can do it."

UMass is the third seed at the Eastern Championship at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Brown holds the first and Navy the second spots in the event.

If UMass beats Harvard in the first round they will most likely face Navy in the semi-finals. A semi-final win would insure a trip to the National Championships in Long Beach, Calif.

Icetime for NHL preview, prediction

It's about time hockey got some space on this page.

Don't get me wrong, now — I love basketball, and I bleed Boston Celtics Green. But there's more to life than basketball: namely, the other sport they play in Boston Garden. And since Jim Clark graduated, there has been nobody to sing the praises of slap-shots, body-checks and missing teeth on these pages.

So what am I waiting for? Here then, is a brief look at the National Hockey League season, already 15 games young.

The Bruins are still among the top teams in the league, but if their shaky start is any indication, a repeat performance of last year's 46-25-9, 101 point Stanley Cup finalist season might be a bit much to ask. A disastrous road trip without all-universe defenseman Ray Bourque proved just how vulnerable this team can be, especially in a division as tough as the Adams.

Greg Sukiennik

And what about the rest of that Adams Division? Montreal, currently in first in the Adams, should do a lot better this year then last — the addition of Dennis Savard could do wonders for a power-play that was last year's league-worst. Good hockey organizations like the Canadiens' rarely stay down long — which should alarm the rest of the league. Buffalo picked up Dale Hawerchuk, making an already potent offense even scarier. A lot of so-called "experts" penciled in the Sabres as "Stanley Cup Champions," and with players like center Pierre Turgeon and goalie Darren Puppa returning, such high expectations aren't out of the question, even considering their Red Sox-like propensity for choking in the playoffs.

Unfortunately, the Hartford Whalers are in the wrong division. I gained a lot of respect for Gang Green last year when they extended the Bruins to seven games. However, the three teams in front of Hartford are just too good. The Whalers are the best team that won't make it out of the division playoffs this spring.

Forget about the Quebec Nordiques, already 3-9-3 and headed for the golf course come springtime. It's hard to believe that this team made it to the playoffs in 1986.

Pre-season articles named the New York Rangers and the New Jersey Devils as the best of the Patrick Division. Nice call, guys: the Rangers currently lead the division, while Jersey remains 3 points behind. The Rangers seem to be a step ahead of the Devils, especially on offense — they currently have four players in the top 15 in scoring. A full year of Bernie Nichols at center can only help.

If John MacLean and Kit Muller can keep lighting up the goal lights, and if Sean Burke can regain his 1988 form, the Devils could break through and win a division title. Washington also figures to be in the hunt, but lacks the scoring punch of Jersey or the Rangers.

Pittsburgh figures to the the wild card in the Patrick. With a healthy Mario Lemieux, the Penguins are capable of beating anyone on any given night. Without him, they're a middle of t??Philadelphia and the Islanders don't figure to challenge this year, caught in the flux of their players getting old or retiring.

In the Campbell Conference, look for Calgary and St. Louis to contend. The Blues are easily the class of the

Liljeblad outdistances other harriers

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The surprise of the season for the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team has been the emergence of Kelly Liljeblad. Liljeblad, in only her first collegiate season, has become a top performer for UMass and head coach Julie LaFreniere couldn't be happier.

"I am extremely pleased Kelly chose to come here," said LaFreniere. "I ended up with one of the best recruits in the country."

Liljeblad was a stand-out runner at Westisild High School, on Long Island, when she was contacted by LaFreniere. After visiting the school Liljeblad knew where she would be running this year.

"I wanted to go to a school with strong academics and a team that I liked," said Liljeblad. "UMass had them both."

LaFreniere said she had been impressed with Liljeblad's times in high school and her competitive spirit. LaFreniere knew that Liljeblad had not run many miles in high school and a tougher training regime would improve her times.

"In high school Kelly had no one to practice with and I knew once she was given that opportunity, her times would go down," she said.

What LaFreniere didn't know was how great the improvement would be. While a senior at Westisild, Liljeblad ran at Van Courtland Park in New York City, with her best time of 19:15. After only two months at UMass she returned there for the Atlantic 10 Championships and finished in 18:34.

"Right now Kelly is running with people she never dreamed of running with in high school," said LaFreniere. "Her improvement has been phenomenal."

Volleyball set for Hartford

By LIOR BEN-AHARON
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team travels to Hartford tonight for a 7 p.m. meeting with the Hawks.

The Minutewomen (4-26) are coming off a not-so-successful weekend at the Harvard Invitational Tournament where the team went winless in four attempts.

At the opposite end of the spectrum is Hartford, which came out with a split in four matches at the same Harvard tournament.

The Hawks are currently holding a 23-13 record and are eyeing an ECAC Tournament berth. It is doubtful they will let UMass stand in their way of postseason play.

"Even if they're not playing up to their potential, they can beat us," UMass coach Carol Ford said.

To counter Hartford's strong attack, the Minutewomen will concentrate on hitting around the block, the major problem the team encountered over the weekend.

"We're a small team," said Ford. "If we don't hit around or beat the block, we'll lose.

Heading into the match, the Minutewomen are sound physically, with the exception of setter Angie Paolucci who is not playing at 100 percent and still struggles with endurance, according to Ford.

Swimming faces Big Green of UVM

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team will try to carry their momentum over from Saturday's encouraging victory to Vermont at 4 p.m. today.

The Minutewomen swimmers (1-0) are once again fired up and prepared to face the Big Green. UMass coach Robert Newcomb plans to go with his "straight up" lineup as he is not quite sure what to expect from Vermont.

"We're not looking past them," he said. "They traditionally swim well in the early part of the year which, in the past, has given us trouble."

UMass has lost only once to Vermont in Newcomb's seven years at UMass. Nonetheless, he doesn't want his squad to be overconfident going into the meet.

Tomorrow's contest will be the first dual meet for Vermont. Last season the squad was 6-6 and finished ninth in the New England Tournament. The team is young and inexperienced and second-year coach Nick Nichols said he is looking towards the next few years as rebuilding years.

However, Nichols has several strong swimmers to watch out for. Team captain, breast stroker Janet Mara, backstroker Erika Thomas and sprinter

Weld beats Silber for governor

Governor-elect William Weld

By CHRIS MUTHER
and GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff
and The Associated Press

William Weld pulled off a narrow victory last night to become the newest governor of Massachusetts in a race that was close to the finish.

Weld received 51 percent of the vote with 74 percent of the precincts reporting. Polls yesterday were reporting a projected 80 percent turnout as angry voters took to the polls across the state.

In an early morning concession speech, John Silber and his running mate Marjorie Clapprood said they accepted the decision of the voters. They congratulated Weld and Paul Cellucci on their victory.

"The people have spoken, and I respect that decision," said Silber. "I regret the loss not so much for myself but for those who believed in my campaign."

Silber said he was proud of the staying power of the Democratic Party, despite anti-Dukakis sentiment.

Although the campaign had been marked with Silber's sometimes violent temperament, he added he was only talking to the voters the way they had requested — directly, openly and honestly.

"I just tell the truth," he said.

Clapprood added, "We brought out all of the voters, and we have to celebrate that."

In Amherst, with five precincts reporting, found Weld leading Silber, with five other precincts still tallying the votes.

In the race for Senate, Democrat John F. Kerry easily pulled ahead of Republican James Rappaport to win a second term as the junior senator from Massachusetts.

In his victory speech, Kerry referred to the Beatles' song "Can't Buy Me Love," when he said, "money can't buy a seat in the Senate either."

In the State Treasurer race, Republican Joe Malone beat William Galvin.

"The people of Massachusetts voted for change," said Malone, "They don't want business as usual conducted on Beacon Hill."

The new Massachusetts Secretary of State will be Democrat Michael J. Connolly, and capturing the Attorney General's position was Scott Harshbarger.

The major difference between the two candidates for governor was question three, which would roll back taxes to 1988 levels.

Weld supported the rollback, while Silber said the question would bring "economic devastation" to the state.

The Democratic State Convention in June endorsed

Ballot question three defeated by voters

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff
and The Associated Press

Massachusetts voters voted down the largest state tax rollback in history in last night's election.

Ballot question three, the Citizens for Limited Taxation petition, designed in response to four tax increases in the last two years, was defeated 61 percent to 39 percent.

In Amherst, 92 percent of the voters opposed question three in a record-breaking college student voter turnout.

Barbara Anderson, the executive director of CLT, wanted voters to "send the legislature a message" to decrease taxes by rolling back state tax and fee rates to 1988 levels in the middle of this fiscal year.

James Braude, a leading opponent of question three, said voters seem content to have sent a message to Beacon Hill in September when several incumbents were defeated in the primaries.

"The voters drove a stake through the status quo on primary night," Braude said at a victory speech. "We'll roll our sleeves up tomorrow and rebuild a relationship of trust between the people and their government."

Anderson conceded to the failure of CLT's initiative petition.

"Maybe voters decided that changing governors was dramatic enough for this year," she said.

Anderson said she was confident that question three would pass yesterday afternoon despite poll indications that public favor was turning away from the rollback question as election day encroached.

As people were turning out at the polls at record-breaking numbers yesterday, Anderson said the $2 million spent to oppose question three would work against her opponents. She said the opponents of question three had violated campaign regulations which forbid state facilities or funds from being utilized against a ballot question or political candidate.

"The use of public money to vote against ballot questions angers taxpayers," she said yesterday afternoon. "Taxpayers resent their own money being used against them."

If question three had passed, state revenues would have been reduced by $1.3 billion in the next six months. The Board of Regents of Higher Education estimated in September that the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would have lost $28 million, almost 38 percent of its total budget, in state-allocated funds before next semester if CLT had passed.

"I think it's reassuring that voters went into the booth thoughtfully," said President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey. "They wanted change but they understand the arguments made about CLT. People did not vote against education and human services but there will be a lot of changes on Beacon Hill."

OTHER FINAL BALLOT QUESTION RESULTS

Voters also voted down question two, a ballot initiative to restrict state use of consultants, which was criticized for its possible detrimental impact on human services agencies.

Question five, an initiative petition to allocate 40 percent of state revenues in 1992 to local aid, passed by a vote of 56 percent to 44 percent.

Question one, a ballot question to eliminate the state census, also passed by an overwhelming majority of 77 percent.

The ballot initiative to loosen state ballot requirements, question four, passed by a slim 2 percent of the vote.

Question six, a ballot question to require radio and television stations to give free and equal time to all certified candidates, passed by a vote of 53 percent to 47 percent.

UM outrage over CLT forces students to the polls

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
and ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondents

University of Massachusetts students voting yesterday indicated on-campus publicity about the Citizens for Limited Taxation prompted them to vote in the statewide elections.

"I probably wouldn't have voted this year if it hadn't been for the CLT-UMass issue," said junior Lisa Carrabino. "I didn't like any of the candidates. I felt that the publicity of campus about CLT was pretty effective at reaching students."

For some students, Tuesday was their first experience voting. Freshman Hollie Altman and sophomore Melissa Dynan both agreed, "We came down to vote because of CLT. We signed a petition on campus, too. This is our first time voting."

"I'm not pleased about my choices for governor. I wanted to vote for 'None of the former Attorney General Francis Bellotti, vanquished by Silber in the Sept. 18 primary. The GOP state convention in March endorsed House Minority Leader Steven Pierce, who was defeated by Weld.

Silber turned off some traditionally liberal groups, such as the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus, which endorsed Weld.

Weld's pro-choice abortion stance and moderate stands on other social issues have cost him some conservative votes that would have gone to the GOP nominee in a year when voters are fed up with outgoing Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Incumbent state represntative Stanley Rosenberg, (D - Amherst), easily beat out Andre Ryerson, for the seat.

Republican Silvio O. Conte retained his seat as a U.S. congressman.

"CLT was the only reason I registered to vote," said freshman Mark Seitz. "I really want to come back next semester."

Seitz said he voted for John Silber because of Silber's opposition to CLT.

Juniors Lisa Branco and Kim Minor, also said they "probably wouldn't have voted if it hadn't been for the CLT drive on campus."

Explaining this was her first election, Minor said, "I'd never registered before."

Sophomore Laura Scollan said, "I'm voting to keep my tuition from going up."

They expressed dissatisfaction with the choices for governor, and Branco commented, "We don't have much of a choice. I would vote for 'None of the Above' if it would affect the outcome."

Many students indicated if it hadn't been for CLT, they probably wouldn't have bothered to vote. According to many students, the CLT issue was the crucial issue of the election.

Weld also had his supporters. Chris Tatro, a Resident Assistant from Orchard Hill, said he chose Weld.

"I agreed with Weld more than any other candidate," said Tatro. "He's pro-choice, big on rights for working women. And he doesn't seem as homophobic as Silber."

Mariette Bogert, also opposed to CLT, was not certain who she would vote for.

"I'm a student, aren't I?" she asked. "I think CLT is a great theoretical idea, but there's no way the cuts would only affect the non-essential services. Cuts that massive would end up coming out of essential services like schools," she said.

Bogert expressed a lack of enthusiasm for either candidate.

"I honestly don't know who I am going to vote for," she added. "I think the most important thing is to vote on the ballot questions, at least. I'm voting mainly because I have some very concrete opinions on those questions," she said.

Ethnic studies challenges U.S. Eurocentric values

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

"Ethnic studies poses a potential challenge to the Eurocentric ideological hegemony of American higher education," said history professor Evelyn Hu-DeHart in a lecture at Amherst College Monday entitled "Ethnic Studies in the 1990s."

Hu-DeHart is the director of the Center for Studies of Ethnicity and Race in America for the University of Colorado at Boulder.

"There is a new ideological war on the university level in America and its battle ground is the curriculum," Hu-DeHart said. "The rise of ethnic studies was a direct outgrowth of the student uprisings in the 60s which demanded more students and faculty of color."

Hu-DeHart said that the first ethnic studies program in this country was Black studies at San Francisco State University and ethnic studies has since established itself as an important field which is different from Euro-scholarship.

Hu-DeHart, who specializes in Latin American area studies, said America needs ethnic studies to revise and resynthesize our history and culture. She said there is also a practical implication to ethnic studies, which is "an impact on public policy resulting in social change."

"I believe that universities want to be diverse and multicultural," Hu-Dehart said, to which the audience laughed. "No really, America has always been culturally diverse."

Hu-DeHart cited examples from American history proving its cultural diversity. She began with the millions of people already living here before the Europeans invaded. People whom we know as Native Americans who had hundreds of cultures and languages.

Then came the Africans as slaves, the Chinese as indentured servants, the Mexicans through annexation, periods of various Europeans and the continuation of immigrants from central America and parts of Asia.

However, Hu-DeHart said, America remains a White nation in its image and projection. And that all these non-White culturally diverse peoples remain underrepresented. Thus the call for diversity and multiculturalism in our universities.

Hu-DeHart said that one historical problem is that America's definition of citizenship has not been diverse. She cited that Native Americans were not given citizenship until 1924, Asians were subject to apartheid until the 1950s and Blacks were subject to apartheid until the 60s.

Hu-DeHart said ethnic studies, which rejects Eurocentric scholarship as the only method, is necessary to revise history which accurately accounts for diversity.

"Have you ever heard of a Cuban-Chinese restaurant," Hu-DeHart asked. "No, it's true." She said this ethnic phenomenon was a result of Cuba's importation of Chinese workers for the sugar cane fields in the 19th century.

Voter turnout heavy in Amherst and Northampton

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Voter turnout was heavy yesterday in Amherst and Northampton according to town officials.

Although the official results of voter turnout were not in by press time, election officials thought that voter turnout at the 10 precincts in Amherst and the 14 precincts in Northampton was "double or triple" the ordinary amount.

Most people were dissatisfied with the choices for state governor yesterday as they stood in line to vote.

Many people, like UMass sophomore William Chi, felt they "chose the lesser of two evils."

"It's terrible," said Dix McComas, a Teaching Assistant for the UMass writing program, "but I disliked one of them more than the other."

Ben Wiesen, a junior from Southwest said, "I like to vote Democratic and it's really upsetting when there's no one worthy of my vote."

According to election officials, several people had asked about using their write-in option.

State Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) focused his statement on the future of the Democratic Party. "We're going to have to live with the person who is elected for the next four years.

"The Democratic party needs to re-focus itself and know what it stands for, that way it can encourage people to run who stand for Democratic Party principles," he said.

Incumbent State Sen. John D. Olver (D-Amherst) supported cooperation between the different branches of government, especially during hard economic times.

"Those of us in the Legislature will do our best to cooperate with whoever is in office," he said.

A few people said they were satisfied with the choices for governor but refused to elaborate further.

Doug Dagarin, a candidate for state senator, said he was satisfied with the choices for governor.

Dagarin also said he was happy with the number of people with whom he was able to speak because "people took time to listen and share their views."

Originally he was for ballot question three, but after listening to people talk, he changed his mind.

He said that budget slashing was occurring indiscriminately and passage of question three would not solve the people's problems.

Helium-neon lasers stolen from Hasbrouck

Compiled by KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The Physics and Astronomy Department reported yesterday the theft of four helium-neon lasers with components last weekend from Hasbrouck Laboratory 212.

Tony Papirio, the lab supervisor of the Introductory Physics Laboratories said the lasers and their components have no industrial use and cannot be used in light shows. He said the lasers and components are only used for the experimental study of optical concepts.

Papirio said although the laboratory was not forcibly entered over the weekend, he left the lab door locked last Friday.

The estimated value of the lasers and components is $1900.

ASSAULTS

A Residential Assistant was assaulted in Southwest Sunday while responding to a noise complaint. The University of Massachusetts police said the RA was trying to identify the offending parties when the assault occurred.

Following the positive identification of the offenders in a police investigation, a court complaint will be filed, police said.

VANDALISM

- A female student reported Friday that the surface of her vehicle was scratched in Lot 11. She had previously received two notes on separate occasions referring to a decal on her car. The estimated value is $1,000.
- A male student reported that the insignia on the front grill of his car and the radio antenna were broken off in Lot 32. The estimated value is $75.

Press censored in Northern Ireland

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Because of British censorship in Northern Ireland, the press cannot cover the nationalist community, according to a Irish civil rights activist.

Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, a leader of the Civil Rights Movement in Northern Ireland of 1969 and the youngest person ever elected to the British Parliament, spoke to 100 people last night at Amherst College.

"If a member of the media asks you, 'Do you vote Sinn Fein?' [the political party which wants British withdrawn from Northern Ireland] and you answer 'yes,' the reporter won't even talk to you. Automatically, you have no opinion."

Devlin discussed the laws which prohibit any member of Sinn Fein from being on radio or television, even inadvertly.

These laws, McAliskey said, lead the media inside the United Kingdom as well as outside to believe that Sinn Fein and their supporters do not exist.

Subsequently, journalists do not interview anybody unless they are known to be Loyalists, in favor of British rule, she said.

Although radio and television are not allowed to discuss Sinn Fein sympathies or concurring opinions on the air, the print media is not restricted.

McAliskey said, however, the newspapers tend to ignore anything which the television does not.

Another problems, said McAliskey, is Americans tend to believe the news from the United Kingdom at "face value."

The reporters at the wire services, said McAliskey, call the British Press Office for their information, and cited the case of a former employee of the Press Office, Colin Wallace, who admitted to fabricating facts to release to the press.

"The press only covers Northern Ireland when it is extremely dramatic. That means extremely violent," said McAliskey. "The media's job is to dramatize, not to inform."

"The press covers everything in the number of bodies and the degree of violence," she said. "More little people must be killed before the press will report it."

Britain uses these censorship laws to hide the truth, said McAliskey, because they are a repressive government which has denied the people of Northern Ireland human rights.

Certain people in Northern Ireland were denied the right to vote until 1971, as well as widespread housing and employment discrimination, said McAliskey, and the British government, a part of the "stable White world," did not want the rest of the world to know of their oppression.

"Violence of human rights does not exist within only one kind of government," she said.

4 UM unions to reply to furlough proposal

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Four of the five unions which represent all of the University of Massachusetts' employees are expected to reply to President- Chancellor Duffey's proposal to the five-day furlough plan today.

The only exception of the reply date is the Massachusetts Society of Professors, which has until Nov. 16 to reply. The MSP can wait to reply due to a clause in their contract which allows 30 days before having to reply.

According to John Cole, president of MSP, the alternatives committee, consisting of four members of MSP and four administrators, and a backup alternatives committee, are still discussing possible ways in which to deal with the situation.

Local 1776 of the American Federation and State, County and Municipal Engineers (AFSCME) has already sent their reply to Duffey, said Jonathan Frank, office manager.

"We are taking the same position we have throughout the situation," Frank said, "We oppose the proposal because it runs contrary to our contract language."

Officer Robert Thrasher, president of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers Local 432A, which represents the University's 32 patrol officers, said the IBPO could not agree to the furloughs for a number of reasons.

Under the collective bargaining section of their contract, the IBPO cannot accept the furlough, said Thrasher.

"The University Police want to provide the best protection of human safety as possible," Thrasher said. "We feel that if there is going to be a work reduction, [the administration] should do it through collective bargaining."

Thrasher said, "I believe the President-Chancellor has good will at heart, but I'm very unsure about the idea of the furlough."

Representatives from the University Staff Association and the Service Employees International Union could not be reached for comment.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The Student Government Association is working hard...

Frosh: What does student government do?
Upperclassperson: Nothing; it's a joke.
Frosh: But I thought it allocated millions of dollars of students' money?
Upperclassperson: That's why the joke isn't funny.

There is a prevalent belief on this campus that the sole function of Student Government Association is to allocate the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). There exists also the impression that that the Undergraduate Student Senate's Wednesday night meetings are where the bulk of the SGA's activity takes place. Neither of these assertions are true.

Ken Parker

While the SGA does allocate the SATF, supporting hundreds of student organizations and agencies, (If you enjoyed the recent production of Schoolhouse Rock, found an apartment at Off Campus Housing or visited the Legal Services Center, then to some degree you have the student government to thank.) the SATF is far from being the main focus.

Further, while some accomplishments are made during the Wednesday night Senate meetings, most of the SGA's work takes place in our committees and as projects worked on by senators and non-senators alike. Only a few student government projects ever need come before the Senate.

One such issue arose at last Wednesday's meeting: The Senate voted to cumulate months of work by the Academic Affairs committee that will assure students three reading days before final exams. No big deal, you say? Well here are a few more things the SGA has done for you recently:

- Work towards the restoration of the Legal Services Center ability to represent students. On Dec. 4, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will approve a student government-initiated plan to restore the authority of the LSC to represent students against landlords, employers, retailers, etc.
- Voter Registration. The Public Policy Committee worked with MassPirg to register more than 2,200 students to vote.
- Student Television Channel. Student government negotiations with University Housing Services resulted in an agreement that will allow the Union Video Center to go on line as Channel 14 in the Spring Semester.
- Anti-CLT effort. The Student Trustee, Angus McQuilken, has organized hundreds of students in the campaign to defeat Ballot Question 3.
- The Everywoman's Center. Admittedly, we lost the first battle in the war to maintain quality women's counselling programs on campus. But, SGA President Natasha Diephius led a valiant fight against the administration and the war isn't over yet. . .
- Hometown campaigning. The Public Policy Committee has organized car pools to student's hometowns so that we can put some quality people into the state legislature.
- Directory information policy. After months of effort, we managed to get the Vice-Chancellor to determine who gets access to student names, addresses. phone numbers and other information. Dan Carter, the graduate student representative and I managed to get the committee to pass a resolution that will allow fair student access to directory information while putting an end to abuses by the Administration and private businesses.

That's just a sample. There are many other projects being worked on by the SGA, Area Governments and House Councils.

But, if you still think that student government isn't doing enough, you're right: We've failed in many areas, not the least of which was last Wednesday's vote by the Board of Trustees to raise the Curriculum Support Fee by $400 for the spring semester.

Why aren't we doing enough? Student government is only as strong as it's support from the students. Perhaps you could have devised a compromise that avoided the $400 fee increase. Every student on this campus has skills and abilities that would help in the effort to ensure us all quality, affordable education.

Stop by the SGA Office, 420 Student Union and see how you can get involved.

As the Administration knows so well, when students don't support our student government, the joke is one us.

Ken Parker is a Student Government Association Senator

...But the question is, for whom and what are they working

If an employee was to try to tell an employer how to spend company money, what policies to implement, and basically, what to do, that poor fool wouldn't get very far, especially in today's world. After all, the employer is the one who provides the employee's pay. The employer will give the orders, like it or not.

Unless, of course, it was the University of Massachusetts.

As students, we foot the bill for much of the University. We pay for buildings, books, professors, and administrators. We pay for Registered Student Organizations through our fees for the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF).

To oversee the allocation of the SATF, the Student Activities Office was created. SAO was once staffed and run by students; now it's filled with well-meaning, but parental administrators whom we have no control over hiring or firing.

But that's not all.

We have also lost control over our money in the process. Our money. We no longer have total control over how much goes to where. That's left up to the administration.

This came to a head last week, when the Government Affairs Committee sought to impeach Karen Talbot, the Student Government Association Treasurer. She's accused of misappropriating, or mismanaging funds.

Wait, there's more to the saga.

There's also been a uh, slight problem with a budget exercise. Talbot stands accused of bypassing input from student leaders on this budget exercise. This little project was assigned by Dennis Madson, who makes more in one year than many of our families do in five. Strangely (or perhaps not so strangely) enough, he deemed the RSO's worthy of cuts and wanted SAO and the student leaders to come up with a budget exercise that would slash the money we paid in for our activities.

Pamela McCarthy

The argument goes that the budget exercise was not official, and was not necessarily going to be implemented. Funny, then, isn't it, how so many people got uptight when copies of it were circulated around campus.

My problem with this budget exercise is that it is being treated as classified information. If it was so harmless, and if it was only an exercise, why all the secrecy? Something's up. This is not the troop movements of our army. This is not the covert operations of the CIA. This is something that everyone who was responsible for has brushed off as "unofficial." Never have I thought anyone would get so panicked when an "unofficial" document is seen by the (gasp!) students.

The demand to impeach Talbot has been labeled a witch hunt. It may very well be. However, it may be time for certain student politicians to take a good, hard, look at what they are doing. We are supposed to have power through the SGA. What is happening is that we are losing it to administrators.

We pay the salaries of the administrators of this school and SAO. We are, in effect, their employers. I'm sure this will come as a giant shock, since this has never occurred to them, but if it wasn't for us, they wouldn't have their jobs. There would be no school, no tuition, fees, or tax money, and thus, no jobs for the benign autocrats of our administration.

Do employees tell employers what to do? Last time I checked, the answer was a resounding NO and a pink slip.

I know it may be hard for some of us to care about what the administration tries to pull. I'm sure it gets old after a while. But this time, they have the gall to take our money and tell us what to do. That's not the way it should work. Especially in the area of student groups, funded by student money.

We used to have power over who got hired and fired in SAO. We used to have power over allocating our money. We are adults, and if you don't believe me, check the laws. Eighteen-years-old, and you can vote in any election, and have some voice in national events. Yet when it comes to what goes on in this campus, we are told to be quiet and go to our rooms. Problem in logic? Oh, I think so.

Perhaps Karen Talbot is the victim of a witch hunt. For that, I am sorry. But it is the students who are getting burned.

Meir Kahane's death shows people's passion for freedom

I can't think of the direct quote, but in a speech Malcom X once gave, he said something to the effect of having no qualms about killing those who stood in the way of freeing those who are oppressed. I respected him for saying it because it meant that he was angry and serious, showing that there is someone out there who so passionately wanted an end to oppression.

Saad Hopkins

However the assassination of Rabbi Meir Kahane yesterday, displayed how anger leads to violence. Meir was someone who sought a different kind of freedom, unfortunately this idea was, in my opinion, outlandish, unfair, and very very racist.

As a Jew, I believe in the right for Israel to exist as a nation. However I also think the Palestinians should have equal control in the social and governmental affairs of Israel. An opinion that is very controversial among hardcore Zionists, as well as few Palestinians. But, that's what I believe.

Rabbi Kahane didn't embrace that point of view, which any idiot could deem flexible and as compromising as it can get. Kahane called for the expulsion of all Arabs from Israel. He claimed that "We were here first." And maybe we were. But when the United Nations formed Israel in 1948 as a Jewish homeland, many, to this day, choose to ignore is that there were people already there, working, living, and running the country of Palestine.

When the Israelis came, also came chaos, confusion and hatred. It was a sudden, and militant act that took thousands of lives, shattered thousands of dreams and families. And, it has made me reconsider the Israeli policies towards Palestinians. Think about it! You'd be pissed too if someone came and, for example, decided to take away the United States because they claimed to be there first for religious reasons. And when you put up a fight they killed most of your family then said, "Well. . .We're here now!" You'd be furious.

Kahane founded the militant Jewish Defense League in the United States in 1968 to mount armed responses to anti-semetic acts. Fine. After the Holocaust and the four wars, we needed to get the message out that never again will extinction attempts like those occur. But what I saw developing was the emergence of a group that was fueling misdirected anger towards an innocent group of people who are fast becoming wiped out. I also saw a great amount of racism in Kahane's politics. Not just towards Arabs and Palestinians, but towards Black Jews from Ethiopia otherwise known as Falashim, the lost tribe.

It seems to me that someone wanted him killed because he got in the way of someone's freedom. I write this because I feel people should think about what Kahane really stood for, Jews and Arabs alike. He was someone who sought freedom, however willingly and with malice he got in way of someone else's. I don't support his assassination, but we need someone to head the JDL who will live up to its true meaning and significance.

Apartheid: Struggle isn't over

It is unfortunate that Amherst College never received the praise and recognition it had due for its success in the Coca Cola boycott. Perhaps in the excitement of Mount Holyoke College's success as the first of the five colleges to rid its campus of Coke machines, Amherst was ignored.

In a time when there is great confusion about what is really happening in South Africa, it is important for us to recognize the need to continue the boycott, as well as sanctions against the apartheid regime.

We should not be fooled into believing that "everything is getting better" in South Africa, as it isn't. When one looks at the conduct of security forces in the "great year of reform" it becomes clear that merely doing away with all repressive legislation will not be enough because such an approach only deals with the symptoms of the problem. It is apartheid that causes the repressive legislation and the mentality that pervades the security forces.

Let us praise those who have and who continue to work to change the oppressive ways of the South African government. The struggle is not over yet, nor will it be until apartheid itself is eradicated. In the meantime, "change" under the apartheid regime will continue to be strictly of the "band-aid" nature.

ARTS & LIVING

John Waters lives up to his name

By SHANE DONALDSON
Collegian Correspondent

Lets give credit where credit is due. The Distinguished Vistors Program has been mighty successful at attracting, shall we say, "off-beat" characters to campus. In the past, Hunter S. Thompson and Allen Ginsberg have appeared courtesy of DVP, and last night at the Campus Center Auditorium they continued their streak with the appearance of filmmaker John Waters, the self-proclaimed "king of bad taste filmmaking."

Waters, whose films include the cult favorites Polyester, Female Troubles and the more recent Hairspray and Cry-Baby, treated the crowd to a whirlwind trashing of American culture which, at time, bordered to the sublime.

Waters on drugs: "I don't understand why anyone would want to do a drug called 'ecstacy.' I mean, this is a drug that makes you want to be nice to everybody. Any drug with a happy face for its symbol you know is bad news."

On sex in the 90s: "It's really too bad you can't be promiscuous. It was so great back when the worst thing that could happen to you was that you would go to hell."

On the home video boom: "We all know the real reason for home video success is that people are too modest to masterbate to a movie in the theater. They should have just built a little section in the theater for it with a window and little windshield wipers."

Get the idea?

Waters is the purveyor of what he calls "good" bad taste.

The campy, trashy bad taste of bugs and dog doo and obese transvestites (like his friend and star Divine who appeared in most of his films), as opposed to the bad taste characterized by the "humor" of the likes of Andrew Dice Clay.

His style is much more harmless, manifesting itself in twisted takes on everyday events and the casting of non-celebrity celebrities like Patty Hearst and Sonny Bono (who he refers to as "the next president of the United States"), in film roles that border on self-parody.

Waters told the audience that while he will continue to make his unique breed of films, it's now up to the present generation to shock the baby-boomers and invited them to shake up society their own way.

"People your age shouldn't think it's cool to be rich. You should want to kill the rich. Your generation should mock the baby-boomer generation fear of getting old. Draw on wrinkles and bags under your eyes, have your lips removed, anything," he said.

"It's up to you to now make a film that appalls me. It's your generation that should get on my nerves."

According to Waters, that's our duty. Now there's a goal we should all strive for.

Spirit of Ireland captured in Synge play

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

Playboy of the Western World
Curtain Theatre
Friday, Nov. 2

The play opens when a lone musician in Wellingtons and sideburns, wanders on stage and begins to play a mournful Irish tune. At once the theater erupts in shouts and singing as barefoot drunken peasants spill out dancing, singing, flirting, fighting and telling epic stories on a stage full of sand, wood chips and boulders which resemble a stable rather than the tavern it's supposed to be.

The Irish dialect is extremely well captured by the playwright and spoken by the actors with a good ear for the rhythms, if not for the actual brogue, which would have made it too difficult to understand. This is Ireland and Irishness as only UMass and John Millington Synge know how to do it. If there is anything romanticized in these ignorant revelers it is their very animal passion and their complete innocence and unconsciousness of their poetry and their untranslatable tragic gesture, which defies characterization.

This chorus is in the Greek tradition (though it doesn't know it), for it encircles the action, listens, witnesses and occasionally participates in the story of the playboy. Edward Golden's direction makes a strong choice of framing all three acts within this arena of peasant listener-teller, as if the play is itself a story, the storyteller tells about a teller, the listener listens to the listener.

The play itself is a great classic of Irish theatre, superbly well-crafted as a thriller, character study, heroic-comedy and portrait of a culture. The spitfire barmaid Pegeen Mike is set to marry a local doobie drip Shawn Keough, a farmer of plodding industry and annoying piety, when out of a dark ditch creeps Christopher Mahon, the mystery man, messiah or brigand, who falls into the worshipping arms of this isolated farming village after he tells them that he killed his father.

They exalt him as a courageous warrior, for "a strange man is a marvel with his noble talk." Pegeen Mike falls desperately in love with this rugged, tender foundling, and he for her — with inevitable complications.

The principal actors, Tess O'Brien and Jeffrey Donovan, enliven their parts with a perfect balance of raw energy and finess. During their romantic scenes the stage goes dark except for their own little pool of light, and we are born away by their touching desires, innocent and irrevocable.

Roy Drew (the slumping fiance who has no "weight of passion") and Holly O'Neall Waite (the rival, Widow Quinn) also put in strong performances, though O'Neall is too youthful for her part.

As often occurs in college theatre productions, the older men are not as convincing, and despite close character work like that of the farmers Rick Martin and David Yaukey, or the difficult part of the father, these characters were little more than clowns much of the time. The chorus in general, indeed the whole premise of the play, tends toward the clownish, the spectacular. The screeching flock of country girls that comes to hear the playboy's story is so busy and broad that it seems to burst the seams of the stage, and we are relieved when they retire.

Review

It was the very vulgarity and seeming authenticity of Irish peasant life that got Synge into trouble when he wrote the play almost a century ago, and it's still a tough call to make. Is this my ancestry?

Still, the glory of Playboy is that there is a kind of tragic grace to even the commonest person. The poetry of freedom and love, ultimately the desire for desire itself, transcends mean circumstance.

The playboy is a man "born lonesome" picked up like "a dirty tramp from the highways of the world," a representative of the lost humanity, compared with "holy Joseph in the days gone by," who will still be roaming banished "from this hour to the dawning of the judgement day," a hero without heroism, only humanity, who triumphs finally when he realizes that it is "worse living with the fools."

"But then we're only talking, maybe."

Playboy of the Western World will run at the Curtain Theatre through Nov. 10.

FOCUS

Structure and leadership strong assets of MassPIRG

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

"You've got something people have waited a life-time for."

That statement is found on a voter incentive for 1990 amid newspaper clips of: "Troops attack and crush Beijing protest; Thousands fight back, Scores are killed," "Poles go to the polls."

Massachusetts citizens turned out in unexpectedly high numbers yesterday to express their political dissatisfaction or alliance with their elected public servants. Members of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group registered over 2,200 of those voters during the month of October.

The voter registration drive aimed at bringing students to the forefront of political activism by voicing their concerns in a vote at a time when casting that ballot seemed the most empowering act one could take as their state deteriorated beneath them. This voter push was merely one project in a line of carefully chosen endeavors that MassPIRG has undertaken since its inception nearly 20 years ago.

Collegian photo by K.A. Burke

Ride the magic voter bus — Bus awaits voters in Haigis Mall yesterday. MassPIRG and UMass Transit collaborted and transported several hundred students to various voting locations.

In the beginning

PIRG was begun on an Oregon college campus by consumer rights advocate Ralph Nader while he was a young lawyer. Nader was investigating the General Motors Corporation for alleged production of unsafe vehicles and brought a suit against GM for $500,000 that he won. With this victory in mind, he reached out to students — seeing them as viable and successful fighters in a battle against the ever-encroaching wheelers and dealers of the environment and consumerism.

PIRG chapters spread throughout 22 states in the U.S. and among these are 100 campus chapters, with Massachusetts claiming the most chapter groups with 27. The UMass chapter was begun in 1972 and has the longest record of existence without interruption.

Functional organization

Organizational delineation is very clear within PIRG: though students are the roots and leaders of this establishment, there are professional staffs and lobbyists working for them, as well as an Executive Director who is in charge of the hiring and firing of staff members. A Board of Directors oversees the 27 state-wide chapters with at least one representative from each college campus sitting on the committee. The number of reps is proportional to the size of the university or college and UMass claims the most, with five reps.

Kira Sanbonmatsu is the UMass chapter vice-chairperson and said though PIRG is technically a state-wide environmental/consumer group, there is a workforce of professional staffers and lobbyists that focuses on energy; solid waste solution and management through recycling; environmental concerns — a catch-all for clean air; pollution prevention; child-care; consumer rights and issues of insurance.

With quite a long list of tasks to accomplish, PIRG chapters succeed in areas that might remain grey and looming to many student organizations. Aaron Rome, UMass student and treasurer for the Board of Directors, said the group benefits from an individual who has been through the MassPIRG route and serves as the campus organizer for UMass and all other Western Mass. campuses.

Dan Jacobsen is a graduate of Franklin Marshall College, Penn. and at age 24 has advanced quickly in the ranks of MassPIRG, an opportunity most would agree is afforded by belonging to PIRG.

He said he is impressed by the responsibilities that the UMass chapter has taken on and accomplished as well as leadership.

With all the daily work that needs to be done, Jacobsen explains, in addition to students graduating, there needs to be a strong staff to work on the background and much contact work for projects, and thus the group is called student-directed versus student-run.

Contrary to proceedings at many meetings, UMass chapter chairperson Jen Wood said much planning goes on at the meetings.

"Part of what we're talking about right now is ways that we can communicate without so many meetings," she said. "But there is a lot of planning and a lot of skills building. We do a power-hour where we'll do a letter writing campaign."

The projects and initiatives

The recycling initiative, voter registration, elementary education, insurance requirements and the UMass campus are all projects that MassPIRG has put tremendous time and energy into.

The recycling initiative, slated for the November 6th ballot, was kicked out of court because of a technicality, Rome said.

However, MassPIRG leaders say they have rounded up enough support from legislators in the state to virtually ensure its passage into law.

Aaron Pearlman, project coordinator for the recycling bill, said they have gained support from over half of the Massachusetts Senate and over half of the House.

Pearlman said the recycling bill is broken into three different categories that set standards for product packaging, claiming that packaging is the cause of over one-third of solid waste in Massachusetts.

The three criteria are: packaging must be made of 50 percent recyclable fibers; reusable up to five times and is itself self-recyclable; and that there must be an effective recycling program implemented in the state.

Another program that seems to provoke many positive feelings is the elementary education program of which Jodi Bornstein is co-director.

"The program is broken up into different categories. It's all called 'Helping Our World' — HOW; the kids love it, so do we," Bornstein said.

How UMassPIRG is funded

Bornstein, chapter treasurer, said much controversy surrounds the waiverable status of the MassPIRG fee on students' tuition bills.

A question is inserted on the spring ballot election for University Student Trustee and Student Government Association President every two to three years asking whether students support MassPIRG and the waiverable fee on the bill. For the past several years students have voted 'yes'.

"Waiverable means it is included on students bills and they can chose not to pay it, but must specify when they pay their bill," Bornstein explained. "Otherwise, you are paying the fee."

Controversy stems from groups stating it should be optional versus waiverable.

"The community has said we endorse you. It's more democratic when a student votes for it, then pays," Bornstein said.

"Another complaint is that the money goes off-campus. As a state-wide network, this enables PIRG to hire lobbyists who are working for students concerns and the community as a whole. This can't be done unless the money is pooled — it's more of a student net-work whereas the option add-on is more like a donation."

Where do they go from here?

Wood said MassPIRG's focus isn't only environmental and consumer issues.

"We're going towards student rights across campus and state-wide, we think empowerment is a key issue, and I feel it has a lot to do with the campus that we're on," she said. "There are a lot of leaders in this group and some followers have potential for a lot more — not only within the group but on the campus too. I see a lot of leaders in the communities after graduation as well."

NBA picks

To do that Portland will have to get by a new Dallas squad and an extremely tough San Antonio team that in one year went from 21-61 to 56-26. Spurs center David Robinson, with only one year experience behind him, is far and away the best in the league at his position. Also, with teammates like veteran Terry Cummings and third-year guard Rod Strickland to help him out, Robinson and the Spurs are looking to rock the NBA world.

Other teams like Phoenix, Utah, L.A. Lakers and the young whipper snappers from the Clippers, do not worry me. They are all destined for mediocre seasons just because the gods will not allow them to perform well. Well; they also have trouble with either age or inexperience, so a championship for any of these teams is out of the question. The showdown this year is between Portland and San Antonio.

If Kevin Duckworth can keep the weight off (maybe Slimfast?) and Terry Porter can get his shooting percentage over .500, then Portland will take the title. Otherwise, Mr. Robinson is going to make the Trail Blazers wish they were in someone else's neighborhood.

tournament

"I like our chances of winning the tournament," Beglin said. Assuming Iowa beats Stanford, the Hawkeyes would travel to play at Northwestern.

Iowa and Northwestern split the regular season series, with Northwestern winning the first meeting 1-0 and Iowa winning the second, 3-2.

"I don't really care who we play," said Northwestern coach Marisa Didio. "If we do play Iowa, fine. We're just trying to stay focused and take one game at a time."

The second surprise of the tournament, UConn (11-7-2), is pitted against UMass (15-5). When they met earlier in the year at Storrs, UMass emerged victorious 2-1 in a hard-fought contest.

"Tournament-time is a one shot deal, and we're not looking past UConn," said UMass coach Pam Hixon. "We have confidence that we can get the job done. If we play well, there aren't many teams that can play with us."

"Our team is excited to be in the tournament," said UConn coach Nancy Stevens. "We have to focus on how UConn plays, not the way UMass plays. We need great performances from everyone on the team if we're hoping to pull off the upset."

Old Dominion, basking in the 80 degree Virginia sun, is awaiting word of who its next opponent will be. ODU defeated both UConn and UMass rather handily during the season, pummeling UConn 5-0 and UMass 4-0.

"The winner of the Tournament will probably be the winner of the Old Dominion-Northwestern game [if that happens]," Stevens said.

Of the 12 teams that start the tournament, only one will be left when it ends, and that one team will be the National Champion for 1990.

NCAA Tournament to be a big ball

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

For 12 teams, the thrill of a lifetime begins today, as the NCAA Women's Field Hockey Tournament gets underway.

Teams from across the country make up the 12 team field. Some are just happy to be in the elite group, others are hoping to walk away as the 1990 champion.

Stanford, 3,000 miles away, is practicing in the hot California sun. The Cardinal will make the trip to a snow-covered Carver Hawkeye Field, where they will play Iowa. Northwestern plays the winner.

Of the two groups of Huskies, the ones from the University of Connecticut come to Amherst Thursday hoping to knock off the University of Massachusetts and then mighty Old Dominion. The Northeastern Huskies host the Friars of Providence, with the winner to have first shot at eliminating the defending champs from North Carolina.

There are Owls from Temple who have their big eyes set on Terrapins from Maryland, and then a possible third encounter with the fierce Lady Lions of Penn State.

"I think this year is so exciting because anyone can win the whole thing," said North Carolina coach Karen Shelton. "I've tried to tell my team that it's not their team defending the national championship, but the North Carolina program."

Northeastern (14-5-3) hosts the Friars (18-4-1) today at Parsons Field. Two weeks ago in Providence, the two tied 1-1. Providence dominated play, outshooting the Huskies 25-12, but managed to score only one goal.

"I feel that the turf is more of a neutralizer for Northeastern," said Providence coach Jackie Gladu. "You always want to play at home, but the home field advantage is not that much of a difference. We're pumped and excited.

"If we're fortunate enough to get by Northeastern, we know we can beat North Carolina. We already have beaten them, but it was early in the year and both teams have improved."

One of the major raps against North Carolina (18-3) is that it is a young, inexperienced team. "We are very young, but we have our moments of brilliance. How we fare in the tournament really depends on which team shows up," Shelton said.

"I think its gonna be tough for UNC to repeat because of their inexperience," said Temple coach Michele Madison, whose Owls host the University of Maryland.

Temple's hopes of winning a national championship rest on the shoulders of 52 goal-scorer Jane Catanzaro.

"We need to stop her early," said Maryland coach Missy Meharg. "She's not known as a patient player, so we're hoping to frustrate her. I'm hoping she's off her game and that she misses a tip here and a deflection every so often. We have the horses to run with her."

"It should be a great game, who ever can stop the other's big scorer will win," Madison said.

Waiting in the wings is the team that most of the coaches in this tournament have predicted to win it all: Penn State. The Lady Lions are loaded with talent; Kristen Winters and Chelle Frates are two of the most feared players in the country.

"Penn State has made the biggest strides and has been the most consistent team in the country," Meharg said.

"They're lying if they say we're gonna win it all," said Penn State coach Charlene Newman.

The Lady Lions have already beaten Temple twice; once in the regular season, and once in the finals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament this past weekend.

"We feel we're gonna come across a tough game no matter who we play," Newman said. "I'm excited to be a part of the tournament. As for who I think is gonna win it, I think Old Dominion has the edge because of all their tournament experience."

The second half of the bracket features two surprises: Stanford and UConn. The Lady Cardinal was the last team invited to the Tournament, with a very suspect record of 8-4-1 and without much experience against nationally ranked teams.

"We don't know much about Stanford, but we're certainly not looking past them," said Iowa coach Beth Beglin, whose 17-3 Hawkeyes host the Lady Cardinal. "It will be interesting to see how they adjust to the weather, it just finished snowing here and Thursday's forecast is for snow and cold weather.

Corso earns A's in cross country

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday morning at 11 a.m., Jon Corso will be running in the final cross country race of University of Massachusetts career.

Corso has had a solid career for the Minutemen over the past four years. He gained All-New England honors last year as a junior, and has twice earned All-Atlantic 10 honors.

He was named MVP of the cross country team last year and will likely achieve similar honors for his accomplishments this fall. In addition to his achievements on the cross country course, he was also All-New England in track last spring.

Despite his successes in running, however, Corso says his running is secondary to school work. He said that good grades are essential tc his future plans, which include graduate school to further his knowledge in political science.

Jon Corso

"As far as doing well, school takes precedent over running," Corso said. "I want to go to graduate school and get a good job when I graduate.

"A lot of people I compete against don't take school work as seriously as I do," he said. "Running is the top priority for them."

Corso's grades have improved over the last couple of semesters and he now has a cumulative grade point average of 3.2. He also made dean's list last semester.

Though running is not Corso's top priority, it is not an activity he neglects, and this summer he found time to train for the upcoming cross country season.

"I lived in Amherst this summer," he said. "I had an internship and I was working two jobs, so sometimes I would have to go out for a 10 mile run at 11 o'clock at night.

"I didn't do the most miles that I've ever done this summer," he said. "I've been much more conscious of sleeping and what I eat this year."

Corso was All-State in cross country his senior year at Agawam High School, and was twice the Western Mass. champion in the two mile, but he was not highly recruited by any colleges, he said.

Corso talked with UMass coach Ken O'Brien during his senior year, and walked-on to the cross country squad that fall.

Corso has improved steadily in the four years since, O'Brien said.

"Jon's one of the most mature runners we've had on the team since I've been coaching here," O'Brien said of Corso. "He is very dedicated and very consistent in the way that he approaches training.

"I think that the thing that has motivated him more than anything else and has allowed him to achieve what he has is the fact that deep down inside he really enjoys running.

"Knowing Jon, I think running will be something he will continue after he graduates. He knows that his best years of running are still ahead of him."

Corso said he plans to go to Colorado for three months next summer for what he termed a "sabbatical from life." He plans to spend those months doing altitude training and enjoying his running, and hopes after to work for a few months before beginning graduate school in January.

"I'd like to see what I can do with the training in Colorado, and see how far I can go with my running," Corso added. "Maybe I'll start marathoning in four or five years. I'd like to find a job that allows me that freedom."

Blazers headed full speed to title

". . . used to be's don't count anymore, they just lay on the floor till we sweep them away . . ."
— Neil Diamond from "You Don't Bring Me Flowers"

There are plenty of used to be's, has beens, and other once was around the NBA this year and they are all certain to be left behind. Individual players like Reggie Theus (now with New Jersey), Danny Ainge (now with Portland) and Alex English (now with Dallas) are just a few players that should have been thinking about going to Idaho and getting involved with growing potatoes.

Teams like the Pistons, Lakers and Celtics, all of which will probably make the playoffs, don't know the meaning of the word youth, and if they did, they would probably think it meant that they had to get more kids to go see their games.

The above teams are soon going to realize that the youngsters of the league are going to refine the game. Running is one thing, but sprinting is another. The fast break is only getting faster and the half court game is slowly becoming obsolete.

I am not talking about having no half-court game. The Nuggets will run themselves to a winless season if they keep up their ways. No, the game must be slowed down every now and again, but the crop of youngsters to come into the league the past couple of years are small and quick, very quick.

Dave Szpila

Watching the Celtics' Dee Brown is like watching a pissed off bee. He is everywhere you look and nowhere to be found. Dennis Scott, a 6-foot-8 rookie playing for the Orlando Magic, is going to show both the big men and the guards that he can score on them at will. Chris Jackson, who decided to leave college early (a big mistake but . . .), will prove to be a force in a couple of years. His lack of college play (only two years) will be evident for most of the season. Others such as Phil Henderson (Dallas), Rumeal Robinson (Atlanta), Derrick Coleman (New Jersey) and Gary Payton (Seattle) will come to greatness.

But enough about all that for right now. It is time to back up my pre-season prediction. To take it all this season: the Portland Trailblazers.

Portland has solid bodies to fill every position on the court and Clyde Drexler, a seven-year veteran, will not let his team fail. They made it to the Finals last year, but lost to Detroit in five games. This year, however, the team's toughest job will be to get out of the Western Conference.

Democrats fare well in Tuesday elections

(AP) In gubernatorial and senate races across the country Tuesday the Democratic majority fought to hold their offices in many close races.

John Engler of Michigan and Arne Carlson of Minnesota brightened the morning after Election Day for the Republicans, ousting Democratic incumbents. Engler beat James Blanchard, and Carlson unseated Rudy Perpich.

By late morning, the Arizona governor's race between Democrat Terry Goddard and Republican Fife Symington was the only undecided contest. State officials said there would be a run-off because neither candidate won a majority of the vote.

Three House seats were unsettled, as well, and in two of them Democratic incumbents were trailing.

Lawton Chiles of Florida and Texas State Treasurer Ann Richards led the Democratic assault on statehouses crucial to next year's redrawing of political maps to follow population shifts to the Sunbelt.

Wilson won the multimillion-dollar battle with Democrat Dianne Feinstein for California's top job. With 98 percent of the vote counted, Wilson had 49 percent of the total to Feinstein's 46 percent.

Republicans picked up some statehouses of their won, electing governors in Ohio, where George Voinovich defeated Anthony Celebreze: in Massachusetts, where William Weld edged out conservative Democrat John Silber; Vermont, where ex-governor Richard Snelling reclaimed his old job, defeating Peter Welch.

But Democratic gains were more widespread. Joan Finney rode voter anger against GOP Gov. Mike Hayden to victory in Kansas; Ben Neslon did the same, unseating one-term GOP Gov. Kay Orr in neighboring Nebraska; and Bruce Sundlun unseated Republican Gov. Edward DiPrete in Rhode Island on his third try. Democrats won formerly Republican statehouses in Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Former Republican Sen. Lowell Weiker, always a maverick, was elected governor of Connecticut as an independent. In Alaska, former GOP governor Walther Hickel was running as an independent and leading two opponents for the governorship.

The Democratic-dominated Senate emerged unscathed. Challenges once thought formidable were swept aside by well-financed incumbents.

But the night had its terrifying moments for Sen. Bill Bradley, D. N.J., whose anticipated easy ride to a third term ended up a cliffhanger before he outlasted rookie Republican Christine Todd Whitman. She capitalized on virulent anti-tax sentiment.

Generally, it was not a good night for Democrats with presidential ambitions.

Along with Bradley's scare, Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York received a disappointing 53 percent of the vote against a blundering Republican and a little-known conservative who were never seen as more than fighting for second place.

Two other would-be presidents, Democratic Sens. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and Joeseph Biden of Delaware rolled over token opposition. Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia was re-elected without opposition.

The dust settles

Election brings Mass. a mix of old and new

BOSTON (AP) — The long season of bitter politics has ended in Massachusetts.

It ended with voters saying yes to a Republican governor and state treasurer, but no to a massive tax rollback and many other dramatic changes.

In the governor's race, Republican William Weld defeated outspoken Boston University President John Silber. With 89 percent of the vote counted, Weld led Silber by 3 percent.

In the other most closely watched contests, the tax rollback initiative was defeated, and Sen. John Kerry won a second term.

Weld, the first Republican to be elected Governor of Massachusetts in 20 years, said voters had chosen a new direction in their "mandate for change."

When the historians write about the Massachusetts comeback of the 1990s the story is going to begin with today's election," Weld said.

Trying to get it all into perspective, he said, "I don't believe government should be in the miracle business. I believe government should do a very few things, but do them well."

In defeat, Silber made no apologies for the controversies of his campaign.

"Hundreds of times people yelled to me, 'give 'em hell, John,'' and 1 just responded with Harry Truman's words, 'I tell the truth, and they just think it's hell,'" he said.

Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Marjorie Clapprood found victory in the close defeat, crediting Silber's opposition with helping to fend off the tax rollback initiative.

"This state will be safe because of John Silber," she said during the early morning concessions that capped weeks of often raucous campaigning.

Kerry fought off a well-funded challenge from Republican businessman James Rappaport, a virtual unknown before he got into the race.

With 91 percent of the vote in, Kerry led Rappaport 57 percent to 43 percent.

Rappaport, who spent more than $4 million of his money in the race, had linked Kerry with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, the Republican's symbol of

Twister's to hold benefit dance for basketball star

By JODY GABIN
and CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

In an effort to help pay Lorenzo Sutton's mounting hospital bills, a benefit dance party will be held at Twister's Tavern Friday night.

The dance will be held in association with the University of Massachusetts men's Basketball Team, with all proceeds going to Sutton's hospital bills.

Sutton, the all-time leading scorer in UMass basketball history, sustained severe head injuries as a result of a hit-and-run accident Sept. 23 on North Pleasant Street.

A sound system and DJ will donated by Rack-A-Disc Entertainment.

"I came up with the idea during a Court Club meeting," said Mark Forsyth, owner of Twister's Tavern and a member of the Court Club Board of Governors. "We wanted to establish a fund for hospital bills."

Sutton is currently in rehabilitation. He remained in a coma for a month after the accident. Amherst police have reported no new leads in their investigation of the accident.

NOTA ballot option sets precedent

By CHRISTINE MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign set a precedent in yesterday's state election, advocating local voters to write in "None of the Above" on election ballots.

Although NOTA did not get a majority of votes in the Valley area, it still held political significance. According to Randy Kehler, a member of the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign and the co-coordinator of the Working Group on Electoral Democracy.

NOTA received eight to 10 percent of the vote in the towns of Leverett, Wendell, Shutesbury, Amherst, Pelham, and Northampton, where it was recorded along with votes for gubernatorial candidates.

Confirmation of NOTA tallies in the governor's election was only available for Shutesbury and Wendell, which received 16.5 and 12.5 percent respectively of the votes. Official results for Amherst, Northampton, Pelham, and Leverett are expected this week.

Grass roots campaigns to place a NOTA option on electoral ballots have been in the workings for several years across the nation, said Dennis Kelley, coordinator of the NOTA movement in the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign. Nevada has had a non-binding NOTA option listed on its ballot since 1976 as a government reaction to Watergate, Kelley said.

However, the movement to list the NOTA option on the November 1990 Massachusetts ballot is the "first organized protest of the people" in Massachusetts, he added.

On Election Day, advocates of the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign stood outside voting areas in Amherst, Leverett, Wendell, Shutesbury, Northampton, and Pelham.

Presently NOTA does not appear on the Massachusetts state ballot, and is not considered a legitimate vote. However, in October, the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign wrote a letter to town clerks of courts across the Valley area, encouraging NOTA votes be tabulated along with those for candidates in the gubernatorial election in a non-binding count.

David Sullivan, from the Elections Division at the Office of the Secretary of State said it was up to "town discretion" to keep a tally of NOTA votes. However, Sullivan said NOTA votes will not be recorded on a state level, and will be entered as a blank vote in the state election, according to state law.

The NOTA campaign gained momentum in Massachusetts as voters showed outrage and disgust with the two candidates running for governor, said John Davis, a University of Massachusetts graduate student in Resource Economics, who held a sign advocating the NOTA option outside the Wildwood School in Amherst on Election Day.

Davis said that voting NOTA carried a stronger political message because "it is part of an organized campaign." Often, he said, "write-ins are defused," lacking the cohesion of a political campaign. "I see [voting NOTA] as a coherent demand for reform in the electoral process in the U.S.," Davis said.

"Democracy is not about weeding out the worst, but picking out the best," said NOTA advocate Peter Verdone, a UMass philosophy major, who also campaigned for

Univ. seeks return of court metal detectors

By GAYLE LONG

and The Associated Press

The Hampshire County District Court in Northampton has applied for emergency funds in order to buy a metal detector, now that the University of Massachusetts has asked for the return of two detectors they borrowed, according to the District Court Clerk.

Janet Rowe Dugan, court clerk-magistrate, said the University lent the metal detectors to the court when she asked to test them for their effectiveness.

"It was very nice of them to let us borrow them," Dugan said, "but we never returned them."

The metal detectors were bought for security liability before February 1989, when the pro-Black leader of the Nation of Islam Louis Farrakhan visited UMass.

The University loaned the two metal detectors to the court's security officials in Northampton more than a year ago, said Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety at the University.

Hilson said that one of the reasons he needed the metal detectors back is the shelf life of the detectors.

"These are sensitive machines," he said. "They only have a shelf life of five years when they are used everyday."

He said he bought the detectors for the University campus, but letting the court borrow them for such an extended period could be dangerous.

"We bought them because we needed a deterrent," said Hilson, referring to the Farrakhan speech last February.

However, Hilson said if the Courthouse used the devices everyday until their shelf life was over, they would be no good to the University.

Hilson also said when he lent the detectors to the Courthouse, he was under the impression it was only to test the devices' effectiveness, and then the court would buy their own.

One of the detectors went back to the University earlier this fall, and the other is still in daily use at the Courthouse, he said.

The University has given the court seven days to return the metal detector, said Dugan.

The metal detectors will be put into storage, but may be used when the administration decides the occasion calls for it, Hilson said.

The second metal detector is still at the Courthouse.

Because of the spending freeze in Hampshire County, Dugan is trying to get permission from the chief justice to transfer funds from the court postage account into the equipment account so the court may purchase a metal detector and return the other to the University.

"It shows the cooperation between state agencies," she said, "but the borrowing has gone far enough."

Dugan said when the metal detectors first appeared at the courthouse, many employees thought there was no need.

According to Ellen Morin, head of Courthouse security, during the past year, 14 pistols, 3,373 knives and 69 canisters of mace, as well as other devices have been discovered in the metal detector.

"The metal detector has also stopped people from bringing in paint cans, which prevents the destruction of the building," Dugan said.

Between 500 and 800 people enter the courthouse everyday, Morin said.

Prior to the installation of the device, a distraught husband involved in a domestic case had run through the courthouse with a gun, said Morin.

Also, a group appearing to support several demonstrators had sprayed bathrooms with red paint.

Intifada women resolute

Women leaders seek staying political power

TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Correspondent

Palestinian Women involved in the Intifada nationalist movement are determined that their work for women's liberation will not be forgotten when the struggle for independence is over, said a woman who has recently returned from the West Bank and Gaza.

Speaking yesterday afternoon at the Campus Center, Sherena Berger Gluck, a director of the oral history program at California State University at Long Beach, said Palestinian feminists are resolved "not to be another Algeria."

The event was cosponsored by Women's Studies and Near Eastern Studies.

"For women involved in Third World struggles against colonialism, their own liberation struggle by necessity is embedded in their nationalist struggle," Gluck said.

Algeria has become an emblem of what happens to women involved in a nationalist movement after the revolution, she explained.

"They are forced to slide back into their traditional roles . . . women's gains in independence are lost," she said. Gluck also referred to the Sandinista Revolution in Nicaragua as another example in which women were active and militant during the revolution, and then afterwards were not given positions of power and equality.

Gluck said she discovered during her interviews while visiting the occupied territories that many Palestinian women are reluctant to use the term "feminism" because they believe that it is synonymous with separatism, "and for them, in their nationalistic-racial struggle, there must be an alliance between the sexes."

Gluck suggested that Western women need to be aware of language choices that are inclusive of all women's perspectives. She gave the phrase "reproductive rights' as an example — this phrase is better than "abortion rights" or "choice" because it includes Third World women's concerns about child care and forced sterilizations.

Gluck said that Palestinian women are more likely to succeed in their struggle for women's liberation, because unlike other movements, such as in Nicaragua and Algeria, where women were very militant but not part of the decision-making, women in the Intifada are playing active roles in the creation of the infrastructure for a Palestinian state. However, Gluck stressed that Palestinian women must conceptually keep the women's organizations they have formed apart from the state, after the revolution, in order to have a strong base for continuing the struggle for women's rights.

She said too often, women's organizations become part of the state and their power to resist is "diffused."

Hadley firemen charged with arson, plead innocent

HADLEY (AP) — Officials say a firefighter will be paid for fighting the five barn fires he is accused of setting on Halloween, but he won't be called upon again pending the outcome of the arson charges.

Fire Chief Bernard Martula said that Robert Waskiewicz, 21, a town mechanic who serves as a fireman on an on-call basis, will get $9 an hour for fighting the string of blazes that kept firemen hopping through the night and into early morning.

Waskiewicz and a co-defendant, Thomas A. Goralski, also 21, pleaded innocent at their arraignment Monday in Northampton District court and were released on $1,000 bail.

They are each charged with five counts of burning a building and eight counts of malicious destruction of property.

No injuries were reported, but Hadley Police Officer Ralph Gould, who investigated the fires, said damage to the isolated barns and stored hay and other farm materials exceeded $285,000.

The blazes also downed power and telephone lines, knocking out service to 1,200 homes and businesses in the area.

Martula said "something seemed strange" after the third fire when it appeared that Waskiewicz was early on the scene of the scattered blazes.

Call to action: Women speak from experience about abuse

I was harassed on the bus the other day by a drunken man in the seat next to me. When I first sat down, he began asking me personal questions. No matter how curtly I answered him, he would not leave me alone. I took out a book, but he did not get the hint. Instead, he read over my shoulder. He said, "I don't understand that book you're reading." I told him that it was French, even though I didn't owe him any explanation. He then told me to whisper "I Love You" to him in French.

Suzy Herring

Right then I should have changed seats, or slapped him or done something. Instead, I lied that I hadn't learned how to say that yet, hoping he would finally let up. He didn't.

He kept touching my hair and telling me to stop reading and look him in the eye. When I tried to ignore him, he gave me a guilt trip. "I'm not such a bad guy. Do you think you're too good to talk to me?" The worst thing was that his guilt trip worked. He was violating my space and my right to be left alone, but he made me feel that I was the one who was doing something wrong. At the same time, I felt weak and angry at myself for not standing up to him.

I didn't want to draw attention to myself by changing seats (as if everyone on the bus couldn't already hear what was going on). I wished that someone would tell him to shut up. I wished someone would offer me their seat. But no one did.

When I could take no more, I got off the bus long before my usual stop and waited for the next bus, again angry at myself for letting this terrible man put me out of my way. As I disembarked, the man said to me sarcastically, "Thanks for the company." Once more, I was the one feeling guilty, even though I had done nothing wrong.

Twenty minutes later, I got on the next bus, fighting back a powerful urge to cry. A little girl sat in the safety of her mother's lap chatting happily with a male student sitting behind them. I wanted her innocence to remain unshattered forever. I wanted for her to never feel as violated and disempowered as I felt at that moment.

This is why I wanted to tell my story. I am writing this so that anyone who is put in a similar situation will not make my mistakes.

Get Angry! Tell him to leave you the hell alone. Change seats. Complain to the bus driver. Make him be the one who has to leave, not you, if possible. Whatever you do, don't feel that you are in the wrong. And, don't make my mistake of worrying what other people are thinking. You come first.

Also, if you are a witness to harassment, please don't be afraid to interfere. We all like to feel that we can take care of ourselves, but sometimes it's just too hard to think clearly for yourself when you are flung into a bad situation. A little outside help is a relief, not an insult.

The man that bothered me could still be riding around on the PVTA bothering other unsuspecting women. If he is not, then someone else probably is. Maybe if I had been prepared ahead of time, I could have stood up for myself better. I can't change my past, but maybe my experience can have a positive effect on someone else's future. Being harassed sucks.

Suzy Herring is Collegian correspondent.

As an anthropology student, I often have qualms about defining culture.

What is it? How does it affect me? How powerful is its role in determining the type of person I am? If my harrowing experience Saturday night is any indication of our culture, I am tempted to hop on the next train out.

Unfortunately, there is no foreseeable stop free from the cultural ills of sexual harassment.

North Pleasant Street, Amherst Center: A friend and I were headed to a party. Even before reaching the obnoxious zone (those who share my opinion of a certain bar-populated section of North Pleasant Street, will know of which I speak), we were confronted, twice, by two male students.

Is it too judgmental to say obnoxious? NO! Sexist? NO! Arrogant, unjust, immoral, violent, nauseating, slime-scum sub-humans? NO!

All of the above, for lack of more convenient euphemisms, are applicable to the two males, who verbally harassed us with the equivalent of: "You fornicating (f-word) vagina (c-word)" and "you stinking pussy (as in cat, get it?)"

What is it in our society's culture that creates such limited mutual respect and decency?

This unanticipated, potentially violent verbal assault left me powerless to defend myself. However, my friend had an opposite reaction and called the police. Through her strength, I reckoned with my own.

Aided by a policewoman, we confronted the aggressors in a crowded bar, where they continued their alcohol consumption.

Has the faculty of cognition escaped such men, frighteningly emblematic of our society? Had they "never seen us before," as they claimed without blinking? The incident had taken place a mere fifteen minutes earlier. Memory is a general characteristic of all humans (even sub-humans, in this case).

Our society and education create an environment in which such behavior and ethnic and sexual intolerance are condoned and even encouraged. Members of a culture obtain power through adherence to the status quo, as well as through the domination of symbols.

Sexual, ethnic and ideological divergence from the status quo are perceptible threats to those in quest of such power. From the microcosm of the streets of Amherst; ethnic oppression and class domination, to the spectrum of world political and economic injustice, people's integrity is acceptably seen as expendable to those who seek domination.

My friend and I are both working to put an end to such quests for power — beginning with action against sexual harassment.

Clarifying UMass policy on rape and assault

I share the concern for women's safety on campus expressed in Meaghan Connor's commentary, "Rape must be dealt with," which appeared in the Collegian on Oct. 29. However, some of the information in this piece was inaccurate. This letter is an attempt to clarify how the Code of Student Conduct and the Dean of Students Office can be of service to members of the campus community who have been the victims of rape or sexual assault.

Sexual assault, and other forms of uninvited conduct of a sexually explicit nature constitute violations of the CSC. The CSC has a specific section which references this behavior. This clause of the CSC has been applied to a range of behaviors, including rape. The regulations regarding rape rightfully belong in the largest section of the CSC, which addresses safety issues. It is not hidden within the language of any other clause. It is clearly, and distinctly stated. Anyone who believes that rape or other forms of sexual assault are tolerated on campus needs to refer to the CSC, or come into my office to receive additional information on the campus standard in this area.

Contrary to the opinion expressed in Ms. Connor's article, students have been found guilty of rape under the CSC. These students have been assessed harsh penalties, including multiple year suspensions and prohibitions from entering campus property. Once a sanction has expired, a student is free to apply for readmission to the University. In the criminal justice system, once a person has "served their time," he or she is free to re-engage with society, including pursuing a post-secondary school degree. The University can, and often does, place additional restrictions upon a student should he choose to re-enroll, including stipulations that he have no contact with the victim of the assault, maintain ongoing contact with the Dean of Students, and be on probational status for a period of time.

I do not support Ms. Connor's position for the mandatory use of expulsion for students found responsible for violating the CSC section on sexual assault. Such a position limits, as opposed to expands, our ability to respond to cases or survivor's needs on an individual basis. Each case must be reviewed as a distinct incident, within the larger context of the campus and society. Tying our hands by limiting how each case is dealt with works against us. For example, women, even with a strong support system, may not pursue cases if they know that the only sanction available is expulsion. More cases may be found in favor of the alleged perpetrator at the hearing or appeal levels because boards judging the cases may be reluctant to assess or uphold such a penalty.

As Dean of Students of this campus, I am committed to providing support to survivors of sexual assault and rape. Any member of the community who has questions about campus policies regarding rape or sexual assault can come in or call my office at any time to receive answers. As a community, we can review the current judicial system, and suggest changes which will make it better able to serve all students. However, by empowering each other to be responsible members of the community, and to take action when we have been victimized, we cannot be bound by simplistic, unworkable, or ready-made solutions.

Getting involved? Forget the Senate

I know what you're thinking.

Your midterms are probably all done. The pathetic elections are all done. It's almost the weekend and the big WMUA 70's Dance Inferno is tonight in the campus center, and you're wondering.

"I wonder," you're thinking, "what's all this about Student Government Treasurer Karen Talbot, and a secret budget exercise, and funding allocations and the Area Governments, and especially the Concert Fund?"

Al Arpad

If that's what you're thinking, I can't really blame you. I wrote a column about it myself last week. But many students spend so much time worrying about the burning controversies of student government that their grades and even their drinking habits suffer. Fortunately, this tragic situation can be averted.

Student government seems complicated, but it makes sense if you remember one simple rule. When student interests conflict with the interests of administrators, the administrators win. Period.

Now, some of the most entertaining people in the Student Senate are inclined to see this as a diabolical conspiracy, but they're wrong. The staff at the Student Activities Office means well, and has a professional interest in seeing things run quietly and smoothly, which is obviously not how the Student Senate runs. Conflicts between students and administrators are inevitable.

In addition, no matter what student leaders do while they're here, a surprising number eventually graduate. This turnover creates ongoing administrative chaos. It is therefore truly fortunate that when administrators perceive a need for order, they can be spared the inconveniences of a democratic process.

Nevertheless, it is amazing how much some students can and do accomplish by working within the limits of the system. Successful student leaders simply have to recognize that democracy is not a factor, and act accordingly. For example, students have token representation on virtually every campus committee, even the real ones set up by Chancellor Duffey or the Faculty Senate. Most of those committee seats, appointed by the student government president, are perennially empty due to lack of interest.

While students on those committees could not form a voting majority, they could have access to information, something the loudest buffoons of the Student Senate are pathetically lacking.

Just how pathetic is the lack of information? Consider this: at the end of every fiscal year, unspent Student Activities Trust Fund money returns from the budgeted organizations, to a special account called, appropriately enough, Returning SATF. Because the whole trust fund is budgeted in advance by the Senate, the Budgets Committee cannot predict the exact amount of Returning SATF, so they estimate conservatively.

Several former members of the Budgets Committee have estimated that the excess Returning SATF from 1985 to the present should total more than half a million dollars, little or none of which has ever been reallocated by the Senate. Allen Brainerd, the Student Activities Office Business Manager, has told me he would look into the matter, but the money probably isn't there anymore.

If administrators already spend it, nothing much can be done, because when student interests and the interests of administrators conflict, the administrators always win. Period.

If, on the other hand, students had known about the money before, they might have been able to persuade the administrators that the conflicting interests could be reconciled with a minimum of disruption and Senate silliness. Maybe.

Information is power. Unpopular actions, like the formation of the current University alcohol policy and the suspension of litigation power for the Legal Services Office, are usually taken in secret and during the summer. If students generally don't know what's going on, those secrets are easy to keep.

Victory is ours!

I would like to congratulate the entire campus community, undergraduates, graduates, faculty, staff, and administration for a job well done on question three. With five out of ten precincts reporting, Amherst voted down question three by 92 percent, due to record student turnout, and support from the Amherst community as a whole. We not only defeated CLT, we defeated question two as well, and made question five closer than anyone thought.

I would especially like to thank those students, faculty, and staff who put many long hours of their so-called "free time" into the campaign against question three. Special thanks to the Everywoman's Center Advocates for their last-minute campaigning, the Nursing Association, and to MassPIRG for their major contributions to student empowerment, through their voter registration and get-out-the-vote efforts, and arranging the "Vote Today" bus from the Haigis Mall.

We've been on the defensive for a long time. We've finally turned that around. We will be launching a major lobbying campaign on governor-elect Weld, and the legislature as soon as they go back into session. Stop by the Student Government Association, or call me at 545-0341 to sign up. Let's hit Beacon Hill hard!

GEE BOB, WHY SO GLUM?
BECAUSE WILLIAM WELD IS OUR GOVERNOR!
SO NOW WE'RE ENTERING A BIG RECESSION WITH PRETENDERS TO FISCAL CONSERVATISM IN THE STATE HOUSE AND THE WHITE HOUSE! AND ALL BECAUSE JOHN SILBER SCARED PEOPLE!
PEOPLE WERE SCARED THAT HE ACTUALLY SAID WHAT WAS ON HIS MIND! EVERYBODY WAS ANGRY AND THEY WHINED AND COMPLAINED, BUT FACED WITH AN ANGRY CANDIDATE, THE VOTERS CHICKENED OUT!
SO INSTEAD THEY ELECTED THIS QUINTESSENTIAL, MEALY-MOUTHED, REACTIONARY PANDERER WHO CAMPAIGNED FOR A BALLOT ISSUE THAT WAS DEFEATED BY ALMOST TWO TO ONE! HOW'S THAT FOR SENDING A MESSAGE?
AND NOW WE'RE STUCK WITH AN ARISTOCRATIC DEMAGOGUE FOR FOUR MORE YEARS OF DISINGENUOUS DISSEMBLING AND PARALYSIS AS USUAL, ALL BECAUSE JOHN SILBER SCARED PEOPLE!
JOHN SILBER SCARED ME. I VOTED FOR WELD.
ME TOO. HAVE A BEER.

I hope I will never have to know the misery of war

"I've known no war. And if I ever do, I won't know for sure who'll be fighting whom for the soldier's lonely tomb. Now opens as soon as the referee's gun starts to roar. I'll know no war."

Tim DiFalco

I took those words from a 1982 Who song because they have always had a personal effect on me. While I was back home about a month ago, I was at a local bar, enjoying a few beers with my friends, when an older gentleman swayed up to the bar next to us. He looked like he needed someone to talk to, so we lent him an ear.

This man full of spirits told us he had fought for the U.S. Army back in World War II. He was the oldest of four brothers, three of whom were killed in combat as U.S. soldiers. One died fighting on the beaches of Normandy in World War II, another was killed in the Korean War, and yet another lost his life fighting in Vietnam.

My friend and I looked at each other astonished, trying to imagine the pain this man must be feeling. As he showed us pictures of each of his brothers in their respective uniforms, I could see the sadness and pride in his face. To lighten the mood, he offered to buy us a pitcher of beer in turn for our companionship. We told him we would buy him one instead, but the waitress shut him off, saying he had already had too much to drink.

So he shook our hands and bade us farewell.

The incident made me reiterate my thoughts relating to the Who's song. I have never known war in the real sense of its meaning. The last major war that the U.S. was involved in was Vietnam.

As the television would report the daily death tolls of U.S. soldiers each night, I was probably playing happily in my crib, completely unaware of what war was. Although I have witnessed the invasions of Grenada, Libya, and Panama throughout the 1980s, I am sure that I have known no war.

Now as Americans, we are faced with yet another conflict, and the threat of impending war with Iraq. The latest press release from the White House stated that if Iraq planned to use biological weapons against U.S. forces in the Gulf, that they would "pay dearly for it."

This is the type of rhetoric that leads to war.

Amongst all the budget cuts and proposed tuition increases here at UMass, I worry enough about being able to stay here, without having to worry about being sent off to war in the Middle East. A full-scale war could reinstate the draft, which directly affects the 18-25 age group.

I believe that the government of Kuwait should be fully restored, but not at the cost of young American lives in a bloody war.

Like so many people my age, I've known no war. I hope I never will.

Pot offers seeds of peace for Iraq crisis and war on drugs

The Oct. 25 issue of the Collegian featured a "Point/Counterpoint" section which was appropriately entitled "World In Crisis." Three of the articles published in this issue dealt with the crisis in the Gulf, yet not one of them suggested alternative methods by which the U.S. may become free of its dependence on foreign oil.

One article mentioned that the U.S. is the world's "least efficient consumer of energy," and added that it is time for our nation to start conserving more, while using and wasting less valuable energy. I agree, and I am also in favor of "economically and environmentally sound energy policies."

However, there is something that was overlooked in this and the other articles concerning our involvment in the Middle East: the tremendous need for the U.S. (and other countries) to efficiently incorporate other forms of energy.

When George Herbert Walker Bush became President, he started a war: a "War On Drugs." At that time, according to Newsweek polls, the most important problem in the U.S. was drugs -- now it is the deficit.

The War On Drugs is being lost, and at a heavy toll; prisons and courtrooms are overcrowded with drug-related crimes, and many agree it will only get worse. Now we have another war, a real one this time, about to erupt in the Middle East. This conflict has been referred to as the "War For Cheap Oil," although thus far all it has done is cost the government millions of dollars, and cause the price of gas to skyrocket.

Stephan R. Damiani

Can either of these "wars" be won, or at least be brought to an end? The answer is yes, and the solution is growing like a weed right in our own backyards.

President Bush himself recommended that auto manufacturers be required to make cars powered from methanol (the simplest form of alcohol) in urban areas already suffering from severe air pollution. Any diesel engine in the world can be converted to run on vegetable oil, and when it is burned will not pollute the air. Unlike fossil fuels, (i.e. oil and coal) which emit sulphur dioxide when burned, methanol and vegetable oil release carbon dioxide. In this way, an atmospheric balance is created; when an "energy crop" is growing it takes in carbon dioxide from the air, and when it burns, the carbon dioxide is released. Thus, not only is oil not necessary as a fuel, it is actually less desireable than its non-polluting alternative.

So why is this country so dependent on oil? Well, the best source of vegetable oil is the hemp seed, and the plant that can best be used as an energy crop is cannabis hemp. The bad news? Both are illegal in the U.S.

Hemp (marijuana) is illegal because the petroleum companies and corporations like Dupont and Hearst Paper Manufacturing Division do not want it to compete on the open market with their paper and oil-based products. That's right -- hemp can also be used to make paper products, textiles, fabrics for clothes (it's softer and more durable than cotton), rope and cordage, paints and varnishes. The hemp seed is also a valuable source of protein (second only to the soybean).

It became illegal with the Marijuana Tax Act of 1937 (the same year that Dupont developed nylon, a fabric made from petroleum), and, thanks in no small part to the War On Drugs, remains illegal today. Hemp has literally hundreds of other uses (including medicinal application); too many to list here. So the next time you hear someone mention pot-legalization, maybe you will think twice before dismissing it as ridiculous.

Let's end the crisis in the Gulf and the War On Drugs with a victory, yet through peaceful means.

Don't criticize it, legalize it. Hemp for victory.

Get a jump on post-college life with on the job experience

The semester is winding down.

Midterms and papers are upon us and winter session is rapidly approaching. The attitude in my house, a house full of graduating seniors is: "What to do for the five long weeks of winter break?"

Erin Martin

Course catalogues are strewn across the coffee table.

Arrangements are being made for who will live in the house over January. My housemates are frantically rushing about, looking for temporary work. The question is where, and how?

I can identify with the concerns of my housemates, but luckily, I do not share such trying decisions. This January, I will return to the office where I worked all summer long. I will work full time for four weeks and hopefully earn enough money to absorb our latest $400 fee increase.

I consider myself lucky to have found a paying position that relates to my studies and interests. A position that I found through the resources at the field experience office.

After investigating a number of co-op and internship positions, writing numerous resumes and cover letters, I was rewarded with a position that has given me the experience of a lifetime.

In this day and age, with the economy and job market on a speedy decline, college graduates need job experience. Not just flipping burgers or running a cash register. A four year degree isn't enough anymore.

The fact that you are here, studying your brains out, is not going to get you an interview. The competition for entry level positions is intense.

You may think that everyone possessing a Bachelor's degree is in the same boat. Unfortunately, this is not the case.

Consider Northeastern University. The program there combines cooperative education with academics. The students there chose the school mainly for this reason.

I spent the weekend with friends from Northeastern and I met a lot of people, one of whom has spent the last four years writing editorials for The Boston Globe.

You may be surprised to learn that the same job opportunities are offered to students here, too. The Field Experience Office has a number of paid co-op and internship positions that suit every major.

Most students assume co-ops are for Engineering and Business majors. This just isn't true. The opportunities are endless, and by utilizing the resources at the Mather Career Center, you may discover exactly what you want to do.

What if you need some extra credits to graduate? Or you have some elective credits to play around with. The internship program offers employment that is paid with University credit. This is an academic program because you are required to submit a final project that is evaluated and graded by a faculty member in your department.

On-the-job training is a valuable resource. When you submit your resume to an employer, or your application to a graduate school, significant job experience is heavily weighted. If you are expecting to graduate, without anything extraordinary on your resume, and land that dream job, guess again.

Why are you wasting time?

Evaluate your academic situation. Do you have credits you need to earn? Are you thinking of taking a semester off to work? Do your summers regularly contain full-time employment?

Don't spend your winter session loafing around watching TV.

What good will it do to complain about not having a job?

Get up to the Career Center and explore the employment opportunities in the co-op and internship programs. It will pay off for you! As my housemates will testify, graduation approaches quickly.

Get some experience, don't leave school without it.

incompetence.

In other races, Republicans captured the treasurer's office as Joe Malone defeated Democrat William Galvin.

Nastiness in the treasurer's race hit a peak when both men called the other a "jackass" in an Oct. 11 debate. After that, Malone said he wouldn't debate any more.

Ballot question number three, the Citizens for Limited Taxation proposal to roll back taxes and fees to July 1988 levels, lost. With 90 percent of the precincts reporting, the measure lost by 60 percent of the vote.

Tax rollback opponent James Braude said the totals showed voters felt they got their call for change through in the September primaries, which saw several incumbents fall.

"When people finally realized there could be realistic change in Massachusetts without burning the house down, which is what question three would have done, they started moving in [our] direction," he said.

The election shake-up made some incumbents cling to their seats, and others fall out entirely.

Even such stalwarts of the system as Senate President William Bulger found themselves in uncertain reelection races. But Bulger won easily.

In the attorney general's race, Middlesex County District Attorney Scott Harshbarger, who sent incumbent James Shannon packing in the house down, which is what question Democratic primary, defeated Republican William Sawyer, an Acton lawyer.

Question two, the proposal to limit state consultant hiring was defeated 55 percent to 45 percent, according to unofficial results.

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

Crisis in India: Beyond post-colonialism?

Recent events in the world's second largest nation, the Republic of India, have plunged South Asia into turmoil, and sent reverberations across the South. The socio-political, economic and religious complexity of the issues that concern 840 million Indians are so staggering that a treatment of the underlying issues in a half-page of text is clearly simplistic.

Nonetheless, questions about the future of India continue to concern people of the South. An attempt will be made here to present a snapshot of the current situation — albeit superficial, but worth trying.

Hindu fundamentalists spearheaded by the Vishwa Hindu Parishad [World Hindu Council] and a cadre-based militia called the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh [National Self-help Society] have mounted an explosive campaign to forge a unified and militant Hindu India — also called Hindutva [a Greater India].

The highly emotive flashpoint in this war of symbolism is a 460-year-old Muslim mosque in a small town called Ayodhya, 345 miles southeast of New Delhi. The militant Hindus claim that the mosque was built on the birthplace of Rama, a sacred god in the Hindu pantheon. They are demanding that a temple be constructed at this site and the mosque be either destroyed or relocated.

A gigantic campaign to build the temple culminated in massive clashes between the para-military forces of the Indian State and the militants, leaving over 200 dead and thousands wounded. Bloody riots between Muslims and Hindus also rocked the nation all the way from traditional bastions of communalism like Udaipur in the North to the more tolerant city of Madras in the South.

India's 100 million Muslims have become the target of the revivalist wrath of a movement that has deep appeal to upper-caste urban proletariat and trading communities. Militant Hindus decry centuries of subjugation under Turkish, Persian, Arab, Abyssinian and Afghan invaders who shared a common religion — Islam.

Ironically, they neglect the entirely indigenous nature of the current Indian Muslim community, and the magnificent cultural synthesis created by the contact between these two great religions — a poetic language called Urdu, an architectural tradition that could build a Taj Mahal, the Kathak dance tradition, Hindustani classical music, the ever-popular ballads called ghazals . . .

But symbolism is the order of the day. The Hindu fundamentalists have a critical weakness — their symbols are those of the elite Brahmin caste that has long monopolized power and status, especially in the densely populated North.

However, members of the lower castes or outcastes constitute 74 percent of India's people. Caste continues to exclude them from true citizenship, and upper caste assertions that Indian politics must be caste-free often sound like a cynical attempt to preserve a status quo.

The caste inequity was a powder keg waiting to explode. The ex-Prime Minister, V.P. Singh, finally lit the fuse by reserving 55,000 government jobs for the so-called backward castes. Upper caste university students lashed out at the decision, rioting and even resorting to self-immolation. Lost in the furor was the fact that there are about 204,290 annual vacancies in the government.

India's upper caste-controlled media closed ranks to vociferously denounce this "monumental act of social irresponsibility," and denounced the "murder of merit."

But the Hindu fundamentalists were the biggest losers in the simmering caste war. Their claim to unite all Hindus was exposed as somewhat specious. Their reaction was predictable — attempts to submerge caste in a religious crusade against the Muslims, often citing Kashmiri insurrection as a pretext.

The political front of Hindu fundamentalism, called the Bharatiya Janata Party, withdrew its support of V.P Singh's tenuous coalition government, thus reducing it to a minority.

By now the sharks had smelled blood. The party led by V.P. Singh was torn apart by ambitious rivals. The leader of the dissent in the ruling coalition, a deeply ambitious would-be socialist called Chandra Shekhar huddled with Rajiv Gandhi, the leader of the opposition to build a marriage of convenience.

As this paper goes to press, Singh's government has collapsed, and midterm polls seem likely in the near future. Mass movements built around religion and caste have emerged as major players.

Simultaneously, ethnic nationalism has sparked off bloody conflicts all the way from the beautiful Vale of Kashmir to the lush tea gardens of Assam in the East.

Has something has gone dreadfully wrong with the supposedly secular, parliamentary tradition that British imperialism [in no small measure involved in promoting sub-nationalism] bequeathed to the anti-colonial nationalists of the 1940s?

Or could it be possible that events in India, whose creation along with that of Pakistan in 1947 heralded the end of direct colonialism, now herald the end of post-colonialism?

How long can a secularism that refuses to come to terms with memories of centuries of perceived subjugation of faith survive? How long can the type of egalitarianism that decries the inequity of caste but cannot accept efforts to redistribute power last? How long can a centralized state that quells ethnic dissent with an iron fist expect to unify disparate peoples?

Or is there a different model, with no relation to Western forms of government, that can bring Indians together to build a nation with truly historic potential?

In the 50s and 60s India was racked by riots based on linguistic sub-nationalism. This was resolved by creating provinces based on linguistic boundaries. Perhaps these provinces should enjoy autonomy in a federation of equals, with a central government that oversees defence and external affairs, and coordinates finance and communication.

An elected parliament already legislates. Perhaps the Central Government could be nominated independent of the parliament on the basis of an equitable power-sharing agreement.

Trans-provincial forces like mass movements based on caste and religion [Hindu and non-Hindu] could also be incorporated. Needless to say, new forces would have to be respected, and this power-sharing agreement would require periodic re-negotiation.

Perhaps internal violence will drive the government to decentralize and share power. The alternatives are bleak — a military-backed civilian autocracy is exceedingly likely.

The British model of government must be discarded or modified, regardless of ostrich-in-the-sand segments of society. The nation has survived many a crisis. It will transcend this one as well.

Those who seek to exploit the internal crisis under the guise of a New World Order may underestimate the will to resist.

The people will devise uniquely Indian solutions. Post-colonialism will be consigned to history.

Outraged reactions to Gulf

As the U.S. war machine revs up for possible battle halfway around the world, the prevalent attitude among the Third World community here is largely one of anger, dismay and frustration.

Guy St.-Rose from St. Lucia, a STPEC student at UMass, was very critical of the U.S. attitude in this crisis.

"Given the track record of the U.S. with respect to interventions in the Third World, I don't think the U.S. has any moral standing in disapproving of other countries engaging in invasions," he said.

"This is a matter of grave concern for Third World countries, because it clearly shows how ruthless U.S. imperialist interests can be when it comes to domination over Third World resources."

Echoing some of these concerns, Satinder Singh from India, a COINS graduate student at UMass, said, "There is no room for the economically strangulated Third World to go against the wishes of the U.S. If a nation, while attempting to do what is best for its own people, goes against U.S. interests, it is immediately branded a traitor and dealt with accordingly."

Speaking on the role of other countries in this crisis, Faisal Mian from Pakistan, studying Economics and International Relations at Hampshire College, said, "The Pakistan governemnt has no business sending troops to Saudi Arabia. It is doing so only out of a sense of obligation to the Saudis and because of intense pressure from the U.S. U.S. interference in this affair will wash away what little international credibility it has."

Farzad Kanalabadi from Iran, a Computer Systems Engineering major at UMass, said, "Iran is unlikely to go against the position of either Iraq or the U.S. U.S. presence in this area is a clear manifestation of its imperialistic designs."

Addressing the consequences of the possible war, Magali Rastogi from India, studying Architecture and Third World Development at Hampshire College, said, "If there is war, its consequences will be devastating. There will be a tremendous loss of lives and property, especially to Iraq. What is appalling about the one-sided coverage of this issue by the U.S. media is a lack of discussion of these consequences of military action."

Mohamnad Ali Ghazanfari from Iran, a COINS major at UMass, explained, "If there is a war, the U.S. will suffer heavy losses, but not as much as the Middle East countries. The balance of power in the Middle East will be drastically changed, and the U.S. and Europe will profit immensely from the bloodshed of the people of the Middle East."

A number of students were concerned about the impact of this crisis on other Third World countries.

Sarita Kumar from India, an HRTA major at UMass, said, "The Iraqi annexation of Kuwait has created a feeling of nervousness among small Third World countries, like Singapore [where I have lived for the past three years] which used to be a part of Malaysia. On the other hand, it is also dismaying to see the kind of welcome accorded to the U.S. in Saudi Arabia."

Elaborating on this issue, Ranu Aggarwal from India, studying Landscape Architecture at UMass, said, "The annexation of Kuwait by Iraq raises some very serious issues about the redrawing of colonial boundaries, viz, how far back in time should one go to resolve such matters? There is also much more to such issues than history: power and politics are also involved."

Rabi Dutta from India, a COINS graduate student at UMass, said he was disconcerted by China's recent decision to let the United Nations authorize force.

"This can lead to the legitimization of wars by the U.N.," he said. "This is disastrous for the Third World. It means that the powers in the U.N. Security Council can carve up the Third World so as to fit into their spheres of influence."

Addressing what he thought was an imminent war, Dutta said, "To avoid damage to themselves, the Saudis are advocating a quick strike as opposed to a long and protracted battle. All the countries supporting the U.S. are asking for a price for their support. Iraq will be carved up by the victors."

Hussein Ibish from Lebanon, a graduate student in the English department at UMass, said, "Those who speak of the sovereignty of the Kuwaiti people are ignoring fundamental and obvious neo-colonial realities which ought to be dismissed by every self-respecting young individual from the Third World."

Those who sit around bemoaning the degradation of colonialism and then publicly oppose those who take up arms against it are hypocritical fools who ought to be accorded no attention at all. One can discuss Saddam Hussein's politics, leadership, and personality, but as to the nation of Iraq and its impending demolition by foreign imperialist forces there can be no serious debate among respectable Third World nationalists."

Madanmohan Rao is a UMass student.

NOTA outside Wildwood School. "The choice between just two candidates is not enough; it results in tactical voting."

Voting NOTA in this election is not "voting for nobody," said Hampshire College student Elizabeth Sharp, who campaigned for NOTA outside the Crocker Farm School in Amherst. If a lot of people vote NOTA in this election, said Sharp, it will send a "strong message" to government in general.

Jean Laino, an Amherst resident who held a sign outside Amherst voting Precincts 4, 5, and 10, said "It's a pity that some people feel that two [candidates] are enough . . . the ones that are running nobody wants." Voting NOTA is about changing the political process, said Laino.

"We're not advocating overthrow . . . we just want to put a little more democracy in the election."

Voting None of the Above is a way of empowering voters, said NOTA advocate Meagen McColgan, an English major at UMass. "People keep telling me it's a cop out," said McColgan, but "democracy is not clicking a switch just to put someone in office." Voting should be more than a "choice between two evils."

The Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign also advocated a yes vote on question four, along with the NOTA option, to "provide voters with a full spectrum of candidate and party options," according to their election day flier. Question four, a binding referendum on the Mass. ballot, narrowly passed with a 4 percent margin.

BOSTON (AP) — A last hurrah for Gov. Michael Dukakis on election day was Cheers.

The governor, who chose not to seek re-election, taped a cameo appearance on the television comedy Tuesday.

"This election day I had some time on my hands, so it was a fun thing to do," Dukakis said.

During a break in the filming, Dukakis got in a plug for the Massachusetts Film Bureau and joked about calling his cousin, actress Olympia Dukakis, for coaching on his one line of dialogue: "How are ya?"

He said he did not watch the two televised debates between the candidates seeking his job: Republican William Weld, who won, and Democrat John Silber.

The governor arranged an election night dinner party for members of his cabinet and staff.

He said recently it did not really feel strange to be removed from the campaign and that there was some comfort in not having to worry about political considerations while working on the state budget crisis.

"It would have been exceedingly difficult to have done what I've done over the past several months had I been a candidate for re-election," he said.

"I've been able to devote myself singlemindedly to what needed to be done around here."

Dukakis lost his first bid for public office — a seat on the Brookline Redevelopment Authority in 1958 — and his last — the presidency of the United States in 1988.

Dukakis, left, reads a newspaper while Ted Danson, center, who plays Sam the bartender, and George Wendt, right, who plays Norm, walks past while shooting a scene for the television show Cheers in Boston Tuesday. Dukakis, whose term ends at the end of this year, took time out from his election day activities to act in the scene.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Play it safe in all relationships and undertakings today. Someone you like may try to mislead you. Keep your guard up and protect yourself. Share secrets only with loved ones.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Leave all thoughts of romance for tomorrow and spend today taking care of routine matters. A telephone call will bring welcome news. Remain calm if a neighbor tries to play hard ball.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Greater tact and patience will help you avoid domestic confrontations. At work, stick to solo projects. You will enjoy being in the spotlight at a community or church event.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be on the lookout for unusual opportunities to advance your career. Some funds you expect to receive may be delayed. Be careful about getting involved in a friend's business.
LEO (July 23-Aug 22) The emphasis now is on fulfilling your obligations. Communication will improve by the day's end. Following a hunch will lead you in the right direction. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Uncertainty could hamper your productivity today. Schedule a conference with the appropriate person if you have questions about your future. Romance will be uppermost in your thoughts.
LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) An influential person will be easier to approach today. Just be certain you have done your homework before presenting a proposal. A problem with a younger person will be resolved.
SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) A lucky day for those who work behind the scenes! Prominent people will be more helpful than in the recent past. You may find yourself counting the hours until a romantic rendezvous.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) It is easy to make stupid errors when you are in a hurry. Take your time. Rely on your own judgment where financial matters are concerned. Social affairs may become rather expensive.
CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) Make better use of your creative or artistic talents. Postpone signing an agreement until more information is available. Extra funds should be put into savings.
AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) Speak up when you have a good idea. Greater input will increase your chances for a promotion. You may need time alone tonight to think things through. Your mate or partner will understand.
PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) No important decisions should be required today. Lend an attentive ear to mate's wishes and woes. Romance is everywhere. You may want to go out tonight. Be sure you can afford it!

Volleyball bounced

Hartford spikes UMass, Seton Hall up next

By LIOR BEN-AHARON
Collegian Correspondent

It is not often that a loss produces good spirits for a team, but when you are the UMass volleyball team, a good outing, win or lose, is welcomed with open arms.

On Tuesday night, the Minutewomen lost to ECAC powerhouse Hartford, but played exceptionally well.

"I'm so happy with the way we're playing right now," coach coach Carol Ford said, despite her teams 4-27 record.

UMass will have to play just as well, and probably better, tonight (7 p.m. Totman Gym) when they face off against Seton Hall.

The Pirates of Seton Hall are currently fighting for a Big East tournament berth with a 3-4 record in the conference (4th place). Overall, the team boasts a 25-9 record.

"All the kids are huge," said Ford referring to Seton Hall. "They are very tall and have excellent coaches."

According to Ford, the Pirates will attempt to run a fast offense, an offense with which the Minutewomen have the most difficulty.

The key for UMass then will be to slow down the tempo of the match to a speed more to their liking. To do this, the Minutewomen will concentrate on serving and blocking.

The task of blocking will fall heavily on the shoulders of middle-blockers Rachel Bredemeier and Sharon Panoff.

This task is made more difficult because of the strength of Seton Hall's attack, led by tri-captains Deidre Murphy, Lisa Ferguson and Laura Romieca. The trio leads the team in most offensive and defensive categories.

"Seton Hall is going to be tough," said Ford, but added, 'We're looking forward to playing them."

Tonight's match is the second to last match of the year, but only the ninth home date of the season for UMass volleyball. The match also holds special significance in that tonight is Fan Appreciation Night.

The Minutewomen have not had the best of seasons. However, the team has endured numerous injuries and mounting losses, and have come back everyday with their game faces on. Let's show up with our game faces on tonight as a show of support for UMass volleyball.

■ cross country

The meet is divided up into two regions, each of which will have two national representatives. The first region is New England while the second is the Mid-Atlantic states, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia.

LaFreniere says that in the New England province Providence should be number one and finish second overall behind Villanova. In the race for the other spot it will be a fight between Yale and Boston College, according to Lafreniere.

This will be the last cross country meet for three seniors on the UMass squad. LaFreniere is sad to see Dana Goldfarb and co-captains Kathy Holt and Cathy Crocker finish their careers.

"I don't want to see them graduate," said Lafreniere. "They will be hard to replace because they are the core of this team. All season the three of them worked to the top of their abilities. They will be greatly missed."

Field hockey hosts UConn in round one of Tournament

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

These are the reasons teams play the regular season; for the opportunity to compete in the NCAA Tournament, and the chance to win a national championship.

For the University of Massachusetts field hockey team, that chance begins today at Totman Field (2 p.m.), as they host the University of Connecticut.

In the history of field hockey, the two teams have met 17 times, with both teams winning seven games, and tieing three. However, in post-season play, the Huskies have won all three games. Their last tournament win against UMass was a 3-2 win in 1986. Today, there will be no ties, and after the game one of these two teams will take the series lead 8-7.

Earlier in the season, when they met at Storrs, CT, UMass defeated the Huskies 2-1 on the strength of goals by Sherlan Cabralis and Kerri Fagan.

"How do we beat UMass? That's a good question," said UConn coach Nancy Stevens. "I think if we're gonna win, we need great performances from all our players. We're past the stage in the season where we worry about how we beat another team. We need to worry about what UConn does, not about what UMass does."

UMass coach Pam Hixon won't admit it, but one of the biggest challenges that the Minutewomen face is how to avoid looking ahead to avenging last year's 2-1 quarter-final loss to Old Dominion, the team UMass would play next if it wins today.

"There is absolutely no chance of us looking past UConn because tournament time is a one shot deal," Hixon said.

The Huskies are the 11th seed, and their 11-7-2 record is the worst in the tournament. UConn has a 1-5 record against teams in the tourney. Their only win came against Northeastern 2-0.

Many coaches feel that they were lucky to get an invitation to the Big Dance.

"UMass and Iowa (who plays 12 seeded Stanford) have the easiest first round matches," said Temple coach Michele Madison.

"To be honest with you, I would rather play a turf team like Boston University or Northeastern in the first round," Hixon said.

UConn is approaching today's game as one in which they have nothing to lose, which means they will probably be a loose bunch. "We know we're the underdogs, and we know that if we want to win we'll have to play our best," Stevens said.

The Huskies rely on their defense to win games. Goalie Megan Tiley has a 0.93 goals against average, with nine shutouts in 20 games. She has allowed 19 goals and has kicked away 240 shots.

The UConn offense is led by junior Chris Wadja (11 goals and four assists). Senior Dana Fuchs and freshman Jennifer Sinco have five goals each.

Philippa Scott starts in goal for the Minutewomen. The last time she faced the Huskies she made 13 saves. Tiley, on the other hand, saved 17 UMass shots.

After tomorrow, the field of 12 will be down to eight, and either UConn or UMass will be taking a trip to Virginia for Sunday's contest with ODU.

McCoy to miss exhibition opener

Jim McCoy will miss tomorrow night's exhibition opener against the USSR Trade Union team at the Cage (7:30 p.m.). The women open their exhibition season right before the men at 5:30 p.m.

Jim McCoy, the leading scorer on the University of Massachusetts basketball team and a first team All-Atlantic 10 selection, is recovering from pneumonia and a "small case" of chicken pox.

McCoy will not play in tomorrow night's scrimmage against the USSR Trade Union team, which includes several members of the gold medal-winning 1988 Soviet Olympic team. The scrimmage tips off at the Cage at 7:30 p.m.

McCoy has been out of practice since the virus first struck two weeks ago. When chicken pox made it difficult for him to eat last week, McCoy spent several days being fed intravenously at Cooley-Dickenson Hospital in Northampton.

"It took me down a little bit," said McCoy. "I didn't lose that much weight, about 10 pounds."

McCoy will start practicing Sunday and said he will "definitely" be ready when the Minutemen start their regular season Nov. 26 at Purdue.

It will take a week to get back to 100 percent, McCoy said. "I've been shooting around, so, I'll be alright."

"If Jim starts practicing in a week, he'll be back for Purdue," said coach John Calipari. "He's got two-and-a-half weeks to win his starting spot back. It was a miserable sickness."

Against the Soviets tomorrow night, Calipari said he will start Anton Brown, Rafer Giles, Tony Barbee, Harper Williams and Will Herndon.

XC set for finale

According to head coach Julie LaFreniere, the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team is healthy, rested, and ready for its last meet of the season.

This Saturday UMass will compete in the ECAC Championship meet, which is being held at Wavery Park in New Canaan, Connecticut. The meet serves as the qualifying meet for the national championships.

UMass' chances of qualifying for the nationals are rather slim but the meet should be competitive.

"If we run to our potential we should finish between 13th and 15th overall," said LaFreniere. "We need to run well on Saturday to make a difference in the meet."

To run well UMass will need big performances from Kelly Liljeblad and Becky Johnson, who have lead the team all season. Also important will be a team effort from Kathy Holt, Dana Goldfarb, Michelle St. Laurent, Cathy Crocker, and Mo Meldrim.

"We are aiming for the best right now," said LaFreniere. "This team is ready to run their best race of the year. The course is not as difficult as most courses we run on so the kids are looking for fast times."

At the meet will be teams from Virginia to Maine, over fifty in all. Included in this group are powerhouses such as Villanova, Providence, and Penn State.

"Villanova should definitely win this meet," said LaFreniere. "They will be the top team at the nationals for Region two."

After a dismal season, men's soccer looks to the future

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

One game can often tell more about a team's season than any amount of statistics can.

The setting was Upper Boyden field, on a cloudy Saturday afternoon. The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team led Temple 1-0 on a Brett Anthony header. With 15 minutes left to play, the stage was set for the Minutemen to collect their first-ever win against the Owls.

Bam. Out of nowhere, Temple scored two goals within three minutes, to defeat the Minutemen 2-1. UMass had just lost a game that it had dominated for 70 minutes. They would not win another game until the last day of the season, when they beat Fairfield 6-1, to finish the season with a 3-11-3 overall mark and a 1-5-2, eighth-place A-10 record.

As in the Temple match, the Minutemen seemed snake-bitten for much of the season, losing games they could've or should've won in the last ten minutes. They lost a controversial game to Dartmouth, Penn State scored with 12 minutes to go in the second overtime, and Rhode Island's goalkeeper saved a penalty kick, preserving a tie.

More frustrating was the fact that UMass could have won all of those games had they capitalized on the golden scoring opportunities they had.

"In our first two losses, we outplayed the opposition and still lost," said assistant coach Jeff Cook. "If we had won those games, we might've never looked back. Instead, we lost our focus.

"Next year we have to score more goals, no question," Cook said.

UMass' paltry scoring punch is seen in the final statistics. The Minutemen scored just 21 goals, and six of those were against Fairfield in the season's final match. Randy Jacobs and Dan Lawrence tied for the team lead with four scores each. Brett Anthony and Andrew Bird were next, with three apiece.

Pete McEvoy led the team with eight assists, while Jacobs and Aaron Zandy had four.

Defensively, the Minutemen were among the best in the A-10, thanks to the nearly flawless play of sweeper Pete McEvoy, who was named to the all-A-10 conference first team.

Defenders Darren Stone, Matt Bearce and Todd Kylish all complimented McEvoy nicely. Behind them in goal, Steve Armenti and Jon Gruber combined for a 1.39 goals-against average. Their win-loss records do not reflect their superlative play. Armenti posted three shutouts, and finished sixth in the A-10 in goal-keeping.

"We'll remember this season, we won't let this happen again, Cook said."

Women swimmers bounce back to defeat Catamounts

After a slow start, swimmers cruise to victory, remain unbeaten

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team traveled to Vermont on Tuesday not knowing quite what to expect from the Catamount lady swimmers. UMass coach Robert Newcomb knew Vermont was well coached and in the process of rebuilding their program, but was unsure of the quality of the swimmers, especially the freshmen.

In their first dual meet of the season, the revamped Vermont squad posted a serious threat to UMass. However, the Minutewomen (2-0) were able to bounce back from an early deficit and come out on top 161.5 to 135.5.

The Catamounts started out strong. They actually led going into the seventh event of the meet. A threat from last season, Vermont's Catharine Hoehl, dominated the 200 freestyle and 100 freestyle. In addition, the Catamounts were able to pull off victories in the 220 medley relay, 100 breaststroke and 100 butterfly.

"We always tend to get up for UMass," said Vermont second year coach Nick Nichols. "We had many unexpected and encouraging swims. Our times were faster than our New England Tournament times of last season."

"Emotionally, we weren't ready to go at the beginning of the meet," Newcomb said. "Vermont is always up for us because we're their first meet. They came out swimming really well."

Nonetheless, there is a quality about the UMass team that allowed them to rebound. They're very team oriented and with the help of everyone they were able to turn on the intensity.

Leading the way for UMass was senior Kiri Binning with three wins and freshman Kim Broad with two. Binning set a school record as well as a Vermont pool record with a time of 2:16.19 in the 200 backstroke. Binning also set a Vermont pool record in the 200 Individual Medley (2:16.06) and was victorious in the 100 backstroke (1:03.61). Broad won the 1000 freestyle (10:58.61) and the 500 freestyle (5:22.38).

Also swimming personal bests were freshmen Minutewomen Jennifer Saunders and Amy Lewis. Saunders was able to take 4 seconds off her previous best time in the 200 breaststroke (2:34.08) and Lewis swam her fastest in the 100 breaststroke (1:15.72).

UMass' freshman diver Allison White continued her exceptional diving as she swept both the optional and voluntary one meter dives.

"They were a much better team than I expected," Newcomb said. "I was happy to see the way we came back."

Let's boogie, baby

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

You are in a room filled with people dressed in the most awful fashions imaginable — lots of polyester, pants with flare bottoms, shirts with huge collars, turtlenecks, shoes with huge soles — and all of these articles of clothing come in pukey colors like pine green, lemon yellow and pumpkin orange.

It brings back memories of that one Brady Bunch episode when Jan wore that puke green turtleneck with matching flare pants which had pictures of horses decorating them.

Your Brady Bunch reverie is broken when this smarmy oaf, with his shirt unbuttoned to his navel and a gaudy gold medallion hanging from his neck, inquires, "Hey babe, what's your sign? Let's boogie."

You get this awful urge to regurgitate as you watch him tap his toe to the beat of "Disco Duck," when suddenly you realize that this isn't a bad acid trip that you are experiencing, it's a 70s dance party.

Most people would rather spend a evening with Jesse Helms than reminisce about the 70s. But, when done in the proper fashion, a theme party celebrating the tastelessness of a decade can bring giggles to even the most anally retentive people.

The folks at WMUA 91.1 FM hope to accomplish that on Thursday night.

"It's going to be a veritable potpourri of excitement, music, dancing, lights, fashion and synthetic fabrics," said Jeremy Brown, Assistant Promotions Director at WMUA.

The idea for a 70s Dance Party came from WMUA's promotions director, Ami Bennitt. She was inspired by a pair of clogs she purchased last spring.

Bennitt said that one reason WMUA is having the party is "because so many people don't know that WMUA exists and the reason that no one knows it exists is because they're satisfied with mainstream radio and don't need to go to alternative programming. We're trying to give them something that they're familiar with to familiarize them with the station."

Phil Straub will perform the main disc spinning duties Thursday night with a little help from fellow WMUA cohorts Jim Powers, Bill Rosenblatt, Kevin Mitchell, Chuck Hamilton, James Roberts, Keith Campbell, Mark Sturm and Mark Viesta.

While most might find the mere thought of celebrating the 70s utterly repulsive, Bennitt and Brown are hoping that there will be others that find the thought absolutely goofy.

"The main point of this is nostalgia because it's the hippest, tackiest era of the millenium," Bennitt said.

Brown added, "Disco might suck, but it's the only childhood we had."

WMUA's 70s Dance Party will take place at the Campus Center Auditorium on Thursday night from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. Admission is $2. All proceeds will benefit the station. Appropriate attire is requested, but not necessary.

Oh yeah, Jody Gabin contributed to this article too.

Prong, Pantera and Mind Over 4 will take you on ride

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

You prepare yourself as the attendant straps you in with a safety harness.

"You're gonna need this," he says as he checks to see if the harness is securely in place.

The wheels of the vehicle creak as it starts to move with an ever increasing pace up the track. In a millisecond, you are no longer moving up, you are spiraling down into a seemingly endless vortex. The wheels are now emitting an angry hum.

As fast as you were spiraling down, you are now being tossed from one side to the other and upside down. It's all too quick. It's all too overwhelming and yet there's a smile on your face as you feel all the tension release from your being.

The ride has come to a halt. You are back where you started. Your brain is sufficiently scrambled. All you know is that you want to do it again.

I wonder if this is the experience the promoters had in mind when they put together the tour line-up of Prong, Pantera and Mind Over 4, as their respective music styles promise to provide an intense live show.

Prong, an avant-garde crossover band from New York City, formed in 1986 when guitarist Tommy Victor, then soundman for the legendary New York club CBGB's, met bassist Mike Kirkland, who also worked at CBGB's as a doorman. Drummer Ted Parsons, who was then with the Swans, completed the line-up.

They released their first album, a self-produced mini-LP entitled Primitive Origins, in 1987 on Spigot Records which was followed by Force Fed on the In-Effect label and a maxi-single with a cover of the Chrome's "Third from the Sun." They were well received in England, as well as the rest of Europe, where they toured in 1989 as the headlining act.

They were asked to play at a prestigious "Softcore Explosion" as a part of the 10th Anniversary of New Music America hosted by the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

"That was a freaky night," guitarist Tommy Victor said of the experience. "It was a weird crowd of pseudo-art intellectual type people, who'd probably just come from listening to Philip Glass at home, sitting there with their chins in their hands. I don't know who recommended us."

This spring marked their major label debut with the release of Beg to Differ on Epic. Victor wrote most of the songs as well as performed vocal duties, with bassist Kirkland taking over on his own tunes, "Steady Decline" and "Your Fear."

MTV was so impressed by the release that they decided to take a grungy guitar sample from the song "Lost and Found" and use it for a Headbanger's Ball identification. It is played often, making them the most exposed group on the Headbanger's Ball, which is a dubious distinction indeed.

Pantera, an aggressive and noisy quartet with a clean groove, was formed in 1983 by guitarist Diamond Darrell, his brother and drummer Vinnie and bassist Rex. After three successful independent releases, they found vocalist Phil Anselmo, who is described as a psychotic patient on acid.

They released their major label debut Cowboys from Hell on Atco this summer. It was produced by Terry Date, who has also been at the production helm for such metal heavyweights as Soundgarden, Metal Church and Overkill.

Vocalist Phil Anselmo best described the band in a recent interview with Metal Mania Magazine, when he said, "We're not a thrash band, and we're not run-of-the-mill heavy metal by any means. We always say we're not thrash, and there's nothing wrong with thrash if it's done correctly, it's just that there's tens of thousands of thrash bands today."

Mind Over 4, a Los Angeles quartet that offers a psycho-imaginative, metallic sound, started their long, hard road to recognition in 1982. They produced, manufactured and distributed their first releases by themselves.

Triple X Records helped them release Out Here in 1987 which was followed by a self-titled album on the German label, Destiny. The Goddess, their recent release on Caroline, was greeted with critical acclaim, a welcome achievement.

The group, comprised of vocalist Spike Xavier, guitarist Mike Jensen, bassist Rich Castillo and drummer Mark Fullerton, incorporates their diverse musical tastes to come up with their own unique sound.

"The more varied the musical tastes the more influences we had to choose from and be affected by," vocalist Spike Xavier in a recent interview with Faces.

Prong, Pantera and Mind Over 4 will play Katina's in Hadley. Doors open at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 for those 21-and-over and $8 for those under 21.

LOOK INTO MY EYES — President Bush looks for a reporter in The White House briefing room yesterday. He has ordered a new wave of troops into the Persian Gulf.

Bush orders new round of troops to Persian Gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush yesterday ordered a new round of troop deployments to the Persian Gulf. Pentagon sources put the deployment in the area of 100,000, a substantial addition to U.S. troop strength of 230,000 in the region. Allies from 26 countries have another 70,000 forces in the area.

"Iraq's brutality, aggression and violation of international law cannot be permitted to succeed," Bush said, referring to the "dismantling of Kuwait" by Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion and subsequent "brutality" against its citizens.

"I find it hard to believe that today, Nov. 8, that he [Iraqi President Saddam Hussein] does not understand that he's up against a determined, unprecedented alliance..."

"When he surveys the force that's there...he will recognize that he is up against just a foe that he can't possibly manage militarily," Bush said.

The Marine Corps said yesterday it ordered another 90 combat reservists to active duty for deployment in Operation Desert Sheild. That brought to 723 the number of Marine combat reserves put on active duty this week.

The Marines are the first service to activate combat reserves for the Persian Gulf crisis.

Also today the Air Force said it planned to order to active duty 265 doctors, dentists, and other medical specialists who are members of the Air Force Reserve.

The Army also was expected to announce new call-ups of support forces from reserve units.

Speakers address presence of U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Correspondent

Five speakers addressed 100 people last night, discussing a range of topics relating to the growing military presence of U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia.

The panel discussion was organized by the UMass Ad Hoc Coalition on the Mid-East Crisis.

Fatima Zaidame focused on the situation in the Arab world, and shared her view on U.S. foreign policy.

She discussed the chaotic changes in this policy, seemingly to suit current needs, and interpreted the U.S. reaction against Hussein as an attempt to control oil prices.

Professor William Strickland of the Afro-American Studies department pointed to the change in rationale by the U.S. government.

He said the United States originally claimed to enter the region to preserve fossil fuels, and it was only when "blood was connected with oil" did the government change its justification.

Strickland deemed a military action unconstitutional, and blamed Congress for allowing the executive branch to acquire its new powers, dating as far back as the Korean War.

He was also angry the U.S. military presence might change the attitudes and customs of the people living there.

Dan Jacobson, of MASSPIRG argued lobby groups supported by oil companies help to shape policy in Washington D.C., and those companies give a biased opinion on energy conservation.

"Although an important step," he said, "energy conservation puts the blame on us."

Instead of making consumers worry about leaving lights on, other energy sources should be looked into, such as wind and solar power, two options which the oil companies are against.

Jacobson provided evidence, including a California solar plant which in 1994 will meet all energy needs of San Francisco.

Research into alternative energy sources, he claimed, was cut by 71 percent during the Reagan years.

Steven Sosserman of Westfield State College closed the teach-in by outlining eight lessons and new tactics learned by the army in Vietnam, which he believed would be used in Iraq.

Sosserman said the use of extreme violence and manipulation of the press were important.

Other tactics, Sosserman said, included the devastation of the enemy, avoidence of the middle class, as well as leaving the lower class and minorities to fight.

He is a member of a veteran organization opposed to military action.

Program faces termination

Students ask administration fix incorrect data

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Students in the Staff Development Program in the School of Education are requesting administrators make corrections to data collected about their program they say puts their program in danger of termination.

In a letter mailed to administrators last week, students said the decision to possibly terminate the program was based on faulty information and should be corrected in the original report, which was released to the Faculty Senate last month.

The Staff Development program was one of four programs slated for termination last month along with the reduction of ten other departments in an effort to offset continuing budget cuts at the University.

According to the letter, the Annual Faculty Reports found that "[Staff Development] is virtually the least productive on campus, with 57 percent of the faculty having published nothing in the past six years. The average annual productivity is .39 [percent] for the whole department."

Students in the program claim this information is incorrect. They stated the annual productivity of the department is .69 percent, not .39, and 20 percent of the faculty have had nothing published in the past six years, not 57 percent.

The letter also stated that 72 of 80 academic units in the University have faculty with zero publications for the Man urinates on door at Mount Holyoke College

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
and KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Five Black students at Mount Holyoke College reported Sunday a man urinated on the door of two women and neighbors have refused to cooperate in the investigation.

According to Danique Day, who was in the Mead Hall room at the time of the incident, when the two women tried to talk to other residents of their floor, some reacted nonchalantly, and others slammed doors in their faces.

"I'm really disappointed with the apathy with which the incident was met by the other dorm members," she said.

The man involved was apparently a guest of the neighbors of the two students.

Angela Hull, one of the residents of the room, said she discovered one of the neighbors told the head resident, "The people on my floor can understand why doors are closed in the faces of those two girls because those two girls and all Blacks in Mead are separatists." She and her roommate, the only Blacks living on the floor, are two of only nine in Mead.

Hull also said when a special dorm meeting was called by Mary Terry, director of the Department of Residential Life, and Associate Dean of Students Kate Fahey, one student, who was White, said "we're tired of this minority thing."

The College's spokesperson, Nancy Fletcher, said an initial investigation con-

Students in the program have charged administrators with discrimination, claiming administrators targeted the program specifically. Almost 50 percent of the program's 202 graduate students are Black.

Graduate student Evon Walters said in addition to the high minority rate of students, over 50 percent of the tenured faculty in the program are Black as well.

Administrators have denied the charge of discrimination. Provost O'Brien was unavailable for comment on the letter.

Parties swap Senate roles

BOSTON (AP) — Under the new GOP leadership, Democrats will play the role of administrative critics in a switch from recent years, Senate president William Bulger said.

"We have this situation where the Democrats are fewer in number, and they'll be, I think, more like their old selves," Bulger said Thursday.

In the past, the role of critic has been left to the Republicans, who had a minority in both the House and the Senate. Although the Republicans are still the minority party in the Legislature, they now not only have the governor's seat, but more than the 14 seats required in the Senate to sustain Gov.-elect's William Weld's veto.

The Republicans will also have to get used to a new role.

"What does the critic do now? He suddenly is the person who must bear up under the scrutiny and the criticism," said Bulger.

Bulger said Democrats became used to allowing the Republicans to criticize their policies without feeling a response was always required. That will change, he predicted.

"This will be a healthy thing," said Bulger (D-Boston).

Meanwhile, the Republicans continued to celebrate their victories, including the election of 16 GOP candidates to the state Senate.

"What happened two days ago represents the biggest face lift on Beacon Hill in recent memory," said Senate Minority Leader David Locke (R-Sherborn).

Locke put in an early pitch to try and unseat Bulger as Senate president, saying that if he were elected president of the Senate, he would allow television cameras into the Senate chambers during debates and that he would end the practice of all night sessions.

"I say nothing critical about the Senate president, but I do have a vision of how the Massachusetts Senate would operate if I were to be its president," Locke said.

The 40 members of the Senate elect their own president.

Republican Party Chairman Ray Shamie said the rise of the Republican Party would be healthy for the state. "You're going to see some very robust debates," Shamie said.

Shamie also sounded a note of reconciliation. "I think now we can usher in a new era of cooperation that will bring about the best in all," Shamie said.

Duffey claims budget cuts may paralyze University

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Staff

President-Chancellor Duffey talked about a university in "suspended animation" yesterday at a Faculty Senate meeting.

Duffey spoke about the possibility of a paralyzed University of Massachusetts with no purchases, no traveling and no telephone calls, as a result of severe budget cutbacks.

He also said there is another option of immediate "substantial layoffs," referring to the path another state university is following. Instead, the University is pursuing a program which will eliminate 10 academic programs by June.

The proposed retrenchment schedule for the Amherst campus for the next two fiscal years will reduce $1.92 million in the next fiscal year, and approximately $885,000 the following year.

The anticipated retrenchment is being undertaken in an effort to meet the $16.6 million UMass budget.

A five-day retrenchment will be imposed on Nov. 23 and Dec. 24-28, 1990. The administration chose those dates because they present "the least disruptive method of accomplishing our required spending reduction."

This retrenchment will affect all the bargaining unit members with the exception of those whose salaries during that period are derived in full from grant or contracts.

The administration also announced plans for a retrenchment of indefinite duration that will be put in effect on June 29, 1991.

The second retrenchment will affect the bargaining unit members in the four programs which are slated for termination, except for the Social Issues Training Project in Organization Development (School of Education).

President of the Graduate Student Senate, Pierre Laliberte spoke about the 'discriminatory effects' the proposed departmental cuts will have on the Afro-American graduate student population.

Referring to the University's announcement it planned to cut 10 programs, including Staff Development, Organization Development (both from the School of Education), Professional Preparation in Physical Education (School of Physical Education), and Community Health Education (School of Public Health), Laliberte said, "66 Afro-American students will be affected if the staff development and the organizational development programs are cut."

The faculty senator from education expressed her anger graduate students in the School of Education were not counted in determining the importance of the department. The way the education program is structured, it is important to have more graduate students in education than undergraduates.

BOG: whether to pledge or not to pledge

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

Whether or not to pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States at the beginning of each Board of Governors meeting took up 45 minutes of last night's session.

Governor Ted Maravelias proposed a voluntary Pledge of Allegiance be said at the start of each BOG meeting.

Debate arose when Governor Michelle Joseph asked if other nationality allegiances could also be recognized at each meeting.

"I do not believe in a pluralistic body. We should pledge allegiance to one country only," was Maravelias' response to Joseph's question.

Governor Guy Glodis told the body he not only disagreed with allowing other national pledges be said at each session, but concluded the American Pledge of Allegiance should be mandatory at each meeting.

The board voted against a mandatory Pledge of Allegiance, but did continue debating what, if any, pledge should be said.

Maravelias argued the Pledge of Allegiance is said in schools, at sporting events, and at official state meetings.

The meeting digressed to the point where it was suggested a globe be brought into the room and everyone pledge allegiance to the world.

In other BOG happenings:

- The board approved a motion put forth by Governor Abigail Glodis which would increase the number of Stockbridge Governors from one to two. The Stockbridge Governors are appointed seats.

SGA senator files complaint with DA

By KENDRA PRATT

and LARS KROIJER
Collegian Correspondent

A Student Government senator filed a complaint last week against an SGA officer and a University of Massachusetts administrator claiming he was illegally blocked from attending an SGA planning session.

Senator Jeff Turco filed the complaint in the Northampton District Attorney's Office against SGA treasurer Karen Talbot and Dr. Irene Carew, director of the Students Activities Office, claiming his obstruction from the Oct. 26 Student Activities Planning Committee meeting was in violation of the state opening meeting laws.

Dr. Carew said SAO staff members had told Turco before the meeting at the front office of SAO that the meeting was closed and that Talbot was not involved in the decision to deny student senators' access to the meeting.

"Some students do not feel that they hear what is going on at the SPC meetings," Dr. Carew said. "We would like to tell them other than them sitting in on the meetings."

She said the SPC, which is composed of SAO staff and various representatives of student groups who use the SATF fund, makes recommendations about the use of the fund to be approved by the student senate.

She said the SPC is not a legal governing body and therefore would not have to comply with the open meeting law. She said the SGA senate is also not a legal governing body, according to a 1988 decision by the Northampton District Attorney's office. The segment of the

Focus on Liberian atrocities

By MAURA CANAVAN
Collegian Correspondent

"Efforts are needed to bring relief to one of the worst cases of man's inhumanity to man," said speaker Dr. Emmett Dennis in last night's lecture on the current situation in Liberia, West Africa.

Dennis, a Liberian and professor at Rutgers University, is the chairman of The Liberation Coalition for Relief, Resettlement and Reconstruction. He spoke about the terrible atrocities that have been occurring since 1980, when the oppressive regime of Samuel Doe came to power.

Declaring independence in 1847, Liberia was a unique formation, composed of slaves from the southern United States and a wide diversity of tribes, Dennis said.

In 1980, there was a coup d'etat under the leadership of Samuel Doe.

Later hailed as an "architect of Liberian misery," Doe began extensive killings Dennis said.

In just one instance, a crowd of 600 innocent civilians seeking refuge in a church were shot as they slept by soldiers who broke in.

"People were being thrown out of their homes and killed," Dennis said. "Many Liberians had to flee their country."

Charles Taylor and the National Patriotic Liberian Front launched an insurgency against Doe's regime on Dec. 24, 1989. Currently, Taylor has declared himself president.

"There is great human suffering in Liberia," Dennis said.

With a population of 2.5 million people, Liberia now has a total of 1.54 refugees.

"There is an anticipated exacerbation of diseases in war torn Liberia," Dennis said. "They have killed so much that human value is lost."

James Butty, a prominent Liberian journalist and consultant to several Liberian relief organizations also spoke last night.

"The U.S., despite all its interests, has adopted a hands-off police to the plight of the Liberian people," Butty said.

Both Dennis and Butty ask for public support in donations as well as pressure on the government to pass the New Safe Haven Bill for Liberia.

Dennis said that amongst this struggle to survive, "Liberia is left with skulls in fields and corpses in churches."

SGA

Massachusetts opening meeting laws in question concerns public access to meetings of governing bodies.

The SPC meeting are usually closed so that the members can research the use of the fund and work on on-going problems, she said.

Turco said the Assistant District Attorney Steven Samelawicc forwarded a letter to Carew and Talbot asking for further information in response to the complaint.

Dr. Carew said she has sent the SPC's charter and a memo to the Attorney General's Office "to remind the D.A.'s office of their 1988 decision."

Turco said he wished to attend the meeting because of drastic incidents in the previous week concerning a SPC budget exercise which recommended that area governments, the Greek area and the Board of Governors be funded by other means than the SATF.

The budget exercise has created conflicts between the SGA officers, the senate body and the organizations targeted for restructuring. Carew said the exercise was only a hypothetical plan for restructuring sent to Madson at the request of the President-Chancellor, but student government needs to be reformed in case their use of the SATF is reduced because of the current budget crisis.

Turco said the budget exercise appeared to have been written by an SGA committee when only members of the SAO and the SGA leadership actually wrote the exercise. He said the budget exercise has the potential to mislead Madson about the goals of SGA since there was little student input involved.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Don't worry, be creative!

It seems a conversation or business transaction at the University cannot occur without mention of budgetary woes. This is certainly understandable since students, faculty, and staff are justifiably worried about the stability of their departments. The impact of the budget, however, is affecting our health as well as our financial reports. It is creating a magnified level of stress which can be felt campus-wide.

Myra Edelstein

Despite this fiscal crisis, we have work which must be completed. There are classes to attend, dissertations to write, departments to operate, meals to serve, etc. In other words, business as usual...with more stress than usual.

If you've been feeling unfocused frustration living and working on this campus, you might try some of the following suggestions for stress management and positive constructive action.

1. Use your time wisely. Plan, concentrate, take planned breaks, avoid clutter, work effectively and efficiently, cooperate and collaborate.

2. Remember that perfectionism can lead to procrastination which can lead to paralysis. When you're faced with a task which is seemingly overwhelming, just start a small piece of it. Set an achievable goal and begin. Sometimes, just getting started is all it takes to complete a big project.

3. A smile can go a long way. It reduces stress and it's free.

4. Recognize the person, place, thing, or event which causes you stress and modify how this stressor affects you. Realize what you have control over, set a goal, and make a change. If you can't change or eliminate the stressor, then focus on changing your perception or attitude. Look for creative and alternative solutions. Explore ways to compromise. Be flexible.

5. Breathe deeply and exhale completely — it helps clear your mind and your body. Deep breathing is refreshing and rejuvenating. It's relaxing. And it's free.

6. Reduce the impact of the symptoms of stress by eating healthy meals, exercising, getting a good night's sleep, and seeking support from others.

7. Plan time for recreation. There are two kinds of recreation: "re-creation" and "wreck-reation." Choose activities which help re-create your being and your soul. Need some examples? Re-creation might be a hike up Skinner mountain, a walk through one of the many Amherst conservation areas, a picnic at Look Park, a softball game with floormates, etc. (These are free, and they're all on the bus route!) Wreck-reation is abusing drugs or alcohol, driving while intoxicated, hurting yourself or someone else, vandalising property, or harrassing another person.

8. Life is precious. Create a little bliss in your life each day. Make the most out of each moment. Be proud of all of your little accomplishments as well as your grand ones. And remember that we've all achieved some of each!

9. Do what you value and value what you do. Allow your actions to reflect your thoughts and feelings. Try your hardest. Do your best work. Be proud of who you are.

10. We are all in this together. Try not to lose your cool — it raises everyone's stress — and it won't help you win friends! Remember that misery, anger, and hostility are only options. Kindness, sincerity, and respect in our conversations and requests can alleviate stress. Don't blame the folks in the Financial Aid Office for the budget crisis, and don't blame the elevating costs of books and materials on an innocent cashier! If you approach someone poised for a fight, you'll probably find one! But, if you approach someone with congeniality, friendliness, or compassion you'll make their day a little nicer, and you'll reduce your own stress at the same time.

Try it — it won't cost you or the University a penny!

"THE DEMOCRATS DID IT!"

Power plant workers are short circuited by out of staters

Day after day we read in the newspapers how the State of Massachusetts is in serious financial difficulty. State workers are being laid off threatened with furloughs, and losing benefits.

Academic programs are being cut and tuition is being increased. Everyone is screaming for budget cuts. Yet, ironically, in these times of great financial turmoil, vast amounts of your hard-earned tax dollars are being spent at a the UMass Power Plant to employ an outside contractor from the State of New York to take potential jobs away from Massacusetts State workers.

Is this really necessary? You decide:

1. The University has told taxpayers the payroll has been reduced and a hiring freeze has been imposed, when in fact this is not true.

In July of 1990 the University used a special account, number three and contracted with a New York service contractor for six operators and a plant manager, thus creating another tier of management.

Who's paying for these new positions that we supposedly cannot afford? Who pays?

2. State employees have not had a pay raise in three years, however in just three short months money has been found to negotiate a three-year contract at $439,000 per year with an outside firm.

These alien employees are being paid a higher rate than State employees. They are receiving 55 percent of salary for the benefits as compared to the State employees 20 percent. They are also entitles to free parking, free uniforms and a guaranteed annual pay increase.

Antonio Malaquias

On top of all this, this outside service contractor is receiving a 6 percent profit margin plus overhead costs, plus 6 percent more on any subcontractor fees. Who pays?

3. This New York state contractor was allowed to be the only bidder on a contract for future available positions at the UMass power plant, thus reducing all possibilities of promotion and advancement for State employees who have been waiting years for an opportunity.

Several employees have already been forced out of their jobs. If there is no career ladder evident, how many more will be forced to go elsewhere? Who pays?

4. Day after day State employees are told there is no money available for supplies or tools. This imposes a possible safety hazard for the workers and contributes to the overall deterioration of the plant.

Yet, bearing all this in mind, the University has just installed a $22 million phone system along with another special line at the request of the contractor for its' brand new computer. Who inevitably pays?

Surely this was not a very economical or ethical decision. It did not take into consideration the 25 plus loyal State employees already employed at the UMass power plant or the apparent economic decline of the State.

This is an outrage! Where is all of this extra money coming from? And why has the State chosen to overcompensate employees from a New York State service contractor as opposed to justly compensating their own? If the state can afford to bring in new contractors why are employees being laid off? Why are students paying more for their education?

Is there really a budget deficit and if so, why are our hard-earned tax dollars being used to force workers out of their jobs at the UMass Power Plant?

If anything is to be done, we must stand together to ban these outsiders from out campus and give the jobs back to state employees.

Where is this money coming from? It won't be in my pay! Who pays?

You and I do!

Where have you gone, Joe DiMaggio?

Thirty or 40 years ago, when this nation was still in its "heyday," we were a country of heroes. In fact, I dare say that it was a lot easier to be a hero then than now.

The people we looked up to were astronauts who walked on the moon, baseball players who were setting new home run records, and doctors who were finding new cures and vaccines.

The United States in the first half of this century was almost a breeding ground for such people: explorers, adventurers, athletes, people who saw the task before them and gave everything of themselves to see it through to its successful completion. Even the President was a hero in those days.

But now, all our heroes are gone.

Role models have become extinct. The people who put the first lunar lander on the moon can't build a telescope with mirrors that work. Our sports heroes are overpaid, undertalented, and spend more time making headlines with their off-the-playing-field antics, such as drug use, than with their athletic performance.

Now most of our medical professionals seem too concerned about paying off their new Mercedes, and avoiding malpractice suits by their counterparts, the lawyers, who instead of upholding a system of fair and equal justice, have chosen to make their livings off lawsuits and ambulance chasing.

Steven Schwankert

Worst of all is the decline of leadership in this country.

When people like Roosevelt, Eisenhower, and Kennedy occupied the Oval Office, everyone took notice if they were on radio or television.

Not only were they U.S. leaders, but much of the world looked to these men. If there was an international crisis, the President was usually only one of two or three men in the world who would decide the outcome.

Many wonder why voters are apathetic. Maybe it's because we don't choose our leaders any more, we just elect politicians.

Bush or Dukakis? That's not a choice, that's punishment.

No one should ever follow a leader blindly, but it would be nice to think that if we were sending U.S. troops to a crisis abroad, that we might be inclined to believe the President, and to think that he or she knows what's best.

When our country was first founded, it must have really been something to know that the nation's leader was one of those that led the revolution, that staked his own life on his beliefs.

I wonder what George Washington would have said if he saw that one of the reasons the people supported the current President is fear of the Vice President taking office.

Our parents grew up in the age of actions and deeds, when people literally took their displeasure to the street. What do we do when we're sick and tired of it all?

We wait for it to come out on video.

Phone follies

A friend of mine is participating in the AT and T Collegiate Investment Challenge, which is obviously sponsored by the company for which it is named. To find out his ranking in the contest, he was given a 900 number to call. Simple enough, right?

Wrong. When UMass ordered our phone service through AT and T, they specified that no 900 numbers could be placed from our phones. We are expected to pay for all the charges made on our phones, and we even have a University-imposed credit limit. Yet, for some reason, UMass decided that charges made to a 900 number were going to go unpaid more easily than any other kind of charge.

Fine. So, he decided to try and circumvent this rule by charging the call to his AT and T Calling Card. You can't place a 900 number on your Calling Card either.

If we are expected to pay for our individual ACUS accounts, like adults, and can even have legal actions brought against us for failing to do so, like adults, why are we not being treated like adults in deciding how we would like to spend our money?

If you live on campus and are trapped into using the ACUS service provided by the Telecommunications Office in Whitmore, you you should still be treated with the respect and "regular" customer would receive, and this includes the freedom to be able to find out how close you are to winning that trip to the Bahamas.

Wynton Marsalis: much form, little substance

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Wynton Marsalis
Iron Horse
Tuesday, Nov. 6

If Wynton Marsalis were not the object of such massive media hype, I would probably have considered his septet's performance to be a pleasant, entertaining evening. However, given that so many people consider Marsalis to be the most important jazz musician to come along in decades, it was disappointing.

As the set began, I realized that Marsalis has been in the public eye as a "young lion" for 10 years. Ten years. Even though he's still under 30, that would seem to exclude him from the "young" category and to render him accountable for some signs of maturity and growth.

The good news is that Marsalis has definitely matured. In particular, he no longer takes himself so insufferably seriously. Instead, he exudes a warm, good-humored stage personality that also shows up in his trumpet playing. He even gave a ballad performance ("If I Should Lose You") that was more soulful than I would have believed possible a few years ago. And, of course, he exerted total technical control over his instrument.

However, the rest of the show rarely surpassed the level of competent, congenial entertainment. Yes, it was well-played, tastefully programmed and thoroughly professional — but with a superficiality that left me cold. The spark of excitement and adventure that characterizes the best jazz was missing.

The musicians called up elements of the earlier points in the jazz tradition as if selecting records to put on the stereo. Every growl, slide and smear from Marsalis and trombonist Wycliffe Gordon seemed calculated; Marsalis' constant references to Louis Armstrong were overly willful; each Dixieland-style collective improvisation seemed like pure pastiche. The band certainly did swing, but in a rigid way. The only constructive use of these traditional references was in an eclectic arrangement of Charlie Parker's "Chasin' the Bird," which effectively superimposed Parker's bebop onto the older New Orleans style.

Another interesting moment was tenor saxophonist Todd Williams' multi-sectioned composition, "Fun Suite." The writing and arranging really made good use of the seven-piece instrumentation, and the voicing and shifting motifs recalled Duke Ellington via Charles Mingus. However, the rhythms and solos were — again — unduly constrained.

Williams actually proved to be the most substantial soloist of the evening. He exhibited the most personal vocabulary of tone colors and melodies and a taut, stripped-down style that (like many young tenor players) owed something to Wayne Shorter. Yet on an untitled blues tune late in the set, he affected the gruff, heavy tone of Coleman Hawkins, and showed himself to be a convincing blues player. Watch this kid. Now that he has the exposure from being in Marsalis' band, he should go solo. Like everyone else in the band, all he needs to do is loosen up and distance himself from all of those conservatory lessons.

Pianist Eric Reid offered a new look at Thelonious Monk: the harmonic idiosyncracies without the rhythmic idiosyncracies. Interesting but no big deal. Alto player Wes Anderson's pedestrian contributions were the least ear-grabbing of all.

The band finished their set with a short Monk medley and returned for an encore. Marsalis explained that the untitled piece was addressed to those who think that he only knows about "old jazz," saying that it was "the piece we play when we're angry." That tantalizing introduction led into a decidedly modern tune — a harmonically advanced, slow-burn minor/modal blues featuring some Asian-tinged soloing from trombonist Gordon and some unorthodox effects from bassist Reginald Veal and drummer Herlin Riley. But once again it was all form and little substance, causing me only to raise an eyebrow or two.

Cafe is a return to the 50s

By DOUG JOHNSTON
Collegian Staff

Beat Cafe
Hampden Theatre
Wednesday, Nov. 7

What do you think of when you think of the 1950s? Gray Flannel suits? Spam and conformity? How about post-war prominence and hair grease? No way. The 50s spawned the Beat Generation. Wednesday night in Southwest Residential Area's Hampden Theatre recreated the intimate 50s Beatnik coffee-house atmosphere in this season's final Beat Cafe.

Hampden was three-fourths full; the ambiance was relaxed and contemplative.

The show opened with a piece of performance art by Amy Ford entitled "Woman in a White Dress Laughing." Ford describes herself as "one who reflects on conditions around her and expresses it through spoken work, song and visual imagery."

"Woman in a White Dress Laughing" weaved song, definitions of words, poetry and autobiographical prose to express the message of censorship of women by themselves and others. Through the description of the off-screen lives of Marilyn Monroe, Meryl Streep and Madonna, Ford emphasized the need for all women to discover their own "voice" and be heard. Ford's own inner, liberated, uncensored voice resounded with effectiveness; her message was heard by all.

Andrew Schriver was next with a pair of his own self-styled folk songs called "English Major" and "Vagabond." His humorous, radiant quality and driving acoustic guitar made the audience laugh and cheer.

So where were the poets? They were next, starting with the slow, sarcastic voice of Brett Ralph, a graduate student at the University. Ralph's somewhat malevolent, almost sadistic style, provided the audience with some insight to the more dreary aspects of contemporary existence.

Following Ralph was music by Pat McCorkyl. McCorkyl's music was primarily acoustic with his rendition of the Beatles' "Get Back" and some classic Yes. McCorkyl's playing flowed and fluctuated, and was at times intense and at times soothing.

REVIEW

Brian Foye, founder of the non-profit Corporation for the Celebration of Jack Kerouac In Lowell, read some of his own poetry and prose. Foye's Boston accent coupled with his relaxed manner reproduced the Beatnik aura. The audience was responsive to his work. Foye's prose had an air of conjecture about the things most people take for granted in life. Truly "beat."

Next up was Frank Johnson, who is also a graduate student at UMass. Passionate, yet calm, Johnson read his sometimes sardonic, sometimes dramatic poems. His verses were piquant and had a lyrical quality to them that the crowd picked up on and followed.

The final act was the guitar ensemble led by Carlos Bermuda of the UMass Music Department. The jazz served as a nightcap for the cafe. An interesting rapport was established between the four guitars and drummer, breaking from the traditional triangle and exploring the chord interplay of stringed instruments.

Mime troupe acts out a message of peace in Seeing Double

By MELISA CANLI
Collegian Correspondent

I've always pictured "mimes" as people performing in silence, most likely wearing white masks. The San Francisco Mime Troupe changed all my pre-conceived notions, however. They had a loud and highly entertaining band whose members often became part of the actual show, and every single one of them sang and never ceased to speak.

The troupe, who has been performing in the parks of San Francisco and around the world for over 25 years, addressed the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in their Middle-Eastern comedy, Seeing Double with plenty of humor, honesty and hope for change.

The comedy centers around two families: the Jewish Goldberg family and the Palestinian Razali family, both living in San Francisco. Both families have stereotypical members — some very patriotic, some Americanized teenagers. The central event is the voyage to Israel/Palestine made by the only son in each family, incidentally played by the same actor.

Salim Razali is a hip guy with headphones tuned to Metallica at high volume, a member of a band ready to "cut an album," and much more interested in borrowing dad's van than in his Palestinian liberation ideas. He is forced by his relatives to take the deed to the house his family owns in Israel to prevent the Israeli government from taking it over.

David Goldberg is a very religious young man who has spent hours on his computer deciphering the "hidden meaning" in the Bible to prove that Palestinian land belongs to Israel. Despite his family's desperate pleas not to go to Israel, David undertakes the journey. The plot thickens on the plane as the two men are traveling. Their briefcases get mixed up and the plane crashes, leaving the two as survivors. Somehow, David ends up with the deed and Moussa Razali, Salim's uncle who takes him to the West Bank. Salim, on the other hand, with Biblical proof that his family's house should be Israeli property, finds himself on a kibbutz with Moshe Goldberg, David's third cousin.

The troupe does a fantastic job with the second part of the show. They depict both sides for the story and almost finish without a bias for one country or the other (only a request for the joining of all peoples for peace). Salim and David begin to feel some kinship toward one another's family and when the time comes that settlers enter the picture and the Razali household is supposed to be blown up, things come to a head.

An Israeli soldier refuses to take orders, the Palestinian women continue with the Intifada, Moshe questions his government and David claims Judaism preaches peace not war. Amidst the fighting and the chaos, the explosive accidentally goes off and the Razali house is blown to bits. The next scene flashes back to San Francisco with the mothers of Salim and David hearing the news on television that one American student was killed in an explosion and another seriously wounded. We never find out who the dead one is, only one man stumbles from backstage, he has David's glasses and Salim's drumsticks in his hand along with a message to mankind.

The message is the one Arthur Golden, the actor who plays Moshe Goldberg, tried to drive home after the performance.

Golden commented on how miserably American foreign policy has attempted to correct the situation in the Middle East. He lamented about the tense atmosphere the troupe had witnessed when they performed in Israel this summer. He said the two necessary actions needed were to recognize the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people but also provide a guarantee for an Israeli state to the Israeli people.

Maybe if we band together like this troupe we could find a solution to a problem that has been festering for years. As one character finally spits out, "Maybe, just maybe somewhere we could find a compromise."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A sibling's or close friend's marital problems may occupy your thoughts. Avoid offering her too much advice. You hear fascinating news about a former lover. Take things nice and easy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A relative who drops in unexpectedly could be doing a bit of snooping for others. You are quite right to feel suspicious. Do not reveal anything if you can help it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your sometimes astonishing creative abilities come to the fore. You may begin a novel, a painting or a poem – or just decorate your home with style. Pull romance on hold for a while.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be careful when around strangers – especially older men. Teamwork is essential for rapid progress in business. What appears to be a disaster is a blessing in disguise! Take another look at your options.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Someone's jealousy could complicate things today. There is a chance that you could find yourself involved in a rather tricky triangle. Spend the evening with a good friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A small gamble may lead to a big return today. Be careful, however, not to risk money you cannot afford to lose. A burst of energy lets you accomplish a great deal this afternoon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Take time out to help a friend who is feeling confused or depressed. Put your own interests aside. Your strength and imagination are needed. A child's actions will delight you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Previous disappointments could lead you to ignore the virtues of someone who really cares for you. Be willing to listen. The past can be forgotten if you will only try. Open your heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Forming a partnership with an older person could be in your best interests. Discuss finances before launching a major venture. Immerse yourself in creative projects. Be affectionate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you feel somewhat restless, see if you can start your weekend a little early. A shopping trip will pick up your spirits, and so will a weekend away. Visit old friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You will do just fine in any kind of social situation today. Welcome a golden opportunity to mingle with new people. You could meet someone who re-awakens your interest in romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) The spotlight is on partnership and your ability to work well with others. You will not accomplish nearly as much on your own. Suggest a compromise if tempers flare. A good evening to relax at home.

Men XC to compete in IC4A

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's cross country team will compete in the IC4A Championship meet at New Canaan, Conn.

Coach Ken O'Brien said if his team has a good day, it will finish somewhere between 12th and 18th. One-hundred teams will participate; last year UMass finished 15th.

"I would be disappointed with a 20th place finish," O'Brien said. "I would also be very surprised if we finished in the top 10 teams in this meet.

"This year's team is a better team than we had last year, but the competition is also stronger all across the board," O'Brien said.

Providence and the University of Connecticut are expected to be the top two teams in the meet. William and Mary, Pittsburgh, Dartmouth and Boston University will also competed for the top spots.

"If we hope to be competitive in this meet, we need all five of our scorers to have a good day, or our top two or three runners to have a phenomenal run," O'Brien said.

"We have had some front running success this year with Jon (Corso) and Tom (Degnan). Also, Joe Milette finished sixth in this meet two years ago to qualify for the NCAA's, so there are possibilities.

This will be the last collegiate cross country meet for four runners on the UMass squad. Seniors Jon Corso, Tom Degnan, Joe Milette and Gerry Squires will all be trying to finish up their careers for UMass with strong showings on Saturday.

"We are the second best team in New England, we should have more than one player on the first team," Yarworth said.

One Minuteman Yarworth said should have been recognized is Alex Yelansky.

Yelansky has scored 37 goals, including a last-second game-winner against Harvard, and had 12 assists.

As a team, however, the Minutemen have performed well enough to get themselves two wins away from the National Championships, and that's the most important thing, Yarworth said.

has been diagnosed as having a broken bone in his ankle and is out for Saturday's game.

"Dave is mature beyond his age, and he comes close to what we need in a quarterback right now in terms of skills," said coach Jim Reid.

However, the stars of the Richmond game were the UMass defense, now ranked No. 2 in the nation, and the offensive line, which keyed a 230-yard rushing attack. Freshman Eric Thimas rushed for 135 yards and two touchdowns.

"Nobody wins in this league with freshmen, but I could carry the ball behind some of the blocks those guys are getting," Reid said. "We're playing very good defense, and we're rushing the football well, so that means we have a chance to win."

Villanova will also start a freshman at quarterback, 6-foot-4 Brad Parpan.

Game notes: The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM. and WTTT 1430 AM.

Field hockey eeks out win in NCAA

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts and University of Connecticut field hockey teams battled one another tooth and nail, threw everything but the kitchen sink at each other, ran stride for stride, made save for save, matched shot for shot; and still, after 100 minutes, yesterday's NCAA first round Tournament game came down to penalty strokes.

It was not until the fifth and final UMass stroke that the Minutewomen put UConn away for good. UMass sophomore Kathy Phelan slipped one past goalie Megan Tiley that went off her stick and deflected into the back of the net giving UMass a 1-0 win (3-1 in penalty strokes).

"I knew they would give us all we could handle," said UMass coach Pam Hixon. "When it's one game, you tend to be a little tight."

"I feel that the team gave it their best performance," said UConn coach Nancy Stevens. "Our goal keeper in particular came up so big, and our sweeper stopped so many of their attacking plays. I felt that if we played really good defense we could get the shutout. I felt that it would probably go to strokes."

UMass forward Dawn Trumbauer took the first penalty stroke, and cleanly beat Tiley to the stick side. The goal gave UMass a 1-0 lead during the strokes.

"I didn't feel too much pressure," Trumbauer said. "After it went in, I was relieved that we were finally ahead."

UConn forward Patsy Rinehimer tried to tie the score but UMass goalie Philippa Scott made a pad save.

Next up for the Minutewomen was Kerri Fagan, who scored off the stick of Tiley to put UMass up 2-0. "I just wanted to get the ball in the net," Fagan said.

Colleen Carney scored the only goal for UConn during the penalty strokes. Carney hoisted one into the upper left corner that brought the Huskies within one, 2-1. But that was as close as UConn would come; Scott came up with two more saves, thwarting UConn's bid to upset UMass.

"I had confidence in all the strokers, and I knew all I had to do was do my job," Scott said. "Dawn's goal took a lot of pressure off of me. I was a bit nervous because I've been having trouble with penalty strokes, because I've been moving too early."

"During the strokes, their goal keeper came up with some very big saves," Stevens said. "They had many more opportunities to score than we did, but we did have one or two opportunities, and once again they have a fine goal keeper, and so do we, that's why the game went to strokes."

Each team had its chances to win in regulation. UMass forward Mara Frattasio came close to ending it in the second half when she split the defense and drove one on net that Tiley kicked away.

UConn had the game's best scoring opportunity in regulation. Forward Colleen Carney had only Scott to beat, with three other forwards open on the wing to pass to, but she elected to shoot and Scott made a pad save. For a moment it was as if the UMass defense disappeared. Carney was wide open.

"I was concerned that they would come in and play with a lot of emotion," Hixon said. "This was one of the most difficult games we've had to play because the intensity was there."

Next up for the Minutewomen in the quarterfinals is Old Dominion this Sunday in Virginia.

"I think ODU is the most balanced team that we've played," Hixon said. "We'll have to play exceptionally well to beat them."

Water polo at Easterns

By JOE DEGLORIA
Collegian correspondent

This weekend's Eastern Championship Tournament is the last obstacle for the University of Massachusetts water polo team to conquer if it is going to reach the National Championships at Long Beach, California.

UMass (15-7) took second at the New England Championships last weekend, earning the third seed at the Easterns. The first and second seeds are Brown and Navy.

The top two teams in the three-round event are assured an invitation to the National Championships at Long Beach.

UMass will face Harvard, which the Minutemen have beaten in two of three meetings this season, in the first round.

"We are really pumped up for this. I think we are playing our best polo and we are going to go all-out," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said.

"We will be favored, but they will be up for that game and we have to play our absolute best against them" Yarworth said.

The winner of the UMass-Harvard game will play the victor of the Navy-Arkansas matchup, which will most likely be Navy.

In other news from the UMass water polo camp, senior Jon Miller was named first team All-New England. Brian McCiver and Todd Larsen made the second team roster, and G.T. Ladd received honorable mention.

Miller has scored 64 goals and racked up 29 saves. This is his second consecutive year on the first team. McCiver scored 25 times and has 15 assists. Larsen has a 49 percent save ratio. Ladd has been the backbone of the strong UMass defense.

Minutemen face Villanova for YanCon crown

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Saturday's date with Villanova at McGuirk Alumni Stadium is the game of the season. Kickoff is 1 p.m.

Already the University of Massachusetts football team has played several games of the season. First came a tie at Holy Cross and a payback trouncing of Maine, two teams that had beat up on UMass in recent years. Then, three weeks ago, the Minutemen became the first team in school history to beat Delaware.

But this, in the words of senior safety Vaughn William, is "Title Week."

UMass, the No. 5 team in the country and 6-0 in the Yankee Conference, is already assured of at least a share of the title; three teams trail at 4-2, including Villanova, and with two games left in the regular season the Minutemen would could end the suspense this weekend with a win.

Villanova, however, is streaking. The Wildcats lost two of their first three Yankee Conference games, but have since won three straight, including a 10-7 decision over New Hampshire last Saturday.

A hard-hitting defense has keyed the surge; cornerback Orin Solomon had three interceptions last week against New Hampshire, as UNH was held to its lowest total offensive output of the season.

According the UMass Offensive Coordinator Bob McConnell the Wildcats blitz a lot normally, but will turn up the pressure a notch to try and rattle freshman quarterback Dave McGovern, who will start for UMass.

"A blitz is always a big play, and we tell our guys it's a big play for us," McConnell said.

McGovern showed the ability to scramble away from pressure in last week's 26-9 win at Richmond, where he came on for starter Tom Fasano in the second half. Fasano

Hoop teams open exhibition season tonight

• Minus McCoy, men face test from Soviets • Women entertain Czech challenge

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The USSR Trade Union Basketball team, off an 85-70 win at Penn State Wednesday, will scrimmage the University of Massachusetts tonight at the Cage (7:30 p.m.)

The Minutemen will be without junior guard Jim McCoy, the team's leading scorer and a first team All-Atlantic 10 selection, who is recovering from a serious viral infection. Also, Guard Anton Brown has a sore back and is questionable.

Several members of the Soviet squad, including center Victor Pankrashkin, were on the 1988 Soviet Olympic team that won the gold medal. Sergey Bobkov, a six-foot-six guard who notched eight three pointers in a loss to Temple last week, is billed as the second-best three point shooter in the Soviet Union.

The Soviets play a typically fast-paced international style, with an emphasis on pushing the ball quickly up the court and shooting three pointers.

UMass coach John Calipari said he is focusing his attention on improving his own team.

"I'll be looking at our intensity and competitiveness. We've been battling against ourselves pretty good, but now it's a question of whether we'll compete against another team," Calipari said.

"That will tell the tale of what kind of team this is going to be. Not if we win or lose this game, but whether we'll go out and fight like heck to try and beat them."

Game Notes: A valid student ID is your ticket into the Cage...Calipari said he has not decided if 7-foot-2 freshman Jeff Meyer will sit-out this season. "If you see him out there [tonight], then you'll know my decision," Calipari said.

University of Massachusetts women's basketball coach Kathy Hewelt is hoping for two things for her team in tonight's exhibition against the Ruzomberok Sports Club of Czechoslovakia, (5:30 p.m. Curry Hicks Cage).

Number one is experience.

"We have a very young team, and this scrimmage provides our younger players with very valuable experience," Hewelt said. "This game should be a good reality check for us."

Number two, according to Hewelt, is that the Minutewomen "...play hard, get our transition game going, and have some fun with it."

Little is known of Ruzomberok, except that they are "very, very good," Hewelt said. Hewelt cited guard Iveta Bielikova and forwards Milena Razgova and Katarina Pavukova as Ruzomberok's main scoring threats.

For UMass, six players return from last year's 5-24 overall, 1-17 Atlantic 10 team. Center Keyburn McCusker, UMass' only senior and tallest player at 6-foot-2, is the team's leading returnee in points-per-game, rebounds-per-game, assists, and field goal percentage.

Hewelt is hopeful that Trish Riely and Jenny Moran, who were both redshirted last year, can come back strong this year. She is also hoping that this year's recruiting class can step up to the challenge of rebuilding the program, though "it's still too early to tell who'll step in," Hewelt said.

Hewelt did not announce who would start tonight for UMass.

Iraq says it may attend proposed Arab summit

By JOCELYN NOVECK
The Associated Press

Iraq has said it might attend a proposed Arab summit aimed at avoiding war in the Persian Gulf, but only if the meeting also deals with the Arab-Israeli dispute.

King Hassan of Morocco proposed the emergency summit Sunday as a "last chance" for peace.

There were new signs, meanwhile, of cracks in the alliance against Iraq. Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak was quoted yesterday as saying that Egyptian soldiers will not enter Iraq even if U.S. and other troops attack.

He said his troops could, however, enter Kuwait as a peacekeeping force.

At the same time, the European community said it would urge Baghdad be consulted in advance on the agenda, that the timing and location be chosen so Saddam could attend, and that the agenda include not just the gulf crisis but all Middle East issues — including the Palestinian question.

The council, led by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, also suggested it would not allow certain topics to be discussed. It did not specify which ones.

"The proposed summit should not be part of efforts to prepare the political theater as a cover for American aggression against Iraq and the Arab nation," the statement said.

In Tunis, the Palestinian Liberation Organization issued a statement saying it agreed with King Hassan's initiative.

Saddam has long demanded that a solution to the crisis be linked to the Palestinian issue. He made the offer shortly after his Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

King Hassan suggested that the summit be held in Rabat, the Morrocan capital, in a week. But he said he would attend a summit wherever it might be held.

Morocco, outspoken among Arab nations in condemning the Iraqi invasion, has committed more than 1,200 soldiers to the U.S.-led multinational force based in Saudi Arabia.

In an interview with British television, Saddam again urged dialogue on the crisis and said he did not believe the world was united against him.

ROTC ends 24-hour vigil

American prisoners of war, MIAs honored

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Correspondent

Air Force ROTC cadets at the University of Massachusetts ended a 24-hour vigil Friday to honor American prisoners of war and those who are still missing in action.

Beginning at 4 p.m. on Thursday in front of Memorial Hall, more than 20 cadets from Arnold Air Society, a voluntary service organization affiliated with AFROTC, stood at attention outside the entrance of a tent pitched next to Memorial Hall.

A candlelight vigil was held at 7 p.m. inside the tent. Chaplain Charles Horvath, who teaches business ethics at the School of Management, spoke briefly.

AC panel discusses minority representation

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

A group of students, faculty and administrators at Amherst College said the college is not doing enough to attract minority students in a panel discussion.

In a discussion Sunday in Converse Hall, a panel of alumni and minority students told an audience of more than 50 that the school is lacking minority representation in faculty and staff.

According to one student organizer, out of the college's 175 faculty, six are black and of these, four are tenured.

Maravalyn DeCambre, president of the Black Student Union, said of the 1,596 students at Amherst College, 93 are Black, 147 are Asian and 107 are Latino.

She said the percentage of minority students at the the school has dropped from 8.5 percent in 1977-78 to 5.8 percent this year.

According to DeCambre, the Black Student Union is sponsoring Project R and R (recruitment and retention). The program has called on the administration to hire more Black faculty and staff, to increase tenure among the present minority faculty and to promote Blacks to higher positions in the administration.

The group is also requesting minority students appointed to a search committee to fill faculty positions at the school.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncy refuted charges of racism, but agreed the college needs to be more active in the area of minority student recruitment.

He defended administration decisions in hiring faculty, claiming there is a shortage minority faculty in the country.

"We're talking about the hottest competed for group in the country," he said.

Pouncy added that the school's budget is also a factor in increasing minority numbers at the college.

Many students at the forum said they have had to take the initiative to increase awareness at the college.

"Students are doing the work of the college [for equality]," said one student, who added that the work should be done by administrators and students working together.

Other students at the forum voiced the same concern. Some said without student effort, minority awareness would be ignored.

Students also voiced concern for starting more minority organizations on campus.

Minutemen slosh to Yankee Conference title with 3-0 win

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team won its third Yankee Conference title in five seasons Saturday as Marco Gabrielli's 24-yard field goal with less than a minute left in the first half edged the Minutemen past Villanova 3-0 at muddy McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

The win clinched the league title outright for the Minutemen (8-0-1, 7-0 in the Yankee Conference) and secured them a spot in the Division I-AA playoffs, which begin Nov. 24. The Minutemen will play for their first undefeated regular season since 1963 Saturday at New Hampshire.

Villanova (5-5, 4-3) had the ball at midfield with 20 seconds left, but two heaves from quarterback Brad Parpan fell incomplete and short of the end zone. UMass players rushed onto the field to celebrate in the three-inch thick mud as the final seconds of the game ran off the clock.

"Our entire football team has a lot of courage and guts," coach Jim Reid said. "These kids, these men, have worked real hard."

With both teams slowed to a crawl by the weather, Gabrielli's field goal was the play of the game. Ron Blauvelt handled the snap cleanly, and Gabrielli sloshed through two-and-a-half yards of mud to kick a low, straight drive through the goalposts.

"I found a little piece of grass and I told [Blauvelt] to try and get the ball on that spot," Gabrielli said.

"As soon as it went through I turned to the sideline and said 'that's it, those are the

Weld and Cellucci support gay rights

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

Governor-elect William Weld started his first week in office by affirming his commitment to gay civil rights.

Weld and Lieutenant Governor Paul Cellucci visited a new AIDS Hospice in Boston last week and reiterated their support for funding of AIDS research and education.

"Weld was opposed to the (Gay Civil Rights) bill when it was in the Legislature, but he wouldn't do anything to it as governor."
–Jay Carter, a UMass student

During his campaign, Weld made an effort to address concerns of the gay community. Although Weld was originally opposed to the Gay Civil Rights Law when he was United States Attorney General, after teaming up with Cellucci, a chief supporter of the law, Weld stated in his campaign that he was pro gay rights, and that he would oppose any move to appeal the law.

The Gay Civil Rights Law was passed in November 1989. Although there were right-wing efforts to bring the law to public referendum and thereby possibly appeal it, the case went to the courts and the state Supreme Court ruled that a referendum would be unconstitutional.

The law prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in the areas of credit, employment, housing and accomodations (which include hotels, restaurants, and public rooms). Massachusetts is the second state in the country, after Wisconsin, to ratify a Gay Civil Rights Law.

Weld also met with a group of leaders from the gay community during his campaign to exchange ideas and to let them know that his office would be accessible.

After the election results were in, many students breathed a sigh of relief. Jay Carter, a University of Massachusetts student, said that he voted for Weld because he knew that "Weld was opposed to the bill when it was in the legislature, but he wouldn't do anything to overturn it as governor."

Buzz Harris, a UMass student, said, "I was a student at Boston University when John Silber was president; he constantly said outrageously homiophobic things in public. I knew that Weld was relatively opposed [to the Gay Civil Rights Law], but I would have voted for almost anyone rather than Silber."

The Greater Boston Gay and Lesbian Alliance endorsed Weld and Cellucci during their campaign. Although the Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus did not endorse a candidate, Steven Twerney of the Caucus said after the election that Weld's efforts are a positive sign for the next four years.

Educational departments discuss proposed termination

• CHE faculty meet proposal with confusion

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

The University administration's proposed termination of the Community Health Education program, an integral part of the school of Public Health, has been met with confusion by this departments faculty.

"I am puzzled as to why this program is targeted for elimination," said Ted Chen, a professor in the CHE program. "The CHE program has achieved excellence in faculty research."

Chen cited the fact that the program's faculty members are currently involved in a $4 million cancer research project with the National Cancer Institute, with $1 million of that money which is overhead that goes to the University.

"Eliminating this program is not cost efficient," Chen said.

If the proposed termination goes through, the CHE program will be eliminated as of the fall 1991 semester.

According to Chen, the CHE program, besides being profitable to the University, is an important service for the community.

"This program is the action arm of Public Health. It reaches all parts of the community including school children, and the elderly," Chen said.

The CHE program educates the public about AIDS, drug addiction, environmental health problems and teenage pregnancy. It is concerned with teaching and promoting public health protection.

Chen believes CHE is being targeted for elimination because the administration used the undergraduate teaching criteria in its decision. Part of the University's criteria for cutting a department is the ratio of undergraduate students to faculty members, according to the administration.

The CHE program has a very low undergraduate student ratio, with only seven undergraduates per faculty member. Chen said the reason for this is the CHE, while having some undergraduate students, is primarily a graduate program.

The CHE program, whose students make up approximately one- third of the school of Public Health, has four faculty members, three of whom are tenured, 45 graduate students and 30 undergraduates.

Dr. George Cernaba, chairperson of the CHE program, said that if the proposed elimination goes through all the CHE faculty, including tenured faculty, will be terminated by the Fall semester of 1991.

• Professional Preparation Program angered

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

In the School of Education, the proposed elimination of the Professional Preparation Program comes as no surprise to Department Head Larry Locke, although he is angered by the University of Massachusetts administration's handling of the situation.

If the administration's proposal is approved, the program's six faculty, four of whom are tenured, will be fired as of September 1, 1991. The program graduates 15-20 undergraduates per year and presently has 11 doctoral students and 8 masters candidates enrolled in it.

Locke accused the administration of using data which "they and we know are false" in justifying his departments' termination.

He said that the administration's accusation that 40 percent of Professional Preparation Program faculty is not "engaged in productive scholarship" is a misrepresentation of the facts. Locke added that 100 percent of the program's faculty who hold doctorates publish.

"An institution which aspires to be a flagship university should be able to handle its dirty work with class," Locke said. "I would have been much happier just being told we were too small – instead the administration cooked the data."

The Professional Preparation Program, which trains teachers how to teach physical education, was described by Locke as one of the best in the nation.

"Everyone knows we're one of the best in the country. We don't need to prove we're good," he said. "We're built like a Swiss watch."

Locke said their first priority was to save the doctoral students who have little or no possibility of transferring if the program is cut. The second priority would be to save the current juniors who are enrolled in the program.

"Our present battle is to get the administration to allow us to continue the undergraduate program for another year," he said, although he refused comment as to the current state of their negotiations with the administration.

Although Locke believes the administration could have handled the cuts with better "style," he acknowledged the difficulties the University administrators were facing.

English Club offers a place for english majors to meet

By JULIE KOTSIFAS
Collegian Correspondent

The Undergraduate English Club, a newly-organized club for English majors at the University of Massachusetts, offers a place for people in the English major to discuss common links, according to the club's founder.

Michelle Morse, 21, a UMass senior, explained that the club's purpose is to be an informal workshop and gathering place for students interested in literature.

"I had a hard time understanding Shakespeare," Morse said. "I wish someone had been there to help me through it, to hold my hand, so to speak, and explain the text to me."

Morse, along with junior Cynthia Rapache and seniors Liz Nelson and Joseph Kenneally, said she thought about forming a club last semester when she realized other majors had organizations where students could get together and discuss ideas and principles. But the English department had no organization in existence.

She wants the club to be available to all majors and provide assistance and ideas for understanding texts and writing papers, as well as a means of socializing among students with the same interests and academic difficulties.

"English majors are always looking for paper-readers and it's difficult to find friends or roommates who read works [of literature] and understand them," Morse said.

Morse said she talked to a number of English majors and faculty members who seemed enthusiastic to the idea.

Undergraduate English Advising Director Professor Vincent DiMarco will serve as the departmental link to the group and provide feedback and guidance.

Professor DiMarco said an undergraduate English club existed about 15 years ago, but it died out over time. He explained clubs such as these are "desirable but difficult to sustain because so many students work and take five courses, and if you have a job, there just isn't enough time for other things."

"If there is enough real interest, then the club should approach the office and I will lobby to get them some seed money to fund special projects," DiMarco said.

Accoridng to DiMarco, there are between 800 and 900 majors, and the English department can sometimes appeal to get funds for the department on a "catch-as-catch-can basis."

Morse wants the club to become a Registered Student Organization because she thinks it could attract more people to it and would make the club a "long-standing" association.

Morse and Rapache said they are going to try to obtain permission to set up a booth and sell coffee and breakfast items in the mornings, as other departmental organizations do, to raise money for the club.

"A history major who is taking an English class and having problems with Dante or Shakespeare should be able to come in and talk about it," Morse said.

"Integrity is doing the right thing, even when it costs you personally," he said. "We're not here to glorify war. We're not here to remember people who got killed or celebrate those who weren't.

"We're here to remember people who did what they believe to be the right thing even though it cost."

Horvath explained that the candles were to demonstrate support for those who still listed as unaccounted.

"[One] thing the POWs say is that knowing that somebody remembered was very important," he said. "That's what these candles are for, that's what we're here for. To remember human beings, doing everything they can, to stay human.

"To remember human beings who also did what they thought was right just as we are called, whether in the military or as civilians, to do what we believe is right. And that's worth honoring at any time."

There are 2302 Americans still unaccounted for as a result of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asian, according to the July 1990 POW-MIA Factbook, issued by the Department of Defense.

Of those, 1190 are classified as POW/MIAs. There are 1112 classified as killed in action/body not recovered. Fifty-seven of the unaccounted were servicemen from Massachusetts.

Included in the more than 2000 American POWs and MIAs are 42 civilians.

Five Colleges to protest Clay

Comedian's routine seen as controversial

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Various organizations from the Five College area plan to picket Andrew Dice Clay's performance in Hartford on Nov. 17 to protest what they call "a night of stand-up hate 'comedy.'"

"Most of all stand-up comedy performances are controversial as an art form," said Linda Wehwes, a University of Massachusetts student and an organizer of the picket. "Andrew Dice Clay only raises controversy with his violent attitude toward groups traditionally oppressed in our society."

Wehwes said all women studies departments from the Five Colleges have agreed to picket, as well as different local women's and gay groups. The picket will happen in front of the Bushnell Theatre in downtown Hartford where the performance will start at 8 p.m.

Wehwes said common themes of the "Diceman's" performance reinforce hatred against groups such as women and foreigners.

"He says things like, 'If you don't speak the language, get out of the country,' and says you should 'ruff up women, because that's how they like it,'" she said.

The protest is not trying to restrict Clay's freedom of expression by advocating the censorship of his performance, she said. Since Clay has large concerts and sells millions of cassettes, his freedom of speech has never been infringed, she said.

"We just want people to analyze what he is saying as being beyond a sexual or ethnic joke since it's really an attitude which we feel is not healthy for the general population," she said.

For more information about the picket, call Wehwes at 586-2701 or Jenifer Johnson at 253-2953.

Scholarships offered to undergraduate veterans

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The Office of Veterans' Assistance and Counseling Services at the University of Massachusetts is offering scholarships of up to $400 for undergraduate students who are veterans, according to the director of the Veterans' Office.

Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Veteran Services, announced the Dr. Tony Melchionda Scholarship Fund would be giving scholarships and/or fee waivers to qualified students.

"The Fund was established about 5-6 years ago," said Dr. Hilson, "and it is a nice way to honor Tony Melchionda."

Melchionda, a Vietnam veteran, was locally known as the "people's doctor" and worked at University Health Services.

He died in 1983 at age 41, and he always believed his illness was linked to Agent Orange, a herbicide used in the Vietnam War.

Eligible students must have been honorable discharged, with preference given to Vietnam Veterans.

The eligible applicants must be currently enrolled or accepted at the University as an undergraduate.

Applicants must also have demonstrated community leadership or public service, and have a grade point average of 3.0.

"With all of the budget problems," said Hilson, "I hope to help undergraduate veterans, especially with the new fee increase."

Scholarship applications are available in Mobile Unit 1 near Dickinson Hall and the deadline to apply is Nov. 30.

Dr. Hilson also said contributions to the scholarship fund were tax-free.

Cops need animal policy

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Some students may feel that the University of Massachusetts Police Department is "going to the dogs," but the police presently lack a policy for helping stray or injured animals.

Isang Inokon, a UMass freshman from New Jersey, said he found an injured dog last Thursday near the McGuirk Stadium and asked for police assistance to bring the dog to a veterinarian.

He said the police would not help him because there is no present police policy on assisting injured animals. Subsequently, Inokon had to walk the dog to the Hampshire Veterinary Hospital on University Drive.

Inokon said the police said they would only assist him if the animal was posing a threat to people, which it was not.

"The police should have a policy for stray animals," he said. "I don't like to see animals treated that way."

Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson said the police have neither a policy concerning stray or lost animals nor a dog officer who would deal specifically with animals.

He said the UMass police receive a variety of calls about animals but usually do not respond unless the animal is a nuisance or potentially threatening.

"We respond to calls when, for example, there is a dog harassing ducks at the pond or to remove a fox from North Village," Hilson said. "But calls like this are not of any occurance to enact a policy."

He said an officer would use a "noose-like contraption to apprehend an stray animal from the community," if the animal is posing a threat.

Hilson said the Town of Amherst Police Department has a dog officer who would be out of jurisdiction if responding to a UMass call. He said the UMass police force will not be acquiring a dog officer for some time because of the present University budget crunch.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Kristallnacht remembered

Fifty-two years ago this past Friday, 91 Jews were killed. German police and civilians worked together and burned 300 synagogues, destroyed 7,500 Jewish-owned shops and sent 30,000 Jews to concentration camps. Kristallnacht (Night of the Broken Glass) was the beginning of the end for eight out of 10 European Jews who were alive in 1938, but who would be dead by 1945.

Adam Stein

The Holocaust reduced the Jewish community of Germany from a few hundred thousand to just a few hundred. Where there was once a thriving Jewish community of three million, there are but 5,000 Jews still living in Poland. They are truly survivors of history.

We try not to forget them, as they are remembered in classes, on holidays and even in museums. All over the world there are museums of what Jewish life was like in Europe. In some museums one can learn about Cromagnon Man, the ancient Egyptians, the Romans, the Phoenicians and other extinct peoples. Likewise, there are museums in Poland to teach people how some of our grandparents lived, not thousands of years ago, but a mere 50.

How could we let this happen?

What a question. How can one explain world indifference to the genocide of the Jews? There's no question that people knew. The American public knew, for the New York Times reported the massacres. Sadly enough, the articles were to be found on the back pages of the paper as it was a low area of interest at the time. The International Red Cross also knew, for they toured the camps. President Harry Truman and the generals conducting the Allied attack knew, as they bombed military targets in and around concentration camps but refused to shut them down by bombing the railroad tracks leading into them.

People just weren't concerned. They were absorbed with themselves, their lives, their worries and their own troubles. Everything else was secondary. Thus, who cares if six million Jews are being killed in Europe, I still have a bus to catch. Or a paper to write. Or a party to attend.

Not much has changed. People still don't react till something hits them personally. It is not only a matter of apathy, but of selfishness. Sometimes issues attract support outside of the affected communities. Other times important causes are forgotten, neglected and allowed to worsen as no one takes any notice.

Question three would have affected us all, and the students came together to fight it. In the mean time, 67 percent of the minority faculty on campus are threatened with termination and a majority of the students are silent. Last year, UMass was about to suffer another round of budget cuts and, in the same fashion, the campus came together to stage a school strike. However, when the Everywoman's Center is bearing an unequal burden caused by the budget cuts while other areas on campus remain untouched, again a majority of the students are silent.

Can the Holocaust happen again?

Perhaps the real question is: Will we allow it? Not just the Holocaust, but anything which one deems as wrong.

We need to be aware of the events that surround our everyday lives. If we don't take notice of them and act upon our convictions, what may seem like one community's problems may escalate and become everyone's problem.

If we continue to define our lives according to our own narrow experiences, we may ignore the reality that the checks and balances of our current system can be gradually chipped away until it disappears. If we are to ignore this, then we must consider at what point do we finally put our foot down to say "enough?" One must keep in mind that by saying "enough," we need not reshape our lives to fight the injustice. In many cases, the mere signing of a petition is enough.

A Jewish proverb explains, "If I am not for myself, then who will be for me? But if I am only for myself, then what am I?" Nu, what are you? Some inform. Others organize. Still others petition. One must find their own niche in all of this, so that we may finally be able to say, "Never Again!"

Zionism will miss the man who voiced what many thought

Hussein Ibish

The passing of Rabbi Meir Kahane in New York last Tuesday will be deeply mourned by the government of Israel and the international Zionist movement, but for reasons that may not be entirely obvious to many. Rabbi Kahane served an invaluable function as what I would call a "human red herring."

Kahane was a rabid racist and anti-Arab Zionist fascist, and in this he is joined by many leading Israelis, including many in the current cabinet. But Kahane was quite different in the manner in which he promoted his agenda and expressed his views.

Rather than discussing the more appalling and atrocious attitudes and plans shared by the Zionist right wing in small meetings of committed followers, or in internal documents, or, at least, only in the Hebrew-language press, as is the accepted practice among most of these people, he loudly shouted his opinions through megaphones on rooftops and through the Western mass media in English.

Kahane often claimed to be publicly speaking the opinions many held in private, and there is no doubt that this is true. By appearing in public as a racist, raving lunatic, he fulfilled an invaluable function as a focus for international and internal disgust and outrage at the racist attitudes of the Zionist movement. When pressed in public about their statements, attitudes or policies, Israeli leaders could always point to Kahane and Kach as proof that they would not tolerate racism since they had disavowed him.

The need that the Zionist movement has for a lunatic fringe to take much of the heat for its own racist policies is so great that I would go so far as to suggest that if Kahane had not come forward, he would have had to have been invented. Inadvertently or otherwise, he took the blame and served as a focus of outrage for attitudes that were by no means his alone, while those in power marginalized and excluded him as they carried out policies dictated by those attitudes.

Those in America should be familiar with this type of racial politics, as the "conservative right" hides its own racist policies behind condemnation of such utter lunatics as David Duke. It is basic politics to defuse criticism of indefensible policies by having a "fall guy" to absorb as much of the heat as possible. This was the role Oliver North claimed that he had been assigned in the Iran-contra scandal, and this is the role which Kahane filled in the Zionist movement.

In regard to Kahane's function, Arthur Hertzberg has "The more respectable among the right wing think that having a few bullies around is useful to their own objectives..." in the manner which I have spelled out.

It is not only the right which exploited Kahane, but even the left of Israel, who fundamentally agree with many of Kahane's key assumptions. Earlier this semester, the great Israeli poet, leftist and "humanitarian," A.B. Yehoshua spoke on campus. One was saddened but not surprised to note that, although superficially his opinions are utterly different from those of Kahane nonetheless, to Arab ears at least, many of the assumptions were the same. They involved the need for a pre-eminently, one could say exclusively, Jewish presence in Palestine.

Statements such as "everything which happens in Israel is Jewish," or "every writer in Israel is a Jewish writer" betrayed a mind that, while paying lip service to "Arab-Israelis," nonetheless thinks of his country as exclusively Jewish. In the depths of his consciousness, as with almost all Zionists, he agrees with Kahane that the Arab presence in Palestine is incompatible with his nationalist vision, except perhaps, as an insignificant and invisible minority.

Thus for all Zionists, right and left, Meir Kahane played his crucial role, albeit one of the outcast and "fall guy." I believe he will be sorely missed.

What happens when poverty no longer shocks us?

Meredith O'Brien

She wore a tattered, thin sweater and worn jeans. She was very frail-looking — like the wind could knock her over if it blew too hard. But the streets must have hardened this petite woman, for she appeared to have a steely determination and nerves of stone.

"Do ya have 85 cents?" she asked quietly, clutching her sweater to her body. "Just 85 cents."

He had on a dark jacket, dark pants and a t-shirt. His hair was slightly graying and he spoke with a deep, gruff voice. He said he just wanted to help my friend pump her gas.

"I'll just help ya," he said grabbing the gas pump from her hands.

My friend pulled me aside. "No, no, he'll ask for money," she whispered. "Don't let him do it."

A scruffy, middle-aged man stood on a street corner. He stood alone, with his arms crossed in front of him, like he would put up with no nonsense from anyone.

"Do you have some money?" he asked the passers-by. "I need to pay my child support and my alimony."

They are the nameless, the faceless, the "invisible" — the ones who make us "uncomfortable" when we walk by.

Throughout childhood and early adulthood, we are trained to ignore these people, not to look them straight in the eye, not to acknowledge their pain.

"They'll probably just spend the money on booze or drugs," people tell you. "How do you think they got into the gutter in the first place? They're probably on welfare, too."

When I went to Washington, D.C. last week, I came face-to-face with "the homeless." Having lived my life in a suburban town and gone to college in the small town of Amherst, my experience with the homeless was extremely limited... or maybe I just never saw that real people, with faces and lives, comprised the problem.

A group of my friends were walking to a pub in downtown D.C. when I saw the frail-looking woman. As she looked into my eyes and asked me for a mere 85 cents (that I knew was in my purse), I felt a tremendous guilt and compulsion to give it to her.

A part of me was remembering what I've been told so many times over, "Don't give 'them' any money, it won't help 'them.'"

But what was a lousy 85 cents? How could that hurt?

Before I had time to think through the situation, I was swept up by my friends and continued walking with them down the street.

"Does that bother you?" one of my friends asked, referring to the woman asking for money.

"Yes," I said. "I'm not used to it."

"Oh," she said. "It's what you see in the city."

Later, I thought about it.

Why should I be used to seeing people ask for money? Why should people living in the richest nation of the world have to sacrifice their dignity, their pride and ask total strangers for money for something to eat, a place to stay, clothing?

It just does not make sense to me. This whole 'survival of the fittest' thing, that says some will succeed and others will not, does not compute.

In a world where people still maintain some aspects of compassion for other human beings, I find it hard to understand how we could allow this to happen; that we are trained to just walk by and ignore the problem; to ignore these people who need help, not pity.

Maybe I'm just naive and too thin-skinned. After all, there have always been homeless people asking for money. Why should I be so bothered by it if no one else is?

It's a natural problem.
It's reality.
It's pathetic.
It's America.

"As far as the students go, I don't know what we'll do with them without faculty to teach them. If they've paid money to come to this University for the CHE program, then they are losing out. Once CHE is eliminated they will be assimilated into the school of Public Health," said Cernaba.

The School of Public Health faculty and the Public Health Graduate Student Organization wrote a "resolution" to the proposed elimination that was hand-delivered to Provost O'Brien.

The resolution stated that the CHE program is not expendable because "it is the only accredited graduate health program existing in a public institution in Massachusetts or New England." It also stated CHE is an integral part of the school of Public Health, and the faculty are recognized by the Massachusetts Congressional delegation on U.S. policy about smoking as well as the National Cancer Institute.

The resolution stated that the faculty felt they had not been adequately involved in the termination decision, not enough information was looked at to make a decision, the faculties' national recognition was not taken into consideration and the importance of the CHE program to the school of Public Health was not realized.

"At times like these there is no freedom from personal tragedy or inequity. There is simply no way to avoid the kind of sadness we are experiencing now," he said.

Locke said that the students in the program were "hanging tough," but that many parents are extremely angered. He said he is urging parents to write to their legislators, the dean, and to seek any legal recourse, but the program has not yet orchestrated a large scale petition.

Locke also advised students who are enrolled in programs which have been slated for termination to keep up their academic efforts.

"For students in these programs, don't blow off the semester. Don't shoot yourself in the foot, there is such a thing as a GPA. Have respect for your education," he said.

Locke pointed to a lot of personal tragedy which would be caused by the termination, including one professor who has been with the department for 26 years and another who has worked six years for tenure but will now be turned down.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Fatima Zaidane speaks about women of the Intifada

By MINU SEBASTIAN
Collegian staff

On Thursday, November 8, Fatima Zaidane spoke on "Palestinian Women of the Intifada." She is a representative of the Union of Palestinian Women in North America. This group represents women who have been exiled from their country and who still remain connected to the movement in Palestine.

"The Intifada is a non-violent phenomenon and a popular uprising which involves all sectors including men, women and children," she said.

Women are an important part of the resistance against Israeli occupation. "The Palestinian woman has become part of the structure out of a need for participation," she said. "The traditional role of mother managing the home economy has shifted to a role in the national economy."

In the textile industry sewing garments for one's family has shifted to a cooperative effort. The same has happened to the agricultural sector. Cooperatives of women fight illiteracy, provide food for families and help people who have family members in jail.

The cooperative efforts by women are illegal. "These women are subject to arrest and beating by the Israeli soldiers," she said. "The life sentence for a woman who is arrested is high and the children are not allowed to see their mother in jail. These children become homeless."

Traditional values have also been changing. "Women who speak about politics is accepted and respected." The notion of honor of a woman within the family has shifted. "Women were expected to keep their virginity until they got married and Israeli soldiers collaborated against many of them and told their families lies about the women. For this reason some women were forced to bargain with the Israeli soldiers but now this is changing."

The value changes have also led to role changes for the Palestinian woman. "The Palestinian woman also needs self-determination. The Palestinian woman cannot be free until society is free," she said. "The liberation movement goes hand in hand with social struggle."

The reproductive rights of women are limited. "There are limited choices in contraception because of the occupation. Medical supplies are primitive. Abortions are therefore limited," she said. "But this not the primary concern of our movement."

Women of India

(Editor's note: This article is a list of prominent Indian women and their accomplishments)

Vina Mazumdar – Head of the Center for Women's Development Studies in Delhi and one of the most respected and influential voices in the Indian women's movement. She brought out the report "Towards Equality" in 1974, a comprehensive study of the situation of Indian women since independence which has helped shape much of Government policy since.

Minu Sebastian

Ela Bhatt – Padma Shri winner and member of Rajya Sabha. Best known for her starting of the Women's Labour movement and founder of SEWA (Self-employed Womens' Association) which helped poor self-employed working women finance themselves and cut their dependence on husbands, banks and middle-men.

Rukmini Devi – Founder and principal of Kalakshetra (a school for the Arts) in Adayar, Madras. She is a well-known Bharatanatyam dancer and she is much lauded for her role in freeing this art from the disrepute that a prudish and oppressive society held its practicioners in.

Vandana Shiva – She is the author of "Staying alive: women, ecology and development." She is a physicist, philosopher, and feminist. She is also the director of the Research Foundation for Science, Technology and Natural Resource Policy in Dehradun. She has been increasingly active in citizen's action against environmental destruction, including the Chipko movement and is highly critical of current agricultural and reproductive technologies.

Madhu Kishwar – She is editor of "Manushi" and is a leading intellectual, activist and feminist.

Dr. N. Rajam – She is a famous violinst and professor in Benares Hindu University.

Devaki Jain – She is a well respected scholar and author. She is author of "Women's quest for power: five Indian case studies" and many influential papers on the status of Indian women.

Jaya Arunachalam – Originally a Congi politician, she founded the Working Women's Forum in Tamil Nadu.

Kiran Bedi – She is a police officer and the former IGP (Inspector General of Police) of New Delhi.

Nandini Satpathi – Former chief minister of Orissa.

Tutors help bridge language barrier

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

University students are needed to tutor language-minority students in area public middle and high schools. "For students whom are struggling to learn the English language education is twice as challenging," said professor Robert Maloy, director of the Tutoring Enrichment and Assistance Models with Schools Project.

While tutoring, University students earn three academic credits. The TEAMS Project has been in operation for seven years in which time over 200 university students from 55 academic majors have tutored in public schools.

According to Maloy the Project is growing strong and expanding its school sites therefore more tutors are needed than in the past. Maloy said that the program is looking for students from diverse cultural backgrounds, students who speak a foreign language and students who are interested in teaching.

"However, anyone who wants to tutor is welcomed to apply, you don't have to be an education or English major," Maloy said. "The more diverse our tutors are, the broader our resources can become."

Tutors mainly help bridge the language barrier. Language-minority students struggle with language and communication gaps in their various academic subjects.

As tutors, University students assist in translating the ideas and concepts of the subject matters into English. Subjects vary from history to chemistry to literature.

TEAMS tutors provide an average of six hours a week in and after school. And there is a weekly seminar which trains and supports tutors to develop their teaching, communication and people skills.

Students interested in tutoring can acquire more information concerning the TEAMS Project at their table on the UMass campus center concourse today and tomorrow.

TEAMS is also scheduled to hold an open house Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 7:00 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center.

Tutoring applications are available in 110 Furculo Hall, 545-0945.

Mothers and daughters

Remember when you were a little girl and you used to look up to your mother? Remember when she was your idol and you tried to imitate everything she did? Remember your pre-teenage years when she understood your peer pressures? Remember her sharing girlish stories with you to make you laugh as she wiped the tears from your eyes? Remember your innocence? Then, just like a flash of lightning, something happened.

For me, what happened was I grew up. Those fond memories of yesteryear are now stored respectfully at the back of my mind. Suddenly my mother and I don't see eye to eye on very much at all. If she says black, I say blue and vice versa. Now I am my own person and yet she still wants to mold her 'little girl.'

Monique Tabon

I still love and respect her, but now I question her authority. "Do as I say, not as I do" holds little significance for me. Now I challenge her threats, "I brought you into this world and I'll take you out." Oh really?

Now I stand firm in my decisions. "You know how I feel about that issue," well I have to do what's best for me. Now I try to rationalize with her, "Because I'm your mother" is mere abstractness and blows right over my head. Now I'm bold, "It was me and you on that delivery table," sorry guilt will not work this time. Basically now I'm identifying myself as separate from her, not one in and of the same. And yet, she's still my mother.

I'm eager to learn more as life whirls me around in place of a rude awakening. Black liberation, the joke of integration and refusing assimilation have my mother saying that she doesn't trust my 'lifestyle.' What lifestyle? Gaining new insight and historical knowledge so that I understand where I fit into the larger system? Knowing that 'we the people' did not include me? Understanding my roles as a black woman, both in terms of gender and the struggle of my race? If that 'lifestyle' is a bit overwhelming, then I suggest you get used to it, because the more I grow and understand myself and my responsibilities to our community, the more determined I am going to be me. The way I see it, this is my life. Don't try to confine me within the parameters of your life. I'm young, allow me to make my own mistakes. If I should fall down, just be there to dust me off and give me the encouragement to continue running this race we call life.

It is very important that we, as daughters and mothers, attempt to close the gap that separates us from each other. I understand the love my mother has for me is in the form of overprotection. I also understand that this 'gap' is just a phase that's confusing for all of us. Our mothers are from one generation and we are from another. However, as we continue to work things out, all I ask is that you remember I'm your daughter not your kid. By associating me with the concept of a kid, you are failing to acknowledge my growth as a young woman. As we both continue to grow and change, let's put special effort into things that are positive and healthy. We have the world fighting against us, let us not fight against each other.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe that steady incremental growth over the long term is the best way to build retirement income. This investment philosophy has worked well for over seventy years, and has provided retirement income for hundreds of thousands of people like you.

THE KEYS TO RETIREMENT INVESTING

Security, growth, and diversity are the keys to sound retirement investing: security, so the resources are sure to be there when it's time to retire; growth, so you'll have the income you need for the kind of retirement you want; and diversity to help protect you against volatility and to let you benefit from the strengths of several types of investments.

TIAA AND CREF—A SMART COMBINATION

TIAA's traditional annuity provides maximum safety, guaranteeing your principal and a specified interest rate.

It also gives you the opportunity for growth through dividends—which we've declared every year for 41 years. In fact, TIAA's net earned rate has beaten the industry average for every one of those years.†

With CREF's variable annuity, you can choose from four different investment accounts, all managed by experts who understand the long-term strategies essential to sound retirement planning.

THE FIRST CHOICE IN EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

The TIAA-CREF retirement system is specifically designed for people in education and research. You may move from one institution to another many times in your career, so your annuities move with you to any of over 4,200 institutions with TIAA-CREF retirement plans. You need financial security, so the system provides retirement income you cannot outlive. Plus, the TIAA-CREF system offers:

Performance: The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.‡

Responsiveness: Our experienced counselors are ready to answer your questions. Call our toll-free numbers for performance figures or information about your personal annuity accumulations.

Strength: Your future is protected by the largest private retirement system in the world. We have done so well, for so many, for so long, that we currently manage over $80 billion in assets.

A Japanese girl looks at goods of the Japanese hit cartoon character "Chibi Marukochan" in a Tokyo shop recently

Bart has a Japanese sister

TOKYO, JAPAN (AP) – Cartoon character Chibi Marukochan is out to prove it's OK to be an underachiever.

Her relentless mediocrity has won over a nation, making Chibi an unlikely idol and the year's hottest fad.

The lazy third-grader of slurred speech and bob-cut hair even looks a bit like Bart Simpson. Both are drawn two-dimensionally, with a minimum of detail and unsure lines.

Chibi's self-proclaimed ambition is to get away with doing the minimum, but her market performance has been phenomenal.

More than nine million copies for her comic books have been sold and the spin-off television show has the nation's top rating, with two in every five sets tuned in each Sunday at 6 p.m.

The show's theme song of nonsensical lyrics has sold 1.7 million compact discs and cassette tapes. It is heard endlessly in Japan's countless karaoke bars, where drinkers provide the singing voices to recorded music tracks from popular songs ("Kara" means empty in Japanese; "Oke" means orchestra).

A leading toy maker, the TAKARA Co., figures to make $40 million this year on Chibi Marukochan dolls, badges and games. People have been arrested for selling fake Chibi t-shirts.

Sociologists hold seminars at Waseda University on the Chibi Marukochan phenomenon and her likeness graced a portable shrine at Tokyo National University of Fine Arts and Music's autumn festival.

It looks like Leland knocked off Laura

So Leland Palmer is "Bob," the psycho alter ego who murdered his daughter, Laura. At least for now he is, but knowing Twin Peaks, the plot could possibly take yet another hairpin turn. The most frustrating thing is we know he did it, but we're one step ahead of Dale Cooper, doughnut connoisseur extraordinaire. Laura's lookalike cousin Madeline was his next victim, though he kept crying out his dead daughter's name. Audrey had her worst fears confirmed when her rich daddy admitted to sleeping with Laura. God, Laura, of all people to do the dirty deed with, why that geek Ben Horne? Now I know she was one messed up little trooper.

Pete got a surprise from his wife, Catherine, who figured that dressing up as a Japanese businessman might perk up their love life. Especially considering everyone thought she was dead. Will Catherine look like herself next week? Will the bald giant who talks to Dale ever get to the point? Will Cooper ever figure it's Leland? Only time will tell.

Giles (15) carried the scoring load for UMass.

Barbee was 3 of 4 from three point range, and Giles hit 3 of 6. Brown (11 points) returned to the point guard spot he anchored two seasons ago as a freshman and hit several jumpers, including a three.

The scrimmage marked the in-game debut of 7-foot-2 freshman Jeff Meyer. Meyer entered the game with 11:15 to play in the first half and scored his first hoop, a six-foot hook shot over a Soviet defender, two minutes later. Freshman guard Chris Robinson and sophomore forward Kennard Robinson also played in the first half.

Game notes: Injured UMass quarterback Gary Wilkos received an introduction from Calipari and a standing ovation from the student section before the start of the second half. . . Herndon earned a technical foul for giving referee Jim Burr an encouraging pat on the back after a tough call went against him.

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21- April 19): Stop worrying about unimportant details — that's why they're unimportant. Friends bring you joyful news. Better health will be yours if you adopt a more active lifestyle. You feel new enthusiasm for your job.

TAURUS (April 20- May 20): Don't expect higher-ups to be open to new ideas today. An older person can help you sort out a financial problem. Be discreet if dating someone who works at your company.

GEMINI (May 21- June 20): People look to you for guidance. Set a good example. You could spend a lively evening in the company of a member of the opposite sex. Spruce up your appearance.

CANCER (June 21- July 22): Chances are that if you lose something important, you will find it after a long search. Curtail spending. Your mate may be more demanding than usual. Devote more time to home life.

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22): Be cautious in your business dealings. Read every document carefully and pay attention to public opinion. Consult lawyers if you have any doubts. A close relationship is more rewarding than ever.

VIRGO (Aug. 23- Sept. 22): Get together with someone more experienced than yourself if you need help with an important project. Review your finances this afternoon. Do not count on a major increase in income.

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22): Follow up on yesterday's developments particularly where romance is concerned. Expect some confusion where your finances are involved. You are in better shape than you think.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23- Nov. 21): You will have to be content with romance. Let the object of your affections make the next move. Things will improve. Do not hesitate to accept a date with someone else.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22- Dec. 21): Overindulgence could cause you problems. Pay attention to what your loved ones are saying. Use some daily exercise if at all possible. Your motivation is stronger than in the past.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22- Jan. 19): Conflicts could arise where children are concerned. Try to remember what it was like to be a child. A relative receives good news. Romance looks mostly happy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20- Feb. 18): Begin the day by throwing yourself into your work and getting as far ahead as you can. There is a good chance romance will beckon later today. Stay home and relax tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19- March 20): A change of scenery would do you good today. Getting away from routine concerns for a day could change your whole outlook. You will return to your work with new enthusiasm.

Cross country teams slosh across the finish line in finale

• Men impress with 10th place showing

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team finished 10th at the IC4A Championship Meet Saturday.

"I'm ecstatic," coach Ken O'Brien said. "I thought that on a real good day we'd grab about 12th place. I thought 10th would be out of reach.

"Our top three runners ran phenomenally," O'Brien said.

Senior Jon Corso led UMass with a 20th place finish. It was the eighth-highest finish for a UMass runner ever at the Championship.

Senior Tom Degnan was the second finished 15 seconds behind Corso, in 42nd place. Senior Joe Milette placed 54th.

Solid performances were turned in by sophomore Mike Davis (94th place), freshman Craig Cormier (110th), senior Gerry Squires (147th) and sophomore Pat Reed (150th).

Reed was the third-highest seventh place runner in the meet, meaning that of all the teams, only two others were able to place their seventh runner higher than Reed.

O'Brien said that he was especially pleased with the way his team handled the poor weather conditions during the race. The meet was run in a driving rain with winds up to 40 miles per hour. In many places on the course, the mud was over the runners' ankles.

"I thought that our guys handled the adverse conditions well," O'Brien said. "They didn't let the rain and the wind bother them. A couple of the other teams that I expected to finish ahead of us didn't perform as well under the conditions."

• Women end season with 15th place finish

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's cross country team battled 50 colleges from all over the Northeast and weather fit for the Artic North to finish 15th at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championship Saturday.

"We finished exactly where we expected to be," coach Julie LaFreniere said. "The weather was wet and miserable, but my team overcame it and ran with a lot of heart."

Sophomore Becky Johnson finishd 48th in the 3.1-mile race; freshman Kelly Liljeblad came in 68th.

"Both Kelly and Becky ran well under difficult conditions," LaFreniere said. "This is a very big race and with bad weather it is not easy to keep your poise. Kelly was a little disappointed but I feel she ran very well."

The surprise of the meet, according to LaFreniere, was the performance of Mo Meldrim, who finished 70th. Meldrim was expected to be a major contributor this season, but a series of injuries and bad luck have kept her from being a factor.

"Mo finally stepped up and ran like we all knew she could," LaFreniere said. "I was so excited seeing her run well that I screamed myself hoarse as she was finishing."

Villanova (33 points) dominated to win the Championship, followed by Georgetown (83 points) and Providence. Those three teams, along with Yale, will compete next week at the National Championships.

As for UMass, this meet wrapped up the season on a positive note. LaFreniere said, "Many other coaches felt their teams fell apart at this meet, but my team stepped up to the challenge."

Gymnastics meet all fun

Alumni meet chance for men to tune, enjoy

By KEN MAGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team defeated a squad of UMass alumni 229.2 to 207.6, in the 20th Annual Alumni Meet Saturday at Boyden.

Winning and losing, however, took a back seat to a good time.

"The main thing is to have fun," coach Roy Johnson said.

"We weren't really expecting to hit our best routines. The season doesn't start until January 19, so we have a lot of time."

Honorary alumnus Kieth Van Winkle, 48, showed he is still going strong and doesn't plan on quitting. Van Winkle, the men's gymnastics coach at Dartmouth, graduated from Middlebury and is technically not an alumnus. But since befriending Johnson, Van Winkle has returned every year to compete in the Alumni meet.

"This is my 10th year here at UMass," said Van Winkle. "I just have a wonderful time. It's a thrill for me to watch this caliber of gymnastics. I had a lot of fun."

Jay Royane, class of '89, who is now an assistant gymnastics coach at West Virginia, said he may think twice about returning for next year's meet.

"This is my first time back," said Royane. "I did a lot better than I expected, but my ankle is hurting so bad.'

Although it is still preseason, Johnson said he was pleased with some of his team's performances.

"I thought the guys did really well," Johnson said. "Jason Braun did a nice routine on the floor exercises and Steve Christensen did a pretty good ring routine. All we've done up to now is a lot of skill training. We have to put it all together."

Braun scored a 9.2 on the floor and Christensen received an 8.4 on the rings. Also impressive were Bill Sayman (8.5 on the parallel bars) and Tim Sullivan (9.2 on the vault.)

Johnson said he enjoys watching the alumni compete every year. "They're always fun, but rusty. They'll be sore tomorrow," he said.

Also competing for the alumni squad was new UMass assistant coach Jun Chen, a former member of the Chinese National Team. At one time, according to Johnson, Chen was considered "one of the best in the world."

Old Dominion ends field hockey's season

By HOLLY LUTHER
Collegian Correspondent

NORFOLK, Va. — Once again, Old Dominion University's field hockey team is Final Four-bound.

Old Dominion conquered the University of Massachusetts, 4-0, to eliminate the Minutewomen from the NCAA Division I Field Hockey Tournament Sunday at Foreman Field.

Both teams walked onto the field enriched from their last meeting during regular season play, when ODU defeated Massachusetts 4-0.

"Nothing surprised us. They [ODU] executed their corners better than last time we played them, but they have the potential to do that," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

Old Dominion coach Beth Anders said, "They're much improved; I didn't expect anything less. I knew they'd be better than the first time."

UMass plays on grass regularly, and was not acclimated to the speed of Foreman Field's Astroturf.

"Player for player, for the most part, they're physically faster. And on turf, its going to take its toll after a while," Hixon said.

"We played a far more defensive system than the first time [we played them]. We had to somehow stop their corners. If we could do that we'd be in the game. I think our defense was a little bit intimidated, which is unfortunate. I think we were thinking too much of what might happen."

The Monarchs (21-2-1) had a more refined, confident offensive approach.

Anders said, "We were coming and attacking. Whatever they did we just kept attacking. Instead of worrying about losing we were coming in to win."

Momentum travelled quickly from end to end; Old Dominion cashed in first when Macha van der Vaart, with an assist from Winnifred Sanders, put the Monarchs on the board with the match only two minutes old.

At the 16:00 mark, Pam Neiss broke through the blockade of UMass defenders on UMass goalie Philippa Scott to give ODU a 2-0 lead.

This goal set off a spark in Massachusetts; the Minutewomen picked up the pace of the game and didn't allow another goal until the second half.

"I was concerned about their goaltending. I know UMass has very good goalies," expressed Anders.

This season, in 1,348 minutes of playing time, UMass' sophomore goalie Philippa Scott has allowed 17 goals (an 0.78 goals-against average.) Scott has 14 shutouts and 129 goal saves.

Anders didn't need to be concerned much longer, however, when six minutes into the second half Robin Smith established a 3-0 lead on a penalty stroke.

Smith repeated the trick with 7:50 to go, as again Scott couldn't block Smith's powerful flick on a penalty shot.

"With such a big score the first time (we played ODU) I really thought we'd come out with a little bit of a vengeance," Hixon commented.

Old Dominion will proceed to the semifinals and face Iowa November 17 at Rutgers. The other semifinal match pits North Carolina against Penn State.

UMass (16-6) scored a victory in round one of the tournament, beating Connecticut 1-0 in penalty strokes after a 0-0 tie could not be broken.

winning points,'" Reid said. "That wasn't fit for man nor beast, only football players today."

The field goal was set up by a 65-yard drive directed by freshman quarterback Dave McGovern, who made his first career start. McGovern (10 of 17, 102 yards) connected with tight end Ron Villone for a 14-yard gain to midfield, then seven plays later he spun a strong throw to Blauvelt, who made a sliding catch on the Villanova 12-yard line.

McGovern fumbled in the first quarter, and ran the wrong direction on an option play in the third, but overall appeared more comfortable directing the offense than in his debut last week at Richmond. He twice scrambled for first downs in the fourth quarter, eating time off the clock that Villanova needed to attempt a comeback.

"I was a rookie last week. This week I knew what it was like," said McGovern, who was named to the Yankee Conference Honor Roll for his efforts. "I felt a lot more comfortable than last week. We went back to basics in practice."

The UMass defense, meanwhile, was again sensational. UMass humiliated Villanova's running game — the Wildcats rushed 30 times for a total gain of five yards — and limited Parpan to 11 of 26 passing for 105 yards. The Wildcats punted 10 times, gained less than two yards a play on average, and crossed UMass' 40-yard line once in the second half.

"A lot of times it's difficult on the defensive line because we're reacting to what the offensive line is doing," said tackle Rich Kane, who had a team-high nine tackles. "But [the mud] didn't really affect us too much. It's got to be harder for them coming off the turf [The Wildcats play their home games on artificial grass]. We've had a couple of games in the slop.

Before crushing Villanova, UMass had the fourth-best defense against the run and the second-best defense overall in the nation. The Minutemen have yielded four rushing touchdowns all year, fewer than any other team in Division I-AA.

UMass will finish its regular season Saturday at UNH's Cowell Stadium, and on the line will be the first undefeated season since Vic Fusia's team went 8-0-1 in 1963.

The game also has playoff implications. As Yankee Conference champions, the Minutemen already have an automatic berth in the 16-team Division I-AA playoffs. But a win Saturday would leave the Minutemen as one of the top eight teams in the country, and improve their chances of hosting a first round playoff game. The Minutemen are currently ranked No. 5 in the nation.

The playoff pairings will be announced Sunday night.

Game notes: Tailback Eric Thimas subbed for John Johnson, who twisted an ankle in the second quarter and was carried off the field. Thimas rushed 15 times for 73 yards, and has 390 all-purpose yards in the last two games. . . Johnson is expected to be OK for the UNH game. . . Gary Wilkos, who was introduced to a standing ovation during Friday night's UMass USSR basketball game, took in the action from the press box.

On his way off the field, McGovern was wrapped up in an enormous hug from his brother Bill, an assistant coach with UMass. . . The Minutemen were penalized nine times for 85 yards.

Defensive tackle Steve Brothers returned from a sprained ankle to start. . . Villanova had two 20-yard passing plays called back by personal fouls.

● Men succumb to Soviets

Friday's University of Massachusetts-USSR Trade Union Team scrimmage had a little "Back to the Future" in it.

The Soviets wore little shorts and pulled their socks up. They ran pick-and-rolls and top-of-the-key three-man weaves straight out of 1958. They shot one-handed set-shots, an ancestor of the modern jump-shot.

They also played a good basketball game, and beat UMass 85-81.

The Minutemen did well to scrap their way back into this game. After falling behind by 18 points early in the second half, UMass pressed the Soviets into committing several turnovers in the final 15 minutes, and came within a couple possessions of winning the game.

A 10-second violation gave UMass the ball with 2 minutes left, and William Herndon scored with an athletic move to the basket to close the Minutemen to within three points, 80-77.

Harper Williams answered a Sergey Ivanov basket with a 10-foot jumper to keep UMass close at the 43-second mark, and Herndon dunked a lob from Anton Brown with 20 seconds left to draw UMass within a pair at 83-81.

Two Anatoly Bogdanov free throws with nine seconds on the clock then sealed the win, the Soviet's second in three games against Atlantic 10 teams last week.

"We played hard, we just have to play hard forty minutes at a time," Williams said. "As long as we never quit we'll be in every game."

"The biggest thing is that we didn't give up and we fought," coach John Calipari said. "I was discouraged with our defense because we're a better defensive club than we showed. . . but I was encouraged that we made big shots. We know we can come back at you."

Jim McCoy, last season's leading scorer, is recovering from a virus and missed the game; in his absence, Tony Barbee (game-high 21 points), Williams (20) and Rafer

● Women 'Czeched,' 89-54

By GREG SUKIENNIK

In reality, this game was over before it started. But for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, that wasn't the important part.

The Ruzomborek Sports Club of Czechoslovakia, utilizing it's height and experience advantage to the fullest, showed why it is a world-class women's basketball squad Friday night in an 89-54 drubbing of UMass.

However, the Minutewomen showed signs of being a much better team this year than last, when they finished 5-24. Led by senior center Keyburn McCusker, UMass scored 38 points in the second half, played better defense, and took care of the ball.

"We relaxed and we came out to play (in the second half). We played hard, we filled the lanes and played better defense. I was pleased we were able to come back and play a solid second half," coach Kathty Hewelt said.

UMass exhibited shaky play during the first ten minutes, while Ruzomborek did what it wanted to do. With the Czechs up 25-8, Iveta Bielikova's started an 11 point run with two-straight three pointers, and Ruzomborek put the game away before the first half had ended. UMass trailed at the half 43-16.

Meanwhile, UMass shot 24.5 percent from the field in the first half and turned the ball over often.

"Obviously, we were out of sync," Hewelt said. "When you have a young ballclub, that's something that's very important to overcome. That's one of the reasons why we play a game like this; to get our feet wet."

Ruzomborek jacked the lead up to 60-18 at the start of the second half before pulling its starters.

After that, UMass played better. McCusker poured in 18 of her game-high 22 points off various post-up moves and short jumpers, as UMass closed to within 30 points.

Trish Riley, a 5-foot-4 guard who redshirted last year due to injury, came back to score eight points and haul in a team-high eight rebounds. Several times Riley cut through the taller Czechs for lay-ups.

Regents make policy for student reservists

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents has issued a policy regarding students who are called to active duty, according to the Dean of Students.

The policy covers tuition and fees, withdrawals from courses, priority enrollment upon return, and assistance in filing mitigating circumstances forms.

"I believe it will involve well over 100 students," said Jo-Anne Vanin, dean of students.

The policy was accompanied by a letter from Chancellor of Higher Education Randolph W. Bromery, which said the policy requires, "Considerable involvement by campus officials on a case-to-case basis, particularly where financial aid is involved."

The policy includes:

- Students who are unable to complete a semester because they are called to active United States military duty shall, upon verification, be granted the option of a refund or credit of tuition and campus fees.

With respect to any health insurance fee, the refund is subject to the concurrence of the institution's insurance carrier.

- Students who have received any form of financial aid including a full or partial scholarship or student loan or who expect to receive one, should contact the financial office at their respective institution to make appropriate arrangements.
- Students shall receive nonpunitive withdrawals in all courses for which they are required to withdraw.
- Students residing in residence halls shall receive refunds on a pro rata basis for the remainder of the semester.

This provision is subject to the approval of the Building Authority.

- Verification shall be provided by furnishing the Registrar with a copy of the Order to Active Duty within one week of receipt of the order.

If the order is not in writing, the student may sign an affidavit attesting to such an order, which includes an address or telephone number where the institution can verify the order and furnish the affadavit to the Registrar within one week of receipt of the order.

- The institution's president may waive or suspend any institutional policy or regulation that negatively impacts students in their withdrawal or subsequent readmission to the institution due to a call to active duty.
- The institution, upon request of a student, should assist the student in filing mitigating circumstances forms with external state or federal agencies, for example Veterans Affairs, in an attempt to prevent students from being charged with receiving too much money.
- Any student required to withdraw shall be given priority in enrollment in the program of his or her choice upon return to the institution for the two semesters immediately following his or her return from active duty.

Kater named top soccer player in nation

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

When playing soccer at the age of nine in Mendham, N.J., April Kater just played the game. After beginning her organized soccer career on a boys' club team, she moved on to a girls' traveling team, the Area Select team, the State Select team, Regional Camp, the National Team and finally to the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team.

But Kater didn't just play the game: She dominated it.

Coach Jim Rudy congratulates 1990 Hermann Trophy winner April Kater.

Under former UMass coach Kalekeni Banda and his up and down direct style of play, and current coach Jim Rudy and his possession-oriented and tactical style of play, she always controlled the game, especially in the air.

Kater, a senior, was acknowledged as the outstanding collegiate women's soccer player in the United States with the awarding of the 1990 Hermann Trophy yesterday at the Campus Center.

The trophy, an identical replica of the bronzed soccer ball presented to Robert Hermann for bringing professional soccer to the United States, was presented by Soccer USA Partners, an organization independent of the NCAA.

The Hermann Trophy will be presented again to Kater at the men's basketball home opener December 6 against the University of Lowell.

Kater was voted the winner by college soccer coaches and media nationwide. She is the third woman to receive the trophy since its establishment in 1988.

The center-midfielder will likely be named an All-American for the third time this year and holds the UMass career scoring record with 35 goals and 21 assists (91 points).

If the Hermann Trophy were to be redesigned for Kater's style of play, it would model No. 2 in red and white out jumping an opponent to head the ball.

But Kater's dominance in the air is only one part of her well-rounded game, Rudy said.

"April's a great attacking midfield player, and there's not too many of them," Rudy said. "But there are none in this country that can combine that flair and enthusiasm for the attack with such a domination and superiority in the air. There's not a better air player in the country.

"Athletically, she's good. Tactically, she reads the game fairly well. Technically, she's fairly good. But I think her

Jordanian kills Israeli reserve soldier

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli reserve soldier was shot to death yesterday by a man who infiltrated from Jordan, and a Palestinian man stabbed two paramilitary border policemen in Jerusalem's old, walled city, authorities said.

The fatal wounding of reserve Staff Sgt. Pinchas Levy, 37, occurred at about 2 a.m. near Adam's Bridge, a crossing point north of the town of Jericho that links the occupied West Bank to Jordan.

He was the second soldier slain in the area in a week.

The policemen stabbed in Jerusalem were both slightly wounded, police spokesperson Aharon Elhayani said.

It was the latest in a series of stabbing attacks in Jerusalem since the Oct. 8 Temple Mount shootings, in which police opened fire on Palestinian stone-throwers, killing 20 Arabs and wounding 140.

A police spokesperson said yesterday that one of the Israeli police officials criticized for his handling of the Temple Mount riots has been promoted in rank and given a new administrative post.

The official, Assistant Inspector General Arye Bibi, has been promoted to full inspector general and will become chief of personnel at national headquaters, said spokesperson Ron Ishayahu.

He had been in charge of the Jerusalem area.

Department of Defense anthrax funding ends

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Defense Department funding for anthrax research at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will end this year, following a decision by Professor Curtis Thorne last month to not renew his federal grant.

Thorne, a microbiology professor, said to the Boston Globe on Oct. 21 that "he couldn't take the harassment any longer." Thorne will be retiring from UMass in two years and said he is tired of all the campus protests against anthrax research.

Thorne worked in biochemistry and microbial genetics at its headquarters at Ft. Detrick, Md., from 1948 to 1961, and from 1963 to 1966. He said he will continue researching the anthrax virus, but on a smaller scale without Department of Defense funding.

Thorne's anthrax research, which has received $1 million in grants for the last 10 years, involved the study of the genetic and physiological traits of bacillus anthraxin, a bacteria which produces toxins used in biological warfare.

For the last five years, students and community members have questioned the government's claim that the motive for anthrax research was purely defensive.

In the spring of 1989, some 150 students took over the office of Samuel Conti, the Vice Chancellor of Graduate Research, in Lederle Graduate Tower to protest military funding on campus.

In May of 1989, six local community members were charged with trespassing in President-Chancellor Duffey's office when protesting against anthrax research.

The American Friends Service Committee, the Physician's for Social Responsibility, the Amherst Board of Health, and various student groups have also pressured the University to stop anthrax research on campus.

Frances Crowe, an AFSC leader, said they never intended to personally harrass Thorne, but only to pressure the University administration to take a strong stance against biological warfare research on campus.

Crowe said whether Thorne's anthrax research was actually defensive or not is "a difference of opinion," since the army has already developed antidotes to the anthrax virus.

Although the United States has signed an international agreement prohibiting biological warfare, Crowe said the amount of federal money used to finance biological warfare has increased six times since 1980.

"Our main objection was using germs as warfare," she said. "The AFSC is opposed to war as any sort of solution."

Sutton moved from Baystate to Mercy Hospital

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts basketball star Lorenzo Sutton was moved from Baystate Medical Center to the rehabilitation center at Mercy Hospital in Springfield, said UMass men's basketball coach John Calipari yesterday.

According to a spokesperson at Baystate Medical Center, Sutton had been moved on Oct. 30 and was in fair condition at the time. Calipari said he expects Sutton to stay in the center for another two to three weeks.

Another friend of Sutton's, Ariana Napier, said he is able to walk and talk but "he's still a little weak." She added he is "in good spirits.

"The old Lorenzo's slowly but surely coming back," she said.

Calipari agreed, and said that while Sutton feels he is ready to go home, he is still too weak to be released.

"He's very restless," he said. "He thinks he is further along than he is. He needs two to three more weeks."

Napier said, however, that some of the injuries may be permanent, and recent tests conducted at the center showed that he has accumulated some fluid on the brain. Treatment is still to be determined, she added.

Officials at Mercy Hospital refused to comment on his condition.

Sutton has been hospitalized since Sept. 23, when he was involved in a hit-and-run accident on North Pleasant Street. He spent a month in a coma, having suffered head injuries, pneumonia and a collapsed lung as a result of the accident.

Board monitors 'Gang of Five's' cuts

Affirmative Action Board: budget cuts may affect diversity

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Members of the Affirmative Action Advisory Board at the University of Massachusetts have sent letters to the "Group of Five," requesting data to monitor changes that may affect diversity because of proposed reductions and eliminations.

In a letter sent to the administrators who were part of the group that decided which programs would be reduced or eliminated, the AAAB said they would like the University to release the information in an effort to "maintain our commitment to the goal of multiculturalism."

"This is not a confrontational letter. We want to help out the University with diversity as much as we can," said AAAB co-chairperson Richard Edwards.

The AAAB is requesting the following information:

- Statistics on the racial, ethnic and gender characteristics of those employees leaving the University, either voluntarily or by layoff, broken down by faculty, professional staff and hourly workers.
- The impact of departure on the composition of the remaining staff.
- The composition of the student body, both undergraduate, by class, and graduate.
- Steps that are planned or being taken by the administration to prevent or redress disproportionate impacts on the groups which the board has "special concern" for.

Edwards said the main goal of the committee's request is to protect the University's multicultural interests by monitoring the changes taking place due to the cuts.

"This information is of enormous interest to the campus," he said.

The Provost's office could not be reached for comment.

Edwards said obtaining this information should not present problems for the administration.

Last month, students from the the Staff Development and Organizational Development programs charged the administration with discrimination in choosing to eliminate those programs due to their high minority enrollment.

The administration has denied targeting specific programs for reduction or elimination due to minority enrollment.

Educators: change education's focus

BOSTON (AP) — America's public education system should be reinvented to focus on creative thinking rather than force students to simply absorb information, according to officials at the nation's two largest teachers unions.

The present way of teaching has not changed in decades, and giving parents more say in the choice of schools and letting schools manage themselves won't affect change, some educators say.

"Radical problems require radical solutions," Adam Urbanski, vice president of the American Federation of Teachers, the second largest teachers union in the country, told the Boston Globe.

"You can't fix what's wrong with education by just making minor adjustments. As a matter of fact, the challenge is not to improve current schools but to invent schools we've never had," he said.

"We need to have children who are producers of knowledge instead of reproducers of knowledge," said Bruce Goldberg, co- director of the American Federation of Teachers' Center for Restructuring.

New England's recession projected to become worse

(AP) — New England will continue to bear the brunt of the nation's recession and losses in jobs, an economic forecasting group said yesterday.

The region will lose 104,000 of the half million non-farm jobs expected to disappear nationally between the third quarter of 1990 and the first half of next year, according to DRI-McGraw-Hill Inc.

"This is not a mild recession for New England," said Donald Walls, research director at DRI.

"The worst of it is here. It's as bad as it was in 1974 and 1975."

Walls predicted economic growth would drop 4.7 percent in the region over 11 quarters, with the decrease ending in the fourth quarter of 1991.

"In New England the decline in employment is similar to what it was in 1975," Walls said.

"Things are twice as bad here in the near term as elsewhere, and that's after having gone through six or seven quarters of job losses."

James French, the Massachusetts commissioner of employment and training, has predicted the state's unemployment rate will hit 7 percent this winter and continue to climb.

The rate is currently 6.3 percent.

In the rest of the country, the recession will be relatively mild, Walls said.

If war doesn't erupt in the Middle East, the gross national product should drop about 1.1 percent between now and the middle of the next year, he said.

The Mid-Atlantic, Midwest, and East South Central states will experience a slight recession, averaging 1 percent employment declines over three to four quarters, he said.

States in the Pacific Southwest and parts of the Northwest and the South Atlantic will experience little change in employment, Walls said.

Led by Texas, the West South Central region will even see a slight gain in jobs, he said.

"While a recession affecting nearly all states should be considered widespread, we ought to keep in mind that it is uneven in nature and on the whole mild," Walls said.

New England's economic picture won't start to brighten until early 1992, Walls said.

"Elsewhere it will start to turn around earlier, probably in the second and third quarters of 1991," he said.

Nationally, Walls said a deteriorating consumer confidence spurred by higher oil prices were the main culprits behind the recession.

But he said growing exports would help some industries through the downturn.

Walls said all predictions would have to be revised if war broke out in the Middle East.

A 19-year-old male University student received serious facial injuries during a fight with another man on the 12th floor lounge of Coolidge Residence Hall early Saturday morning, police said.

The man was first taken to University Health Services for treatment and was then transferred to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

The fight is under investigation and may result in criminal complaints being filed in Northampton District Court.

The move follows reports Bibi would be shunted aside for his handling of the Temple Mount situation. The English-language Jerusalem Post said Bibi had turned down an offer to be second-in-command in Tel Aviv and threatened to quit the force before he was given the post at national headquarters.

A government investigation into the Temple Mount killings concluded earlier this month that police were justified in firing live ammunition.

But it criticized police commanders, including Bibi, for failing to anticipate trouble and for not being on the Mount when rioting broke out.

The army said in a statement that Levy, of the Jewish settlement of Givon in the West Bank, was killed by a man in civilian clothes who opened fire with a pistol. It said the attacker was captured and was being interrogated.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Creation, not war's destruction, will solve world's problems

I was sitting in the Student Union engaging in light conversation when someone mentioned the rally that is to be held today by the Republican Club in support of troops in the Middle East. I asked if I could see the paper in which she found this. She handed me a Collegian. And, what did I see on the front page? An announcement that our 'fearless leader,' George Bush is sending 100,000 more troops over to the oil fields of Kuwait.

Mitchel Carrington

Two powerful emotions engulfed me: anger and fear. I am so angry that our political leaders are feeding the fire so that there will be a war — a war over oil, not freedom.

On top of that, we have a group of young college students that support this action.

I am fearful that if something is not done soon, one day some of the people sitting around me, or myself, might have to join the troops in the Middle East, in order to protect our nation's interest in the oil there. We may be expected not only to kill for it but, in fact, to die for it.

What is the Republican Club's point? Do they really want a war? It really scares me that young people can support the deaths of other young people, and ultimately of themselves. Do they think that by being members of the Republican Club they are excluded from being adversely affected by war? Maybe they think that by supporting our government's deployment actions, their names will not show up on the list calling them to the front lines.

If war breaks out, people will die — American people, not just the 'bad guys,' who, by the way, are mostly young people themselves. When a person dies in battle and the war rages on, 'someone' has to fill that soldier's shoes for the next battle. Is it really worth seeing other people suffer and die over oil?

Our leaders should be focusing on cleaner, more efficent fuel sources that are inexpensive and environmentally safe. They should focus on the health and welfare of all forms of life and ending the pollution that is killing them.

Our rallies should be held in support of ending the conflict in the Gulf, focusing our energy on the world in which we live. I can see no profit in supporting a system that is prepared to take the lives of human beings over oil and money. Under the guidance of the present system, pollution is at an all-time high — creating the greenhouse effect. This problem is made worse by the rapid destruction of the rainforests — another product of a greedy, short-sighted system. Poverty and homelessness run rampant, not only here but across the globe. Due to our incompetent leadership, the United States of America is up to its ears in debt. Inequality is omnipresent.

We must realize that all people of the world — rich, poor, White, Black, men, women, American and Iraqi have but one home — EARTH. If we (all of us) really applied ourselves and started to think of ourselves as one people, we could pass on to our future generations a much cleaner, safer, happier and freer world. It all starts with you.

I, for one, am going to today's rally — not to support my government or to fight with Young Republicans, but to see for myself where this group is coming from, and to express my own views on our society.

As for what you'll be doing today, at noon, I cannot say, but I hope you'll do something.

Why don't you stand up, voice your opinion, take some kind of action and concentrate on the world and the people around you? Or, it might be your turn to hold a gun and kill someone for oil.

The pluralistic pledge of the BOG

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic, for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Pledge of Allegiance

Well, you guessed it, here's my latest attempt to prove just how ridiculous the Board of Governors is.

And I'd like to prove these people, who receive about $100,000 in funds from student fees, who pay their officers and pay about six coordinators to do their work for them, are a big waste of time.

Gayle Long

They do nothing at Board meetings except play with their constitution. (One person noted that the Board changes their constitution more than Argentina).

The Board, as one person explained to me, is pretty much an autonomous group.

They are supposed to provide diverse entertainment and educational programming for the student body, maintain vending on the concourse, allocate space for RSOs and monitor the price and quality of the services in the Campus Center.

It seems like an important job. Unfortunately, I could probably count on one hand the governors who know their job and do it.

Pretty cushy for a group with that much money, don't you think?

Obviously, the Board has a hefty schedule, so answer me one question: What have they been doing for the entire semester?

They've been fighting over whether or not the pledge of allegiance should be said. Not only this, but if it should be mandatory.

Joke number one: "I do not believe in a pluralistic body," said Gov. Ted Maravelias (Collegian, Nov. 9).

Good Ted. I thought you, the defender of the Constitution, lover of America, would remember everyone in America, and not just the White male, is entitled to rights.

This, my friend, signifies a pluralistic society, and even the Board of Governors has to be somewhat pluralistic, no matter how stacked the Board is with your conservative viewpoints.

You hate pluralistic bodies? Good for you. Start your own country.

Joke number two: Other Board members wanted to say the pledges of their own nationalities. Nothing wrong with that, right? Except maybe the whole meeting will be with people saying their pledges and then be too tired to do anything else — maybe even too tired to play with that constitution.

Joke number three: Near the end of the meeting, it was suggested to the esteemed governors to bring in a globe and pledge allegiance to the world.

Hey, maybe this isn't a joke after all.

To think the open-minded governors would pledge allegiance to the world is absolutely amazing. Maybe I can help.

I will write a pledge to the world for them.

We pledge allegiance to the world, and every soul within it.

And to the people, who live on it, one planet, near Mars, environmentally destructible, with diversity and fairness for all.

I hope this helps. It should take away the stress involved with this heated and terribly vital debate.

Maybe this way, they'll get something done for the students, something realistic and tangible.

But I doubt it.

Where are my cows?

The questions addressed to President Chancellor Duffey at his recent marathon budget-cutting briefings before the faculty, staff and students covered a lot of ground. One issue that has personal importance for me, however, shamefully enough was not brought up: What is the fate of the sheep and cows formerly housed in the barn torn down to make way for the new hockey rink?

While attending graduate school at UMass in the 1980s, I found a visit to the peaceful and friendly quadrupeds a welcome relief from teaching and attending classes, and the day-to-day dealings with faculty, department chairs, deans and other bureaucrats. I always thought of them as nearly single-handedly carrying on the original mission of this land-grant university.

These days it's all too easy to forget about students, colleagues and now entire programs that are no longer a part of the University community due to another round of budget cuts. The question I must ask Duffey, then, is: What have you done with the sheep and cows? Have they been capriciously transferred to a neighboring community or state college, able to gain readmission to UMass only when the budget situation improves?

Has interim Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's regionalization plan (under which UMass resources are to be shared with other state schools) mandated their quiet relocation to somewhere else in the state? And if so, are the facilities and resources at their new home adequate for them? If and when facilities are prepared at the Horse Farm, will incoming sheep face even more strict requirements to come back here?

In solidarity with the sheep and cows and other disappeared members of the community, we should demand a public accounting of, rather than participate in a silent acquiescence to, their fate.

War brought to you by Exxon and an out-of-touch government

Congratulations to the majority of the American people. We have been awake through a large part of the Persian Gulf crisis, and my faith in human intelligence is restored. Now I'm worried about our government's intelligence.

Here's some background information for those who've been on hard drugs for the past few months: We have troops in Saudi Arabia to stop the Arabs from taking over our (whose?!) oil supply. Of course, that's not the reason George Bush, Margaret Thatcher and most of the United Nations will give.

According to these leaders of moral conduct, it is because Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait, a nation whose borders were drawn up by the British in 1922. Kuwait's sovereignty has been taken away. Their what?! A nation that is created not by the people, but by another nation, is legitimate. Sure fellas, my heart bleeds.

The American people, not being as stupid as Bush and his cabinet think they are, don't buy it. The general consensus is that a human life is worth more than a dollar-hike in gas prices.

For anyone who is interested in why Saddam invaded Kuwait in the first place, here it is: Kuwait and Iraq have oil wells on their mutual border. Kuwait, once called a "family-owned oil company with a flag" by the New York Times, was producing so much oil that the price of oil went down.

Considering the fact that Iraq was recovering from a bloody, savage war with Iran (a war where we were backing Iraq, by the way), they needed all the cash they could get. So they tried talking it out. Even OPEC wasn't too pleased with Kuwait; every Middle-Eastern, oil-producing nation was affected. But the royal family of Kuwait would have none of it. They felt very comfortable, being backed by Western mammoth corporations.

Pamela McCarthy

So Saddam lost his temper.

Granted, it is not commendable, but we all know that the United States is in no position to judge when it comes to threatening a country's sovereignty. At least Saddam was open about it. The CIA starts trouble in countries that are to the left of Adolf Hitler. This didn't stop our Commander-in-chief (as well as Exxon, Texaco and Gulf, to name a few) from throwing guns at enlisted soldiers, while clutching the corporate wallet and counting the cash.

The outcry from the American people was huge. There have been protests, with citizens openly speaking against what our government is doing. Pick up any newspaper or magazine, and go to the editorial section. There are few rah-rah America letters there. This is the one issue that may unite the right and left.

So why does George keep the troops in the Gulf?

This is a democratic system, isn't it? Oh, that's right. Corporate voting is the new fad for America. It is not land of the free; it's land of the major stockholder. It's not one person, one vote; it's one dollar, one vote.

It's ironic that while our elected officials espouse the democracy of America, they suddenly have to adjust their hearing aids when the voice of America rises in protest.

This is not the country that we thought it was. We have shown our rage at what's going on, but reading the news articles featured every day and listen to leaders such as Bush, you'd think we haven't uttered a peep. The Western governments of the world have condemned Saddam. Many of them are getting ready to fight.

But it's people who have to do the fighting. And George, if I were you, I wouldn't put a gun in the hands of someone who doesn't want to fight.

ARTS & LIVING

Dreams dissolves amidst its own imagery

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

Akira Kurosawa's Dreams begins by casting a wonderful spell with plump images filled with glorious colors, earthy textures and fine mists of dew and ash. The film is so big and robust (it presents itself like a child's plastic snowball), you almost want to laugh with delight; and it stays strong throughout the first two segments (there are eight in all) before it gradually loses its legs under the weight of Kurosawa's morality.

Essentially Kurosawa is trying to get extended mileage off of rehashed themes by using them to buttress his majestic compositions, and it just doesn't work. Episodes involving a weeping demon cursing man's stupidity in a post-apocalyptic world and a beguiling old man who preaches about coexistence with nature come across as forced and homiletic, while a pointless segment featuring Martin Scorsese as Van Gogh gets lost in its contrived imagery.

Visually the film gets off on the right foot with the first two segments, both featuring children. There's a serenity to Kurosawa's images of two small boys; one enchanted by a slow procession of mystical figures through a rain forest, the other enraptured by the mournful dance of the spirits of a decimated peach grove.

It's in these first two segments that Dreams captures the mood that Kurosawa was aiming at for the entirety of the film: fantastic picturesque worlds defined by their own sets of laws and logic, marked by abrupt shifts in movement and location.

Part of the beauty lies in Kurosawa's complete reliance on the naturalness of his settings (lush gardens and magical rain forests) in the composition of his poetic vision. The spell is achieved by the meditative dance between the camera and the elements within the frame, achieving a grace and fluidity that convincingly suspends our trust and belief in the rational and logical.

Then, beginning with the third installment, Kurosawa's direction goes horribly wrong: his camera bogs down as the natural elements of his locales are overrun by tawdry optical effects (the film was financed by Steven Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment and George Lucas' Industrial Light and Magic) and his poetry succumbs to homily. Every time Kurosawa tries to make a a humanitarian statement, he falls flat on his face. His desire to speak with urgency and simplicity about the fallibility of humankind comes across as forced and naive. It's disheartening to

URI fraternity pledge accused of rape

Providence, R.I. (AP) — Right after the fraternity party the young woman could remember it all so clearly: A pledge had raped her as several others watched, she told police.

A week and a half later her memory failed. But by then, one youth who had been at the party was dying, an apparent suicide, and another had been held without bail for a week in prison, accused of a rape he denies committing.

"It's just a big mess," said Sandra Wall, 21, who writes for the University of Rhode Island newspaper. "I want to hold somebody responsible but it's a tragedy . . . There really is no answer and there is nobody to blame."

Michael Lindell, 20, never a suspect in the alleged rape Oct. 27 at the Tau Kappa Epsilon house at the University of Rhode Island, died Wednesday at a hospital after shooting himself in the head at his parents' home, where he lived.

Hours earlier, Dave Lallemand, 19, who was charged with the rape but maintained his innocence, was freed when his accuser said she had forgotten the details.

Pawtucket police Monday disclosed a note that was found at Lindell's home.

"It was a very vague note and I would not necessarily term it a suicide note," said detective Lt. Thomas Harris. He wouldn't elaborate.

Harris said Lindell, a former URI student who knew members of the fraternity, knew state police wanted to question him about what he saw at the party.

Investigators haven't said whether they were linking his death to the alleged rape. State Police Lt. Brian Andrews said detectives have concluded their investigation and will present the evidence to a grand jury.

Neither Lallemand nor his accuser could be reached for comment Monday. There was no answer at the woman's dorm room. Lallemand was not at his parents' home in Westford, Mass., where he abruptly returned on Sunday.

"We really don't know what happened," said Brady of Albany, N.Y. "We're not saying nothing happened . . . We can't really fit things together."

The woman, an 18-year-old freshman, told police she was raped in an upstairs bedroom at TKE in South Kingston by a man she met that evening.

Police interviewed her three times within hours of the incident. She said her attacker wore a TKE pledge pin. She immediately identified the 6-foot-7 Lallemand when shown pictures of the 21 fraternity pledges, police said.

Emergency Arab summit to be discussed

By BRIAN MURPHY
The Associated Press

Iraq sent President Saddam Hussein's closest aide to Morocco yesterday to discuss its call for an emergency Arab summit, keeping hopes alive for a diplomatic break in the Persian Gulf crisis.

Meanwhile, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt made a surprise trip to Libya for talks with leader Moammar Gadhafi before leaving for the Moroccan capital of Rabat.

Iraq's First Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan said he was carrying a letter from Sadduxorocan leader, King Hassan II, noting the "dangers facing the Arabs" by the gulf crisis, the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

Morocco has contributed 1,700 troops to the multinational force that has massed in the Saudi desert following Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, but the nation has maintained contact with the Iraqi leadership.

Ramadan said Baghdad "supports any serious Arab effort on any level that will serve the interests of the Arab nation."

But he said Arab summits "should not be forums at which the American Pentagon's policies are translated into Arabic."

He repeated the three conditions Iraq has set for attending such a meeting:

- Iraq be consulted in advance on the agenda
- The timing and location be chosen so that Saddam will be able to attend
- The agenda also include all Middle East issues, including the Palestinian question.

Saddam has insisted on tying his withdrawal from Kuwait to Israel's pulling back from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Mubarak, who has previously rejected Arab summit proposals, was met yesterday by Gadhafi in the Libyan seaside town of Sirte, 250 miles east of Libya's capital, Tripoli, the Egyptian Middle East News Agency reported.

Egypt has not responded officially to Morocco's call. A senior Foreign Ministry official said on Monday that Egypt was still studying the issue.

The agenda of the Mubarak-Gadhafi talks was not immediately clear, but the two leaders have been on opposite ends of the crisis.

Mubarak has been at the forefront of Arab opposition to Saddam. Gadhafi has opposed the Iraqi invasion but also harshly criticized the presence of Western troops in Saudi Arabia.

A senior government official in Egypt said on Monday that Egypt was still studying Morocco's Arab summit call.

PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Quchen met Monday in Baghdad and supported the call for an Arab summit.

Despite hopes for a diplomatic settlement, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said military action may be necessary if U.N.-backed economic sanctions against Iraq fail to force Saddam to withdraw from Kuwait.

The United States has deployed 230,000 troops in Saudi Arabia as part of a more than 300,000-strong multinational force arrayed against Iraq, and Bush last week announced plans to send about 200,000 more soldiers.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar told Japanese leaders yesterday that it will be difficult to solve the gulf crisis peacefully and that there was little room for him to negotiate.

Perez de Cuellar, in Tokyo to attend Emperor Akihito's enthronement Monday, discussed the gulf situation in separate meetings with Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu and Foreign Minister Taro Nakayama.

Play exposes racism, Hollywood stereotypes

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

Yankee Daug You Die
Fine Arts Center
Thursday, Nov. 8

Last week's New World Theatre presentation of Yankee Dawg You Die, a play about two Asian American actors' struggle in Hollywood, performed to a captivated audience with its humorous insights into Asian and Asian American stereotypes, dry wit in dealing with generation gaps, and dramatic scenes revealing the harsh realities of racism in Hollywood.

Yankee Dawg you Die, written by Philip Kan Gotanda, is a roller coaster ride with moments of drop dead laughter and intense thought provoking moments which confront the audience's community awareness and honesty.

Vincent Chang is a veteran actor who thinks he is a leading man, although he usually ends up in two-bit roles that are demeaning to Asian American people. Bradley Yamashita is a young and (so he thinks) rising actor who is "socially aware" and refuses to take part in such demeaning roles. As the play progresses, the two actors develop an understanding and relationship which comes full circle. By the end of the play each actor has taken on the other's characteristics.

Review

As Vincent and Bradley get to know each other, we learn from their experiences the history of obstacles which Asian Americans had to overcome, and are still facing today.

"You seem to assume 'Asian Americans' always existed. That there were always roles for you. You didn't exist back then buster. Back then there was no Asian American consciousness, no Asian American actor and no Asian American theaters," says Vincent.

The play also touches upon the history of the Asian American community. "I'm talking 120,000 Japanese Americans being set-up, knocked down, in a cheap game of political hit-and-run. I'm talking 120,000 men, women, children, babies, ojiisans and obaasans being forced out of their homes. Being kicking off their lands. Being herded into relocation camps. Relocation camps? Hah! I'm talking concentration camps. . .," says Bradley.

Although Bradley came to Hollywood with an Asian American consciousness, the business had inevitably compromised him. Vincent, on the other hand, who had lived through the business and "paid his dues" now renewed his values and turned down a two-bit role.

Lane Nishikawa as Vincent, and David Kim as Bradley, both from the Asian American Theater Company in San Francisco, gave outstanding performances.

Yankee Dawg not only is timely but it holds relevance to other racially oppressed actors in Hollywood. And the play goes beyond Hollywood being in itself a reflection of American society yesterday and today.

When Bradley spoke of the Japanese internment it was a reminder of the genocidal policies on the Native American community. And the obstacles Vincent and Bradley are up against in Hollywood are the same obstacles which all people of color face in other American institutions today, whether it be in theater, business or in the University

Mojo and Milkmen were a fun time for all

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Dead Milkmen, Mojo Nixon, The Cavedogs
Pearl Street
Monday, Nov. 12

"Censorship is bullshit!" reaps a beer lubricated Mojo Nixon as he holds a bottle of Budweiser and spews it all over the audience (and my press book). And of course, the crowd goes nuts, suddenly bellowing the chant.

Mojo has always subtly pissed authority figures off, from Jesse Helms, to MTV VJs, and I've continued to have a soft spot for him no matter how bad some of his material can be.

The last time I saw him perform was outdoors at Hampshire College last spring, when he was just strummin' on the "Geetaar" and his counterpart was thumpin' wood against the ground that made such a lovely homemade sound I thought he was playing in my living room or something.

But tonight, the all-ages crowd had loads of fun. The usual mix of slammers, glammers, and anti-MC Hammers went nuts over the whole procession, as I expected. And as much as I respect Mojo, sometimes his material is painfully predictable.

But it wasn't until he broke into his new — and possibly most brilliant — tune, "New Kids on the Block Suck Satan's Cock" sent me into a dancing frenzy. He was nice, polite, and full of obscenities, even making references to the ID crisis which he considers to be more of an important issue than the oil crisis. All in all, he was nothing short of boring.

Review

Which is what I wish I could say for the Dead Milkmen. Even vodka didn't help this time. Here I was, utterly desperate for entertainment, and I thought these boys would at least make me laugh. At times they did, but it wasn't as regaling as I had hoped.

I'm surrounded by at least 300 16-year-olds innocently boppin' along to what was a far cry from suggestive material, wishing I had access to that bottle of Courvoisier I left in the parking lot. The only difference between them and Social Distortion was that during that gig you laughed at them, simply because you couldn't take them seriously.

In this case, I had this half-assed grin (sort of like the grin you sport when someone you like shows you a piece of their wretched art work).

This, plus the combination of the gig goers, made for a frustrating evening. Not to mention they performed the worst material from their latest platter Metaphysical Graffiti, which is certainly not what you would call a fine achievement. The nicest part of it was at least I didn't have to show an ID at the door to prove that I wasn't dropped out of a goddamn U.F.O.

Unfortunately, I must apologize to the Cavedogs for having missed their set. One thing about Pearl Street — when they say show starts at 7:30 p.m., they mean it. Of course, having gone to shows there before I should have known this, thus there was no excuse. I'll get to you guys the next time you play. And show up on time!

If either of these makes your pulse race, talk to us.

Having to get a real job isn't so bad.

Not when there's a place where the people get as pumped up about technology as you do.

A place where you work on real stuff right away. And red tape and bureaucracy are kept away.

Of course, there is a catch. We only want software and hardware professionals who like to be on the leading edge of high technology.

That's because our business is helping other high tech companies develop and produce tomorrow's products.

We're involved in electronic design automation, automatic test equipment, telecommunications test, and custom connections. All four of our businesses are market leaders.

Our work environment is, well, collegiate. And among other great benefits, we offer an educational assistance plan with 100% reimbursement—up front.

So talk to us. Or settle for a job that may turn out to be just work.

wins. But though their record may leave them with a bad taste lingering on their tongues, they were more successful on the court than on paper, and are still a young team.

The Minutewomen now look to next season to turn things around, and Ford said she sees recruiting players who can really put the ball away as the biggest factor.

"I've got a job ahead of me," she said. "We need to get the team back up to the level we were at two years ago."

One player already on board who Ford said she sees as a major factor in turning the program around is freshman Angie Palaucci.

"She's going to be the difference between qualifying and not qualifying next season in the A-10s," Ford said.

endurance, because she trains all the time, and the fact that she has no bad health habits allows her to sustain when others fail."

Speaking about her early soccer days, Kater said, "I think I went with the flow. The more opportunities I saw, I went after. I saw that there was an opportunity at Regional Camp — if I train my butt off, maybe I'll make that. . . ."

Her parents, George and Vicki, were also very supportive of Kater's efforts in soccer.

"I couldn't have asked for better soccer parents," Kater beamed. "They were soccer junkies. They bought a big van to take me to tournaments and tryouts. They were always like, 'If that's what you want to do, then we'll be supportive.'"

What makes Kater a great player is not only her athletic ability (she earned 11 high school letters in soccer, basketball and softball at Mendham) but also her blue-collar work ethic and her determination to succeed.

"The steps that I took weren't just because I was more skilled than other players," Kater said, "but I made the extra effort and steps to get to the next level, where as other people would be partying or hanging out.

"To me, soccer was my party — it was my fun."

Though she entered high school with high hopes as a basketball player, Kater soon realized that soccer was her sport.

While at Regional Camp in Amherst, Kater came in contact with then-UMass coach Kalekeni Banda. Later, the school's reputation as a women's soccer power helped when she narrowed her choice of colleges between UMass and North Carolina State.

But it was academics that led Kater to attend the University.

"[UMass] had what I wanted: Sports Management," Kater said. "That's always been my field of interest, sports. Whether it's on the field or off, I want to stay involved with it."

Kater applies that same work ethic from soccer to her academics. In 1989 she was named to the Adidas Scholar Athlete Soccer All-American team.

She well-remembers her first season, when UMass lost to North Carolina, 1-0, in the national championship game at Amherst and finished with a 20-2 record.

As the only freshman starter on what many call the greatest UMass team in history, Kater scored 10 goals and assisted on five others for 25 points, and was named Soccer America's Freshman of the Year.

"It was an unbelievable year," Kater said. "I think just the experience of playing on a team that went to the national championship, to the final game. . . more and more, I wanted other players to experience that.

"That's why I wanted so badly to go to the NCAAs this year and the Final Four last year, because it's the only way to experience that."

UMass did not receive a playoff bid following this year's 10-5-2 season, and Kater was denied a chance to lead the Minutewomen to the NCAAs.

"It was pretty hard . . . really tough," Kater said. "More so because we worked so hard during the season and offseason. Everybody was great and we had a lot of fun, which made it a little easier to accept.

"But it would have been so much sweeter if we had even just gotten a playoff bid. Because I know if we had gotten one, we would have done something just like last year, when we went a little farther than everybody thought."

April Kater was awarded the Hermann Trophy, given annually to the best player in collegiate women's soccer, yesterday.

Kater chose to low-key the moment when she passed Cathy Spence to become UMass' all-time leading career scorer.

"During the season, you're concentrating on reaching the playoffs," Kater said. "Those little things, like breaking the scoring record are extras. Those are honors that shouldn't be overlooked, but sometimes they can be obstacles if you focus too much on them. That can be something you talk about after the season, but right now, you're here to play for your teammates and for the school."

With her collegiate career over, Kater said she would like to play for the U.S. National Team in the first women's World Cup, to be played next year in China.

"It would be a dream of mine to play, but I don't know how realistic it is right now," Kater said. "I've had a couple of opportunities to tryout for the National Team and I still think I'm in the pool [of the top 25 players]. . . but it would take a lot of time and effort from me to even get a foot in the door. They're really serious at that level and I don't know if I have what they want. But all I can do is keep trying."

Water polo's season ends at tourney

By JOE DEGLORIA
Collegian Correspondent

It was a disappointing end to a great season for the University of Massachusetts water polo team last weekend at the Eastern Championships.

When UMass lost to Harvard 11-9 in the first round, any chances of a National Championship bid were gone. UMass had beaten Harvard the week before at the New England Championships.

UMass lost a great part of its offense in the second quarter of the event when senior Alex Yelansky tore his rotator cuff, ending his season.

"Losing Alex killed us, he was our second-leading scorer and it was tough for us from then on," said coach Russ Yarworth.

UMass and Harvard were tied at 7-7 at the end of regulation play. UMass scored first in the three-minute overtime period, and then had two fastbreak chances come up empty.

Harvard threw in two quick goals and it was pretty much over for UMass. UMass did score near the end of the period, but Harvard put in a open-net goal to ice the victory.

"We did not play as well as we did the week before. We were flat," Yarworth said. I think that maybe the team was looking ahead a little bit and that combined with what happened to Alex really killed us."

UMass went into the losers bracket and beat Arkansas, then lost to Iona, 15-12.

"It was hard for us to get up for the Iona game after the Harvard loss, and it didn't seem they really wanted to play," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen finished as the No. 13 ranked team in the country, and won "respect" in the national water polo picture.

"I cannot complain about the season. It was right there for us and we had the opportunities.

"I feel confident of next year's team and I'm looking forward to next season"

Senior Jon Miller, who scored 12 goals in the tournament, broke the single-season UMass scoring record. Miller scored 76 times this season and assisted on 32 others, and also led the team in steals with 38.

Miller was named on the first team of the All-East.

Volleyball loss ends long season

By FELICE COHEN

What a long strange trip it's been.

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team ended its agonizing 4-29 season last night, losing to Northeastern 10-15, 9-15, 4-15.

The match was typical of UMass' season, said coach Carol Ford. "We were leading at one point 8-0 and then we just blew it."

The Minutewomen played well, but were not at their best, especially in the first game when they couldn't get their offense going, Ford said.

"We were cold, but Northeastern wasn't that good either, just solid."

In the second game UMass didn't seem to play any better, Ford said. "We needed more intensity. We just started making a lot of dumb mistakes."

As abruptly as it approached, the third game left in the same fashion. "We had no momentum," Ford said. "We just couldn't get going."

The Minutewomen have struggled all season for

Minutemen bid to host NCAA game

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will be in the Division I-AA playoffs; that much is known. Where, when, and against whom remains a mystery.

The Minutemen (8-0-1, 7-0 in the Yankee Conference) clinched the Yankee Conference winner's automatic berth to the playoffs Saturday with a 3-0 victory over Villanova.

Who the Minutemen will play in the first round November 24, and whether they will host the game at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, will be announced by the NCAA Sunday.

The NCAA formula for deciding game sites takes into account national rankings, likely weather conditions, previous experience staging NCAA tournament events, and "enthusiasm," among other things.

The numbers point to UMass hosting the game: UMass is currently the fourth ranked team in country, with the final game of the regular season Saturday at New Hampshire. McGuirk Alumni Stadium was the site of a 1977 playoff game between UMass and Lehigh, and in recent years, UMass has hosted lacrosse, women's soccer and field hockey NCAA tournament games.

'Enthusiasm,' if measured by attendance, could hurt UMass' chances. The Minutemen averaged just 6,209 fans a game this fall as two stormy Saturday's kept fans away.

According to Associate Athletic Director Elaine Sortino, the University has already submitted a bid to the NCAA to host the November 24 game.

David Mitchell has carried 110 consecutive times without being stopped for a loss. . . Key to Marco Gabrielli's game-winning field goal Saturday was a clean snap by freshman snapper Karl Russel. . . Eric Thimas is averaging 15.3 yards per kickoff return. . . Linebacker Bobby Burke leads the team with 62 tackles. . . Cornerback Don Caparotti has been upgraded to "doubtful" for Saturday's game. Caparotti has been out since spraining an ankle against Connecticut on October 13.

Republicans: 'Support troops'

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Insults and threats flew yesterday on the Student Union steps as members of the Republican Club rallied in support of the U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf. Over 250 students, supporters and protestors attended the rally despite blustery temperatures.

But temperatures rose soon after when two protestors tried to affix a banner to the podium where Republican Club President Glen Caroline was speaking, and supporters of the Club, along with words from Caroline, kept the protestors from their goal.

Caroline called the Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait by Iraq's Saddam Hussein an "overt, naked act of aggression." He also went on to say that Iraq, since the takeover of Kuwait, controls 80 percent of the world oil supply.

"Saddam will take the extra revenue [from the oil money] not to invest on social programs, but to quicken their nuclear capabilities," said Caroline.

After asking the crowd, "If you were called, would you go?," Caroline also commented on the protestors, saying "liberals, who reap all the benefits, give zip back to the country."

Bush is trying to get Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait, said Caroline, and "bashers [of the United States and its policies] are hypocritical, as the United States gives the people the greatest freedom on earth."

Caroline ended by saying, "I favor world peace, by stopping Saddam Hussein."

Another speaker, Ed Corrigan, said he felt the people of the United States "should start to show a little more character and a little more support for our country."

Corrigan said he believed if the Iraqis had a nuclear missile right now they would "send it over."

Guy Glodis, a member of the Board of Governors, called the invasion of Kuwait, "a blatant attack against a free country." He said the role of the United States, "the leader of the free world," was to stop Saddam and that the "evil empire of Iraq was more evil than the Soviet Union ever was."

UMass, said Glodis, is a "breeding ground for communism." He also said these "communists" were enemies of American democracy.

"They want us to roll over and let the communists take over," he said.

Speaking to one of the protesters, Glodis said, "I'm not going to let you speak because you are not worthy."

Showing his disgust for the protestors, Glodis finished by saying, "Go burn an American flag. It's people like you who'll bring our great democracy down." In response, protestors began chanting, "One people, one planet."

Another supporter of the rally, Pat Sitaraman, said, "Saddam has to be bombed."

Write on Gulf conflict

One student group has taken a creative response to the conflict in the Persian Gulf — an essay contest.

The University of Massachusetts Adhoc Coalition on the Middle East Crisis is sponsoring an essay writing contest in which participants are asked to write an essay about the Gulf crisis, comparing the situation to a game of chicken.

Rashid Sheedfar, a member of the Coalition, said the organization is not supporting Saddam Hussein, but wants the United States to seek a peaceful way to resolve the conflict in the Gulf.

He said the essay writing contest is a logical way to promote this idea. "People from academia have always been at the forefront of the war and peace debate," he said.

Sheedfar said the group is offering a prize of $20 or a recently published book of the same value. Essays should be no longer than 250 words and turned in to Student Union Box 219 by Nov. 17.

Panel: Mideast war likely

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

At a panel discussion held last night, three specialists on the Middle East discussed the vast historical roots of the Middle East crisis and asked the audience to ask themselves what war would mean for them personally.

David Finkel, editor of Against the Current, joined two other speakers in denouncing the historical role of the United States and the Western powers in the Middle East, and especially Western intervention in the current crisis. Finkel put the chance of war at 75 percent and said if war broke out a draft was inevitable.

"The U.S. engine of economic domination is winding down [and] the U.S. is now unable to dominate through its economic muscle, and, therefore, must dominate militarily. If you want the U.S. to rule the world, you or your brother or sister or somebody you know will have to die for it," he said.

Samir Abed Rabo, a professor at Keene State College and the author of several books on the Middle East, sees U.S. intervention as a continuation of the "colonial legacy."

During colonial times, which ended in the 1960s, 22 Arab states were created and puppet governments, often corrupt and oppressive, were installed and supported by Western powers, Rabo said.

The constant wars and border disputes between these artificially created countries forced the Arab states to depend on Western powers for financial and military support. In return, the West, primarily the U.S., received military bases, cheap oil and good capital investments, he said.

In this argument, along with the fact that Kuwait was historically a part of Iraq, lies the "historical merit" of Saddam's invasion, Rabo said.

Professor Karen Pfeifer, of Smith College, who was in Jordan at the time of the invasion, said that most people she met were in favor of Saddam's invasion and that they were "very hostile to U.S. presence in their neighboring countries."

Jobs focus of Gulf action

Economic woes if Kuwait held, officials say

By CHRISTOPHER BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Challenged by congressional leaders over its new war footing, the Bush administration has begun to emphasize that American jobs could be at risk if Saddam Hussein is allowed to maintain his grip on Kuwait.

"The economic lifeline of the industrial world runs from the (Persian) Gulf and we cannot permit a dictator such as this to sit astride that economic lifeline," Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Tuesday.

"To bring it down to the level of the average American citizen, let me say that means jobs."

Baker suggested that a worldwide economic recession could result if Saddam is not checked and the security of Gulf oil reserves ensured.

He spoke after meeting in Bermuda with Canada's Internal Affairs Minister, Joe Clark, who voiced support for a U.S.-sponsored United Nations resolution authorizing the use of military force to oust Iraqi forces from Kuwait.

More allied soldiers and hardware may be on their way to join the U.S. expeditionary force that has gathered in the Saudi desert as the chief challenger to Saddam.

The Times of London reported yesterday that Britain is expected to send an additional 6,000 troops and more than 100 additional tanks to the Gulf, increasing its ground forces there to 15,500 and its tanks to more than 220.

The Bush administration has indicated that it will attack Iraqi forces to dislodge them from Kuwait, which Saddam seized on Aug. 2, if a U.N.-ordered embargo on trade with Iraq and saber-rattling fail.

That position is encountering resistance from some allies abroad and some leading members of Congress who accuse the president of showing too much of an inclination to resort quickly to the military option.

Bush last week decided to send 200,000 more troops to the Persian Gulf to boost the 230,000 American G.I.s already there, putting U.S. forces on an offensive footing.

On Tuesday, key Democratic and Republican senators asked him to convene an emergency session of Congress to discuss the administration's Gulf policy.

The White House quickly called such a session unnecessary. Said Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater: "There is no war."

In other developments:

- Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark, concluding an independent peace mission to Baghdad, said Iraq had agreed to release four Americans from the hundreds held hostage by Iraq.
- The Pentagon said U.S. Marines would conduct their first amphibious assault exercise since being deployed in the region. Spokesman Pete Williams would not say when or exactly where the exercise would be held.

LSC litigation plan sent to Trustees

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

A committee of student leaders and administrators finalized yesterday a cooperative legal dispute resolution proposal for students which includes the restoration of limited litigation rights to the Legal Services Center.

The plan, drafted by the Dispute Resolution Committee, will be presented to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees for their endorsement in early December.

In order to approve the proposal, the trustees would have to revoke its 1987 decision to rescind all litigation rights from the Legal Services Center.

The goal of the committee stated in the proposal was to provide students with various alternate means to solve disputes on campus, such as arbitration, mediation, negotiation and use of an ombudsperson so that the University will not add to the case burden of the court system.

"[This proposal] is a testament to what the students and the administration can do together when they try to understand each other's position," said Student Trustee Angus McQuilken, a member of the committee.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson said that, despite "adversial things" which have been said in the past over the litigation rights issue, the process behind this most recent proposal "went well with honest, straightforward discussion."

Madson said he would begin to discuss this proposal with Provost O'Brien, President-Chancellor Duffey and the University Legal Counsel, William Searson.

"We can provide better [problem solving] services for students if we coordinate as in this proposal with restricted litigation as a last resort," Madson said.

The limited litigation ability of the Legal Services Center, as stated in the proposal, "will be undertaken only after exhausting appropriate alternative dispute resolution mechanisms."

The proposal recommends the following to improve alternate problem-solving methods on campus.

- The Mediation Project, which is a part of the Dean of Students Office, should be revitalized as mediation, a way to define a dispute and to arrive at a mutually acceptable solution for both parties, is the first designated step for alternative dispute solving in the proposal.
- A Dispute Resolution Advisory Committee, comprised of one representative from various campus offices and organizations, should be established to develop an effective and efficient system for resolving student conflicts.
- The Board of Trustees should recognize the Legal Services Board, a governing board created by students to set the case policy for Legal Services, as a body to make recommendations and set case priorities based on periodic assessment of student need.
- The Legal Services Center should be authorized by the trustee to litigate as a last resort in the following types of cases: landlord/tenant, consumer matters and civil rights cases prior to filing. The Legal Services Office may not litigate against the University or its agencies and officers and against the Town of Amherst or any other municipality.
- If a case handled by Legal Services is taken to court, the student should pay for all court costs as "an added incentive for student clients to avoid taking their disputes to court."

The Dispute Resolution Committee has developed the proposal over the course of this semester. The committee members are the following: Dan Chesnicka, Student Government Association speaker of the senate; Natasha Diephuis, SGA president; Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson; Charles DiMare, the directing attorney of Legal Services; Jo-Anne Vanin, dean of students; Grant Ingle, director of Human Relations; and staff from the Ombuds Office and Student Affairs.

Racial incident sparks anger

MHC president calls incident 'mortifying'

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY – Mount Holyoke College President Elizabeth Kennan responded sharply this week to an incident in which a man urinated on the door of the room of two of the school's students, calling the act "mortifying."

In a letter released to residents of Mead Hall, Kennan said, "Students have moved a long way in their comprehension that racism is a fact of life."

The letter comes in response to an incident on Oct. 28 in which a visiting Coast Guard cadet, who was described as intoxicated, urinated on the door of the room of two Black students living in Mead Hall.

According to Danique Day, co-chair of the Association of Pan-African Unity and one of five women in the room at the time of the incident, no one in the dorm showed concern for the incident.

Day said the incident is not isolated, adding that there have been many racial incidents on campus, but it has taken last month's incident to bring the problem to the attention of the school's administration.

"This incident has brought up a lot of issues on campus," Day said.

In a statement released by the APAU, the organization condemned Mount Holyoke administrators for their handling of the incident. "We feel that the Department of Security failed as an effective force on campus safety," the statement said.

Kennan said that all Mount Holyoke students should be concerned with what occurred.

"This is not a lesson for Mead Hall alone, and indeed that dormitory has probably progressed beyond many of us in understanding," she wrote. "It is a lesson for all of us so that this can continue to be a caring and honorable community."

The APAU, however, said it feels that the administration's actions against the man came too late.

"Although the Dean of Students Office has since taken disciplinary action on both the offender and his hostesses, the exigency of the incident was not immediately recognized," the association's statement said. "Thus, we question the commitment that Mount Holyoke has made to a multiracial community free of discrimination."

Graduate students win landslide unionization vote

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Graduate students overwhelmingly approved unionizing in the results of yesterday's Graduate Employee Organization election.

The election proved to be a landslide victory for pro-union voters, with 1,204 voting 'yes,' in favor of unionization, and 393 casting a 'no' vote.

As a result of the election, the GEO is now affiliated with District 65 of the United Auto Workers. Graduate employee representatives will now have the power to negotiate contracts, said GEO spokesperson Renee Heberle.

"We can now negotiate a contract for graduate employees. We have legal legitimacy through the election," she said.

Negotiating contracts is not all they will do, Herberle said. "We intend to do the same work we've done before," she said.

This includes fighting budget cuts and the spring fee hike. According to Heberle, the union will give graduate students substantial clout in dealing with the Statehouse and the University administration.

She said one of the ways they will fight the spring fee hike is by finding alternate ways of saving money. "We are working with other unions to develop alternatives with them," Heberle said, citing many union and employees' worries about pay cuts and job layoffs.

While it may seem strange that graduate employees are now affiliated with the UAW, Heberle said a wide variety of workers and professionals are represented by the auto workers' union.

"It's the graduate employees who have organized – UAW will offer its support," she said.

Heberle said the election victory is an important message for the campus in general. "This election will send a message to people on campus that, as an organized voice, [they can accomplish something]."

'You just don't understand'

Prof speaks on conversation between sexes

By LARS KROIJER
Collegian Correspondent

At a lecture held last night at the Campus Center Auditorium entitled "You Just Don't Understand," Dr. Deborah Tannen spoke on the difficulty in conversation between men and women.

According to Tannen, it is very important go back to childhood to understand the behavior of adults in connection with the other gender.

"Sometimes when you are talking to people of the other gender you feel like you are talking to someone in an other world, and you are," she said.

Small girls tend to sit together with their best friend and tell secrets where boys rather are in larger groups with a hierarchy of status among them. The way these boys achieve a higher status is often through talking and outdoing each other.

"When at a later age the woman wants to speak to their husband like they used to with their best friend, they feel neglected," Tannen said.

Tannen, a professor at Georgetown University, argued that this is due to the fundamental differences created at childhood.

"Often a man feels that he does not have to prove his abilities at home and is, therefore, often not as outspoken as he is outside the home," Tannen said.

A woman often expects the same type of friendship they had as children but this would only seem "unnatural" to the man, she added.

One of the problems is that we often expect our partners to be like ourselves. "There is no better way to communicate but we will have to respect each other's cultural differences," Tannen said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

We have a serious need to lighten up

Have you had enough of over-serious zealots who can't take a joke?

Do people who can't look at themselves and laugh occasionally bother you?

Are you frustrated by those who read the Halloween issue of the Collegian and feel the need to write an editorial response?

Steven Schwankert

Well, next semester I'd like to teach a course that will focus on these types of people. The class title is Lighten-Up 101. You won't find it in your course guide and it doesn't have a schedule number or room, so don't get up at 5:30 to add it during Add/Drop.

However, I do have a syllabus prepared which follows below:

First meeting: Overview of course; definition of terms such as fanatic, extremist and monomaniac.

Second meeting: Discussion of various leftist and rightist groups and possible answers as to why they believe that they are intensely correct and serious, and why the rest of the campus thinks they're a joke.

Third meeting: Focus on the various races and ethnic groups and what makes them think that they are so innately superior that there is nothing humorous about their culture and heritage.

Fourth meeting: This session will concentrate on the textbook definition of "open-minded" and how at the University of Massachusetts it often has a completely opposite meaning.

Of course, this is not a real class. And, what's even worse, there shouldn't even be a remote need for such a thing. Unfortunately, many here in the Happy Valley have lost their sense of humor.

When people or groups can no longer laugh at themselves, they lose their objectivity about their causes and become consumed with the idea that they are unquestionably right.

This is a university. We have come here to gain knowledge not only from our professors, our textbooks and our laboratories, but from the exchange of ideas with the people around us as well. Only through dialogue can this successfully take place. But dialogue means speaking and listening, and I emphasize the latter.

Too often on this campus, we see demonstrations and counter-demonstrations which accomplish nothing, because those involved fail to communicate and rather try to scream their opponent into submission.

The result is that, instead of us trying to educate ourselves and form our own opinion, we get fed up and ignore it altogether. Look at how much attention used to be paid to the Student Government Association, and how little people care today.

No one is right about everything all the time. Our mistakes and failures shape us as much as our successes do. We shouldn't be afraid to fail nor should there be a constant need to be correct.

There is humor and levity in all of us and in everything we do. Don't miss the punch line in all of our lives.

Empowerment not worth the hassle

In four years, I have yet to see what the Student Government Association has actually done. I read that some of them spoke against budget cuts. Big deal — nobody likes budget cuts. Every year the SGA performs the only job that is seems qualified to do — budget the $2 million called the Student Activities Trust Fund. Even this task is poorly executed and money can't buy you power — the LSO still has no power; WMUA must have pledge drives to subsidize its budget; the Collegian is self-supporting; and B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation receives no SATF at all.

Mark B. Adler

The SGA hires the Student Activities Office act as a kind of "watchdog" over the SATF, and yet the SAO spends over $10 on labor per purchase order (despite the cost of the P.O.) checking to see if Registered Student Organizations are violating the rules. The SAO advisors help us organize events. Their accountants make sure that nobody in the RSO is embezzling funds.

A large part of the SATF goes to salaries. We pay them. I have a radical idea: instead of getting paid for their work, the SGA should be composed of volunteers paying $10 a week (like dues) to fool with my money. The SGA should not be a resume feature. The SGA is not practice for the real world; that was for high school student council. Two million bucks is the real world. Do these jokers actually go to class?

The SGA and the SAO have only managed to alienate the students. The Great Ski Snatch had to be moved off-campus because the SGA didn't like the Ski Club; the Triathlon Club can't get recognition even though it has sufficient support and activities; and the Stockbridge Senate is removing itself from the SAO altogether. SAO Council and the SATF Planning Committee continually manage to exclude the very people whose input is vital to the effectiveness of student empowerment.

Student empowerment itself is the problem. Yep. Most student government-types would die before sacrificing student empowerment. But what has it done for me? Maybe the administration should plan everything for us. They might push us around a bit, but at least they would get something done. Wow, what a concept.

Since my freshman year, I've been involved in many RSOs: Juggling Club, Hillel, Collegian, Phi Alpha Theta, Field and Grayson House Councils, Orchard Hill Area Government and the Board of Governors. I am familiar with most of the other RSOs. Most are excellent and very few are defunct. The SAO, with SGA's blessing, wants to eliminate a few dozen RSOs in order to clean up their own paper work. I'm really sorry that the RSOs have so recently become a burden to the SAO. It used to be the other way around.

I might form a new USO (Unregistered Student Organization), completely unaffiliated with SAO and only funded by contributions. It would be called, STOMP: Stop Touching Our Money, Please. We would rally against student empowerment and the SATF, favoring one of two options: each student would save more than $100 on their bill, or else the money would be allocated directly to the groups that need the money and would use it well.

The RSOs should be well-funded but not through the SAO. The RSOs should have a checking account at the Student Credit Union (now that's empowerment) from which they could draw funds directly and immediately, and that money would be accepted in more places than lousy purchase orders. Maybe the RSOs will embezzle a little, but I'd rather have the Juggling Club bungle my funds than have the SAO juggle my money.

Tolerance and dissent in hard times

Recently, I attended a peace protest at Westover Air Force base in Chicopee, Mass. Westover is the main staging area for the military airlift to Saudi Arabia and, like countless other Americans, I felt compelled to register my disapproval of the rapid buildup.

On this mild Saturday in late October, about 20 of us stood calmly just beyond the base's entrance gate while 10 others blocked the road in symbolic protest of the high risk of war in the Persian Gulf. The local police called to the scene were cordial and had known many other sit-ins at the base.

Jay Allain

The response from G.I.s and other personnel ranged from the classic "Go back to Russia" to a sincere "Thanks for your support" from one serviceman. Despite the sense of being dwarfed by the large and bustling base and its 'guests,' the towering C-5 transport jets, it felt good to publicly show that some of us aren't keen on war.

That evening, when I returned to the low-rent boarding house I've called home for two-and-a-half years, three veterans were waiting for me. The self-ordained spokesperson announced, "Look, if you tried protesting in any other country, you'd end up in a bodybag or jail." Not altogether shocked by the reception, I reminded my antagonists that democracy allows for dissent — one need not accept all of the government's policies or pronouncements. At this, one man whispered to a vet suffering with Post-Vietnam Stress Disorder, "Get him!"

Suddenly an agitated 6'3" combat veteran was jabbing me in the chest and attempting to intimidate me. Off and on for 15 minutes, the corridor bristled with the heat of pending violence. But somehow, mysteriously, no blows were thrown. Rattled, I packed my bag and went to stay with a friend. The police were notified. I decided to press charges. I knew I could never stay in that boarding house again.

Although disturbing, this incident has prompted some serious reflection for me. It reminded me sadly that many of my fellow citizens have a small and uneasy definition of democracy.

The witch-hunts begun by Sen. Joe McCarthy in the early fifties were reenforced by the polarization of Vietnam. As the economy fades, the search for scapegoats inevitably increases. Those who do not share our background, or political views or color will become suspect.

Adolf Hitler amassed an entire empire fanning the flames of irrational hate. Today, our society idolizes power and acquisition. Our brave new ideology has become "I've got mine. Stay away!"

Such extreme social Darwinism forces the have-nots into perpetual discontent and desperation. Their rage, often diffused, can sometimes be channeled. At other times, as I found out, it is unleashed on the outsiders in their midst.

Every day our minds are anesthetized by a constant stream of acts depicting man's inhumanity. We vicariously relax as prime-time television acts out our secret impulses borne of frustration.

Somehow, we think this addiction to carnage is harmless. But, it isn't. We are willfully hiding from the escalating chorus of misery and violence all around us.

For enlightened self-interest, we should cast off collective blindness. When callousness is in vogue, it is a wake-up call to the concerned.

Our very future will be paved by our response.

Student Activities Office rules in face of SGA compliance

One of the main problems in student government here at UMass is compliance. We are constantly reminded that, as students, we are in an inferior position when it comes to dealing with the administration on issues of student rights and empowerment.

Kevin W. Newnan

What is unfortunate is that many of our student leaders have accepted this fate, and they try to just work with the administration, rather than opposing it when it infringes upon student rights. They seldom try to assert any power at all.

The classic example of this compliance is the Student Activities Office. This office was created as a student-run office to assist the SGA in managing RSOs. What started out as administrative assistance in that office has grown, in true bureaucratic fashion, to become administrative control.

Before we created the SAO to "assist" us, students determined how student funds were spent. That sounds fair to me, but apparently not to the paternalistic administrators in the SAO. They determine the direction of the Trust Fund and disguise token student input as actual decisionmaking.

Why hasn't the SGA taken steps to reassert this power? Mainly because there is a prevailing mindset among the leadership and several senators that we are subservient to the administration and that student empowerment is and always will be a farce. It may be a farce now, but that is just the by-product of tacit acceptance of the administration's doctrines.

A big part of the problem is that the majority of students don't know where their $112.50 Student Activities Trust Fund fee goes. For those of you who think this fee is for "Student Activities," it would be quite a shock to learn that just under 25 percent of that money goes to the payroll of the SAO ($468,892 for fiscal year 1991). That's just payroll.

To make things worse, the SAO has, via the now-infamous "budget exercise," stated that the plan to reduce Trust Fund expenditures in the face of the current fiscal crisis centers around eliminating Area Governments from the Trust Fund. Since all seven of the Area Governments combined receive $87,250 (that's a mere 18.6 percent of SAO's payroll), there's something not quite right about saying Area Governments are one of the major flaws in our Trust Fund.

This is where the pseudo-pundits who say there is no point in fighting the administration are wrong. Though the SATF is only a small portion of the total fees we students pay, the SATF fee is ours, and we've got to assert some kind of control over it. We've got to make sure that the SATF is used to promote student interests, not those of the administration.

The "budget exercise" was not a public document. No one was even supposed to know that SAO is planning such drastic changes in regards to Area Governments, or that they are planning to eliminate the Greek Area (a separate issue in and of itself). Fortunately, someone broke the ring of secrecy and leaked this document to the public, and students should take advantage of this chance to voice our opinion before these changes are implemented.

Your senators are elected to serve you, not the SAO. Most of them are fully aware of that, but pressure from their constituents will force them to act on it. If you think it is wrong for SAO to get so much of your money, to control your activities and subvert information about its long-term goals for our Trust Fund, let your senator know. It's time to remind everyone that it's the SATF, not the SAOTF. It's time for the students to stop getting burned.

History of UMass student government fades into dust

Do you understand student government yet? I don't either, but I'm working on it.

Understanding student government requires history. It sounds like typical, overblown student government rhetoric, but the present system actually works like the information bureaucracy in George Orwell's 1984. Because students graduate each year, administrators are usually able to ensure that only their version of history survives in the files of the student government.

One recent example is in the so-called "secret budget exercise" sent to Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson a few weeks ago by a small group of student government officials and Student Activities Office administrators. This is the document that led the Governmental Affairs Committee to call for Student Government Treasurer Karen Talbot's impeachment.

Some people are upset about the secret budget exercise because it calls for the elimination of about half the existing student activities, including fraternities, sororities, club sports and honor societies. The absurdity of such a proposal should be obvious, but the secretive manner in which it was put forward and its specious claims to authority are even worse.

The first paragraph reads, in part, as follows: "Following the audit of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) in 1982, the auditors stated that the fiscal responsibility and stability of the Trust Fund rested on the ability of the University to define the partnership between the Student Government Association and the Student Activities Division... The Student Activities Office Council and the Student Activities Trust Fund Planning Committee (SPC) were accepted as vehicles for student/staff management of the Trust Fund."

Al Arpad

The paragraph is a kind of history, but it's not all true. There was an audit in 1982, and it found serious problems in the way the Trust Fund was managed. The SAO Council and the SPC were chartered at that time, but anyone who has read the original charters knows that they are not supposed to "manage" the trust fund. They are advisory bodies.

Every University trust fund is governed by a "Statement of Trust," approved by the Trustees, and a "Program Statement" put out each year describing how the Statement of Trust is to be implemented. The Statement of Trust for 1988 did not contain any mention of the SAO Council or the SPC, but it does say that "overall trust fund priorities are set by the Student Senate."

The Program Statement for 1988 does contain a reference to the SAO Council, but only in relation to the budget of the SAO itself, not the rest of the Trust Fund. Nothing about the SPC.

But since 1988, those statements have changed slightly. The Statement of Trust now reads "The SATF provides resources for a variety of programs and services for undergraduate students of the Amherst campus." The Program Statement contains the following instructions for implementation of the Statement of Trust: "The mandatory Student Activities Fee provides many services to the campus community and supports a variety of student activities."

It seems to me that the Trustees' instructions on the Trust Fund have been made deliberately vague in order to undercut the role of student government, but it's hard to be sure.

Until recently, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy provided students with a way to keep track of their government's history. This mainstay of continuity in student government was eliminated two years ago because of factional bickering in the student senate. The place was cleared out to make way for the nice, new offices that student government leaders now occupy. Most of the files were thrown away.

Do you understand student government yet? I don't either, but I'm working on it.

Letters to the Editor

A game of chicken with Saddam

As massive U.S. deployment in the Persian Gulf goes on, the mainstream media in this country has adopted an alarming posture of acquiescence toward the military buildup.

The reason is the administration has convinced the media that it is playing a game of chicken with Saddam Hussein.

The administration has argued, and the media has apparently accepted, that the United States needs to show its resolve to convince Saddam it means business in order to scare him out of Kuwait. The argument is deceiving and the game is extremely dangerous.

The standard winning strategy in the game of chicken is to convince your opponent you are dead set on collision, that there is no way for you to change course or back out, therefore, forcing your opponent to change course in order to avoid collision. He chickens out, you win.

Thomas Schelling in his book, The Strategy of Conflict, compares this situation to two cars racing toward each other on a head-on collision course.

A couple of weeks ago, Thomas Friedman, the New York Times so-called expert on the Middle East, invoked Schelling's analogy to argue that Saddam has not disgorged Kuwait because he is not convinced of U.S. resolve and determination.

Whether Friedman's advice fell on receptive ears in Washington, the administration's tougher rhetoric and decision to increase the number of troops in the Gulf by 100,000 appears to be in accordance with this line of reasoning.

If Saddam has not got out of Kuwait, it is certainly not because he is sleeping in bunkers and constantly moving around in total secrecy in order to avoid a U.S. air strike.

Moreover, he has deployed over 400,000 troops in Kuwait and has just put them on full alert in anticipation of a U.S. military offensive. He has also been working frantically through diplomatic channels for a settlement to avoid military confrontation with the United States.

Some of us in the UMass Coalition on the Middle East Crisis wonder why Saddam Hussein has not evacuated Kuwait in the face of severe international rebuke and overwhelming odds.

BOG does more than bicker, fight

I feel compelled to respond to Gayle Long's editorial of Nov. 14 ("The pluralistic pledge of the BOG"). I have been a member of the Board of Governors for the past four years and, contrary to what Ms. Long says, the BOG hardly plays with its constitution every meeting. (I suppose I should expect such generalization from a Collegian reporter, however.)

No, the BOG hasn't been debating whether to say the Pledge of Allegiance the entire semester. In fact, the debate Ms. Long refers to occurred for 30 minutes during a three-hour meeting. Instead, the BOG has been working at providing entertainment that the entire student body can enjoy, such as Comedy Night in the Hatch.

The BOG has been assessing space needs for groups such as the Union Video Center. The vending program continues to be run in a professional manner while the BOG hears input from students suggesting how it can be made better. In addition, the BOG has worked in unison to stave off assaults on its autonomy from hostile SAO and SGA bodies whose leadership thinks student disempowerment is a good idea.

On issues of true importance, the liberal-conservative split the Collegian is so fond of describing is nonexistent.

I would suggest to Ms. Long that she attend a BOG meeting before she so gleefully attacks us in her column. It might actually help her to see what the BOG really does, instead of relying on information provided by a newspaper traditionally guided by biased reporters who care little about the truth.

Cuts in Staff Development based on inaccurate data

The Provost's Preliminary Retrenchment Plan at UMass, as they relate to Staff Development in the School of Education, rest on inaccurate data as well as omitted criteria. Although we have offered corrections, no response has been forthcoming. Instructional loads were understated by over-counting faculty and assistantship resources by more than 50 percent. In addition, a large course was omitted from the record.

Following the methods of the Provost's group by substituting accurate numbers for faculty, students and publications, we have computed the following corrections. Undergraduate instruction per ranked faculty available, 4.6 to 1; undergraduate instruction per total instructional resources, 4.1 to 1; graduate instruction per faculty, 13 to 1. Thus Staff Development faculty instructed 17.6 full-time-equivalent students per faculty member, and they advised many doctoral students.

Four out of five ranked faculty who were affiliated with Staff Development during the 1982-88 period had published — or 20 percent with zero productivity. That figure compares favorably with 23 percent who had no publications in the University as a whole.

Depending on how one counts faculty on leave, on part time or on administrative assignments, there were less than four faculty with full academic responsibilities in a typical year yet the Provost's report used a divisor of 7 for scholarly activity. By our count, publications averaged 1.38 per year in the University, 1.02 in the School of Education and 1.11 in Staff Development.

Were presentations at conferences and serving as principal investigator for funded projects acknowledged (as they are within the School of Education for graduate faculty status), the professional scholarship of Staff Development faculty would be outstanding in anyone's eyes.

An outsider examining the initial data would not have singled out the School of Education for any cuts in light of its overall instructional loads, its very high number of degrees awarded, its many grants and heavy losses of faculty due to death, retirements and relocation over the past three years. Further, the data base for academic programs in the School of Education presented as justification for cuts is so misleading that it serves no useful purpose — certainly not to violate tenure! Academic programs control neither budget nor personnel.

The Provost's committee lacked accurate data about assistantships in these units so they ignored total instructional resources in making their first cuts of programs. But omitting teaching assistants significantly exaggerates an appearance of imbalance in undergraduate instruction among programs.

The Provost's data do not support the proposed cuts in the School of Education. But their disproportionate impact on outreach and affirmative action is blatant. The two programs proposed for termination in the School of Education serve over 230 graduate students — more than 60 are African-American and over 20 other people of color.

If these terminations proceed, the Black faculty in the School of Education will drop from eight to three or four; and well over half of the African-American graduate students in the School will be left without academic programs next year.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Do you want a colorblind society, too?

On the evening of Oct. 30, the Distinguished Visitors Program brought James Farmer to visit with the University of Massachusetts at Amherst community.

For those who are unfamiliar with the guest speaker, allow me to illustrate Mr. Farmer's contributions, ideals and activism in a brief statement.

Monique Tabon

Noted on the advertisements, James Farmer is most known for his civil rights activism. Let me take a moment to say that, with the above statement in mind, I expected to hear of the activities and experiences of a civil rights activist that resisted racial inequality. I also anticipated hearing of results due to his personal as well as political contributions.

What I received instead was a trip down memory lane, glamorizing the struggles of an oppressed people. Farmer, a PASSIVE civil rights leader, denied his responsibility to identify with the struggle of his race, while choosing to focus on "quotas" and their implied significances. He also addressed the "simplicity of the sixties," which was right vs. wrong, in contrast to the "complexity of the eighties and nineties."

Sorry, Mr. Farmer. I do not share your optimism for a colorblind U.S. of A., until racial discrimination (which has manifested itself solidly into our society) is nonexistent. The likelihood of that far-fetched goal is near zilch in actuality.

Farmer, although quite the distinguished older gentleman, intelligent and articulate, has forgotten who built this country. Blood, sweat and tears of Black people built this country and more than helped to make it what it is today. Let's not forget that the civil war was won due to the aid of over 180,000 Black men.

So, how dare you, Mr. Farmer, look toward a colorblind society when we, as African-Americans, continue to be exploited in this racist, capitalist society? Remember, the "American way" is really for those in power. Do not be so disillusioned as to believe that because you are an honorary member of the Italian Veterans Club, that your struggle is any different from mine.

And while you are conscientious enough to praise Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s efforts, do not, and I repeat do not, neglect the ones that came before him, the ones that worked during his lifetime and those of us who plan to continue the fight for justice, which in our political system is a joke.

Once again, Mr. James Farmer, I apologize for my rebellious attitude, but you are a joke to the cause of Black activism. Your nonviolent contributions are applauded, but applause is not what we, as a people, need. We need action and support from whomever will give it to us. Understand the distinction. I said we need SUPPORT, not pity.

Black people, young and old, take a stand for your rights, for your ancestors and mine who built this damn country. Don't be passive and ask for what already belongs to you... take it and don't answer any question about it.

And alas, to you, Mr. Farmer, keep your fairytale dreams where they belong, in a story book. Your dreams aren't going to free my people, but historical knowledge and prevalent education will.

Finally, to the members of DVP, if you think that selecting a non-threatening guest speaker of African-American descent would be enough to get you off the hook for your lack of understanding of our reality, think again! Let me be the first to say, once again you have failed to meet our needs and interests.

If you thought James Farmer did a terrific job at doing just that, I'm sorry to inform you otherwise. The next time you attempt to fulfill your diversity "quota," please consult the various minority organizations as to whom we want to hear, not whom you think we ought to hear.

Black homosexuality: acceptance vs. rejection

Homosexuality is a subject which many heterosexual people find both difficult and painful to understand. Instead of trying to understand homosexuality, most of us tend to criticize it or, even worse, pretend that it does not exist.

However, homosexuality does exist. It exists in basically all cultures, institutions and societies. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is by no means an exception. The homosexual community here at the University is one that is very active. Unfortunately, the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Association as with most organizations at UMass contain very few, if any members who are Black.

This does not say that there aren't any Black homosexuals. According to a member of the minority gay community on campus, many Black homosexuals remain secretive of their sexual preference because of the small percentage of Blacks on campus as a whole and the sensitivity of the subject. This results in many Black homosexuals being more inclined to "stay in the closet."

It is estimated that there are about 20,000 students that attend the University; of this estimate, only about 400 are Black.

According to one LBGA member, "the only possible reason that there are few minority members in the LBGA is because of the small percentage of minorities at the University. In the gay community, there is basically no racial prejudice. Most of us are on a kick against any -ism, there is more of a male vs. male and female vs. female conflict."

Sondra Sutton

Despite the small percentage of Blacks, this is not the only reason that Blacks tend to cover up their homosexuality. Another reason may be that African-Americans as a whole have a more difficult time accepting homosexuality.

One theory suggests that homosexuality was not an option of sexual preference to be considered in African history. Not until the encounter with European culture was homosexuality truly introduced. The fact that Blacks have a more difficult time understanding homosexuality brings about a great deal of rejection toward homosexuality, especially Black homosexuals.

Granted that the gay community may or may not possess as much racial prejudice as the heterosexual community, this does not encourage Black homosexuals to come out of the closet. One of the few Black homosexual males here at the University (who requested his name be withheld) said "the reason it is so hard to be homosexual and Black at UMass is because we are rejected by everyone. White homosexuals and White heterosexuals, whereas the White homosexuals have the LBGA."

In conclusion, I will state that, yes, homosexuality is very difficult to understand, especially among our people. Yes, it is easy for one to forget that these people are a part of our race, and reject them. However, what we as African-Americans have to realize is that these people were Black before they were gay. Whether or not we agree or disagree with homosexuality is irrelevant. The fact of the matter is that if we reject Black homosexuals, they have no one to turn to.

We as a people also separate ourselves. When we separate ourselves, we become more vulnerable; and here at UMass, Blacks need to be as strong as we can possibly be.

For those students interested, the LBGA is starting a diversity group. This group is for all minority homosexuals and is open to all Five College Area students. For more information, please contact the LBGA office in the UMass Student Union.

Abortion activists dispute gains made on Beacon Hill

BOSTON (AP) — Anti-abortion and pro-choice activists differ on whether they made gains in the Legislature in this month's election, with both sides claiming the results tilted in their favor.

MassChoice, an affiliate of the National Abortion Rights Action League, said the recent election gave their side one additional supporter in the state Senate, and a gain of five people in the House.

By MassChoice's numbers, that means the pro-choice side now has 22 supporters in the 40-member Senate and 68 supporters in the 160-member House. Pam Nourse, the group's executive director, also estimated that the number of people her group considers mixed on abortion grew.

"What we're seeing is a growth of this middle group that we don't consider pro-choice, but we don't consider anti-choice either," Nourse said Wednesday.

MassChoice only considers a legislator pro-choice if he or she supports public funding for abortions. Legislators in MassChoice's "mixed" group support the U.S. Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision, which legalized abortion, but do not agree with the group on other abortion issues, Nourse said.

"We feel more confident them we did before," Nourse said.

MassChoice endorsed Gov.-elect William Weld, and Nourse said she believes Weld would veto any attempt to restrict abortion in the state.

But while MassChoice heralded gains in the Legislature, an anti-abortion group calculated the numbers in the Legislature differently.

Arlene Champoux, Massachusetts Citizens for Life's legislative director, said she counted only 18 pro-choice supporters in the Senate and 63 in the House.

She said there are 17 anti-abortion votes in the newly-elected Senate and 86 anti-abortion votes in the House, with 11 state representatives holding mixed or unclear views on the issue.

"I stand by my figures," Champoux said.

Both sides will have a chance to battle over a constitutional amendment that would guarantee a woman's right to abortion. On Nov. 28, a constitutional convention is scheduled to reconvene, and pro-choice supporters say they will make a final push for a vote on the matter. The convention met for the 11th time Wednesday, but immediately adjourned until Nov. 28.

The Legislature is scheduled to convene in a formal session for the first time since the summer on Nov. 26.

Abortion foes so far have prevailed in efforts to postpone a vote on the amendment at the convention. Supporters of the amendment need the approval of at least 25 percent of two consecutively-elected Legislatures before the measure can go before voters as a ballot question.

The measure would guarantee a woman's right to an abortion through the first 24 weeks of pregnancy, and would give a woman a right to have an abortion at any time during pregnancy if she was a victim of rape or incest, or to protect her life or health.

The main tool abortion opponents have used to block action on the amendment has been the call for a quorum. Abortion supporters have failed to keep the minimum 101 legislators in the House chamber to continue debate on the matter and bring to a vote.

Sen. Lois Pines, D-Newton, a strong supporter of the pro-choice amendment, said pro-choice groups must try to convince lame-duck legislators, whose terms are coming to an end, to stay in the chamber through the debate.

"We know it's close and we're really depending on the will of the members to act responsibly in terms of allowing the issue to be decided on," Pines said.

Men's cross country team hit its stride late in season

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team managed only a 2-4 record in regular season tri-meets, but found success late in the season. UMass completed its season Saturday with a 10th place finish in the IC4A Championships.

In the tri-meets, the Minutemen beat the University of Lowell and Northeastern University, but lost to nationally-ranked Providence College and the University of Connecticut, as well as Boston College and Iona.

"We basically split the meets with the four teams we were uncertain about [Lowell, Northeastern, BC and Iona]," said coach Ken O'Brien. "We lost to the better two of those teams.

"Against Connecticut and Providence, I just wanted to see how close we could come to them. . . I didn't expect to beat them."

UMass began the championship season by taking fourth place in the Eastern Conference Meet. Several UMass runners did not compete in this meet in order to rest for the larger championships.

The next week saw a complete Minuteman squad finish third in the Atlantic 10 Championships. O'Brien said he was especially pleased with his team's performance at the A-10's.

"The Atlantic 10 Meet was the first time we saw the final product that I had hoped would emerge this season," O'Brien said. At the New England Championships the following week the team had what O'Brien termed a "sub-par" sixth-place performance.

"I'm not sure why we didn't follow up our performance at the A-10's with a stronger showing in the New Englands," O'Brien said. "We took one step up at the A-10's and two steps back at the New Englands."

After the New Englands, the Minutemen came back two weeks later to take tenth place in the IC4A Championship Meet at which almost 100 teams, ranging from Maine to Virginia, competed.

"We worked really hard the week after the New Englands," said O'Brien. "That tied things together so that we could come back with our best meet of the year in the IC4A's.

"We basically were a team of two extremes. We had four experienced seniors who had had some front-running experience who I felt confident with and could predict fairly well how they would compete. (Tom) Degnan and (Jon) Corso had had very good junior years in track and that carried over to this season. (Gerry) Squires and (Joe) Milette were coming off substantial injuries from last season but had had successful careers. The rest of the team were mostly freshmen and sophomores.

"The seniors were a large part of the reason for our team's success," said O'Brien. "They kept the team in focus and showed the young guys the ropes. They provided internal leadership which is essential to a successful team.

"The freshmen and sophomores also worked very hard. I was very pleased with the way the team developed. I was ecstatic that the seniors were able to finish their careers on a high note."

Corso and Degnan, who led the team all season long, received All-Atlantic 10 honors. Degnan also received All-New England honors, and Corso was named to the All-East team.

Three sign on line

Three basketball players have signed letters of intent to play for the University of Massachusetts next season, coach John Calipari announced yesterday.

Scott Drapeau, a 6-foot-9 senior at Merrimack (N.H.) Valley High School, Louis Roe, a 6-foot-8 senior at Atlantic City (N.J.) High School, and Mike Williams of Maine Central Institute signed letters of intent to play for the Minutemen this week.

Drapeau and Roe had verbally committed to attend UMass earlier this fall. Williams graduated from Weaver High School in Hartford, Conn. last spring and was set to attend UMass this fall; over the summer he was declared ineligble to play at UMass this year because of low SAT scores, and opted for Maine Central Institute.

In his senior year at Weaver, Williams averaged 25 points, three steals, seven rebounds and eight assists per game.

Roe, who was recruited by more than 150 schools, including Syracuse, is listed as one of the top 50 high school seniors in the nation by several scouting services, including the Bob Gibbons Basketball Report.

Drapeau, at 6-foot-9, 235 pounds, is known as an aggressive rebounder.

Celtics romp

Bird's 45 stings Hornets

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — One night after his lowest point total in four years, Larry Bird scored 45 points and the Boston Celtics survived a late Charlotte comeback for a 135-126 victory over the Hornets Wednesday night.

A 116-101 lead with 7:35 remaining dropped to 122-117 with 4:21 to play on Rex Chapman's driving layup. Boston's Kevin Gamble then made two free throws and the Hornets came no closer than five points the rest of the way.

Bird, who had 5 points in a 119-91 loss at Milwaukee on Tuesday night, added eight assists, eight rebounds and five blocks against the Hornets.

While the Celtics were coming off their worst game of the season, the Hornets had their best game Tuesday night a 120-105 victory over the Washington Bullets. But they remained winless in nine games against Boston in their three-year history.

Charlotte, which trailed 69-67 at halftime, was led by Chapman and J.R. Reid with 26 points each.

On Nov. 12, 1986, Bird had 2 points in nine minutes against Milwaukee before being ejected. His 5 points Tuesday night were the fewest in a game in which he was available the entire 48 minutes since he was scoreless against Golden State on Jan. 3, 1981.

He had 24 points in the first half against Charlotte and added eight in the third quarter in which Kevin McHale scored 13 as Boston opened a 104-91 lead entering the final period.

Boston, which scored only 30 points in the first half against Milwaukee a night earlier, had more than that in each period against Charlotte. Gamble added 26 points for the Celtics, 10 in the fourth quarter.

Chapman's layup gave Charlotte its last lead, 78-77, with 9:19 left in the third quarter. A 3-point play by McHale gave the Celtics the lead for good 80-78.

The Celtics led by 10 three times in the first half, the last at 59-49 on Gamble's dunk 5:10 before intermission.

But a 15-4 run capped by Muggsy Bogues' driving layup put the Hornets ahead 64-63 with 1:20 left in the half. Armon Gilliam, who had 24 points, scored Charlotte's first eight points in the surge.

Men's swimming, last year's NE best, readies for BC

By DAVE SZPILA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team starts off its season against Boston College Friday at 7 p.m. at Boyden.

UMass is coming off its fourth consecutive season as New England champions, and coach Russ Yarworth said his team is "still the team to beat in the New England Championships this year."

UMass is 46-2 in the last four years and was unbeaten last year (13-0).

Boston College, however, is not going to be easy. The team has finished runner-up to UMass the last two years, and has an extremely deep lineup.

Maarten Kraaijvanger, a junior miler from Holland, and seniors Rob Strong, Rich McMorrow, and Craig Jones "make up the backbone of [Boston College]," Yarworth said.

Though the Minutemen lost 11 seniors off last year's team, they are still deep with the talent.

Tri-captains Jim Robertson (freestyle), Pete Reich (freestyle) and Evan Gwilliam (butterfly) all have New England Championship-meet experience. Other seniors on the squad are Scott Milbart (freestyle), who was a redshirt last year, and Frank Sampson (distance freestyle).

Junior Bill Chouinard holds the UMass and New England record in the 200-yard breast stroke.

Sophomores on the squad include Jay Paluso, who is the defending New England champ in the 200-yard medley, Scott Reed, who was the runner up to BC miler Kraaijvanger last year in the New Englands, and Kurt Sawin, who was unable to compete last year in the championships because of an illness but looks strong this winter, Yarworth said.

Chris Barrett, the top returning freestyle specialist from long and middle distances, rounds out the group.

"[The sophomores] could be the strongest class,' Yarworth said.

Freshmen on the squad include Mark Stoeling, an All-American from Cincinnati who will be handling the backstroke duties for the team. Tim Nubar and Pete Hursty were also good high school swimmers, according to Yarworth, and have worked hard in practice this fall.

THIS WEEKEND

The purest prose is borne from observation; words are most intense when they've sprung from dreams, the imagination, or personal interpretation.

Growing up in upstate Jamestown, NY, Natalie Merchant's view of the world was restricted to her small town surroundings: working class families, abandoned shops and factories and the lives and ideas of others she discovered on the pages of history books and novels. Many of her lyrics were extracted from journal entries: powerful, intensely personal childhood memories.

At the age of 17, while attending classes at Jamestown Community College, Merchant met guitarists John Lombardo and Robert Buck, bassist Steve Gustafson, keyboardist Dennis Drew and drummer Jerome Augustyniak through WJWK, the local radio station.

With the exception of Lombardo, who was playing bass for another band, and Augustyniak, who wouldn't join the band for quite some time, they began to perform under the name "Still Life" at a place in Jamestown called the Broadhead Mills, a warehouse rented by a group of artists for film parties and live music.

Amidst an array of potted plants, desk lamps, incense and projections by avant-garde filmmakers Anger and Bunuel, the four played a mixture of reggae, dub, calypso and new wave.

"In Jamestown," Drew explains, "There was never any music community for us to become a part of or to be influenced by. So we were able to develop in a vacuum and come out sounding like ourselves." In 1981, Lombardo joined the band on guitar and they became 10,000 Maniacs (They took their name from an old science fiction film called 2,000 Maniacs — they mistakenly thought it was 10,000, hence the name.)

The following year, Drew, who was taking a class at nearby Fredonia State University, finagled his way into the music department's recording studio, and the band recorded their first EP Human Conflict Number Five on their self-created label, Christian Burial Music.

In autumn of 1982, the band scraped together funds, bought a used school bus and embarked on their first "tour," to the Atlanta-Athens, GA area. They returned to Jamestown three months later then set out once more, this time to the East Coast.

In 1983, they returned to the studio to record their first full-length LP, Secrets of the I Ching. Thanks to BBC DJ John Peel, "My Mother the War," a track from Secrets, became a hit on the British independent charts.

Following an extensive U.K./European tour in early 1985, 10,000 Maniacs were offered a contract with Elektra Records. Filled with complex historical and literary allusions (topics ranged from WWII union workers to Native American discrimination), The Wishing Chair became one of 1985's most critically-lauded releases.

In July of 1987, the Maniacs released In My Tribe. It was this LP that was responsible for the band's national breakthrough. Lyrically, Merchant focused In My Tribe on current issues such as child abuse and illiteracy; musically, the band hired producer Peter Asher, to "fine tune" Merchant's voice. While it's debatable whether this move was really a step in the right direction, it certainly paved the way for the band's mainstream success.

Throughout 1989, the band toured in support of Blind Man's Zoo. They eventually decided that a group "hiatus" of sorts was important to their growth, and so agreed to devote a year to personal rejuvenation.

This year, Lombardo (who left the band following the release of the The Wishing Chair) and Merchant remixed and combined their first two independent efforts into Hope Chest. The band is currently touring in support the album.

10,000 Maniacs will be appearing at the Fine Arts Center on Saturday, Nov. 14. The show is sponsored by the Union Program Council. Tickets are $14 for UMass students and $17 for the general public. Showtime is 8 p.m.

Schoenberg tickles the ivories for peace

By DOUG JOHNSTON
Collegian Staff

The development and nurturing of an enduring world peace will be celebrated and supported Friday, when WRSI 95.3 FM and Just Peace of Amherst College present a solo piano concert with Steven Schoenberg. The concert is a benefit for the Peace Development Fund.

Through intimate collaboration with his dynamic piano, Schoenberg ascends and descends through musical peaks and valleys by expressing the flowing emotion resounding through out his music. His improvisational style is precisely integrated with meticulous technique. The combination of these two elements provides the listener with a sumptuous bouquet for the ears.

Schoenberg's improvisational pieces are comprised of samples from a broad scope of music that includes elements from classical to jazz to contemporary pop. Through his music, Schoenberg conveys a hope for peace while exuding a graceful presence of human sensitivity.

Says Schoenberg about his improvisations, "Each happened during a moment in time in which my feelings, whether sad, reflective, comical, or perverse came through. Because they are improvised, I have almost no way of knowing what will occur, how a piece will begin, what will happen in the middle, or when it will end."

Professionally, Schoenberg has produced musical scores for a promotional video for the PDF narrated by Meryl Streep, for a PBS-NOVA documentary by Peace River Films, and for the cast of characters on Sesame Street.

Recently, Schoenberg received the 1990 Parents Choice Award from Parents Magazine for the cassette version of Babar and Father Christmas (Random House).

Not only will Schoenberg's music entertain, it will aid in the proliferation of peace by contributing funds to the PDF. Currently, the PDF has been working to avoid economic desolation in military industry supported areas of the United States, by promoting the economic conversion to civilian use of these military industries. In the past, the PDF has given grants to grassroots organizations nationwide and has funded groups involved with United States relations with the Third World, violence related to racism, and the support of peer educators involved with

Gulf forces begin 'Imminent Thunder'

By CHRISTOPHER BURNS
Associated Press

SAUDI ARABIA — U.S. and Saudi forces yesterday began a six-day amphibious exercise in the Persian Gulf, code named "Imminent Thunder" and involving 1,000 U.S. Marines, 1,100 aircraft and 16 ships.

Iraq has termed the exercise a "provocative act" because it is being held close to occupied Kuwait.

Also today, Syria and Egypt rejected a proposed Arab summit on the Persian Gulf crisis, effectively killing chances for the gathering that Morocco's king said was possibly the last chance for peace.

Presidents Hafz Assad of Syria and Hosni Mubarak of Egypt became the latest Arab leaders to join Saudi Arabia in rejecting the summit. They said they were doing so because Baghdad insisted upon keeping Kuwait.

Saudi Arabia said on Wednesday it would not participate in the summit unless Baghdad promised beforehand to leave Kuwait, which it invaded Aug. 2.

In other developments:

● Two American diplomats arrived in Amman, Jordan, on yesterday's regularly scheduled flight from Baghdad. The State Department said on Wednesday two Americans were to leave Iraq, but did not release their identities or further details.

"I'm not a hostage," said one, who was carrying an orange bag that looked like a diplomatic pouch. Two other Americans arrived from Iraq on Wednesday.

● Hundreds of America's most powerful tanks began rolling into the Saudi desert, adding more power to the growing U.S. deployment in Saudi Arabia as Washington seeks U.N. authorization to wage war on Iraq.

● A poll sponsored by an arms-control group found that most Americans oppose going to war without a congressional declaration and nearly half prefer to give a U.N.-ordered embargo on trade with Iraq more time.

● The state Iraqi News Agency announced that President Bush will go "on trial" in absentia next month in Algeria for "inhuman policies and planning aggression against the people of Iraq."

The trial will begin Dec. 10 in Algiers in an international court of justice, INA said. It quoted the secretary-general of the Arab Jurist Federation, Shibeeb al-Maliky, as saying the trial would be held in accordance with rules used by the Nuremberg courts that tried Nazi war criminals.

The exact location of Imminent Thunder was not reveal because of military policy, and a news blackout was imposed for the initial phases of the operation.

No live ammunition will be fired in the operation. But it will involve the largest use of aircraft in a single training exercise since U.S. forces were deployed in the region in August.

Students, admin. negotiate

Smith College to establish multi-cultural center

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

After weeks of petitioning and negotiating, the Smith College administration and seven minority student organizations, have come to come to some agreements which should establish a new permanent multi-cultural center by the Fall of 1991.

Debbie Bradley, the Smith College news director, said that the administration was "really pleased" about the agreement.

The contract signed by the administration and the seven groups, now calling themselves the Unity Coalition, provides for a temporary office for the multi-cultural center beginning in January with the promise of a permanent center by the Fall of 1991.

Bradley said the center may have temporary office space in Hampshire House on Bedford Terrace as early as the end of November.

Vivian Chang, a member of the Asian Students Association, was also pleased with the progress but remained skeptical as to whether the agreement would be adhered to.

"We're still at a stop-gap and have been at one since 1983," she said. "We go from one transient position to another."

"Although the administration is finally paying more attention to us, it shouldn't be so difficult for this College to understand why we need space."

The agreement was signed after students occupied College Hall on Friday, Oct. 26 until the following Monday. The occupation was sponsored by the Unity Coalition, which consists of the Asian Students Association, Korean Students at Smith, EKTA for South Asian Students, the International Students Association, the Black Student Alliance and Nosotros for Latinas.

Quit the puffing, chowing

By JOSEPH M. MONTAGNA
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts and people across the country yesterday abstained for two good causes.

The Great American Smokeout, sponsored by the American Cancer Society took place nationwide, as did the annual OXFAM day of fasting.

The Smokeout's theme of "sharing the air" is a day for smokers looking to quit to kick the habit for 24 hours, with the support of friends and the media, according to the American Cancer Society.

Last year 17.9 million smokers took part with six million abstaining for the entire day, making the annual event a success, according to Deb Beaty, assistant director of communications for the Cancer Society.

A similar number of the country's 50 million smokers are expected to again try this year, the 14th year of the event, according to Beatty.

"It takes many tries, and this is one

The policy regarding the Reserve Officers Training Corps is still undecided due to continual delays.

The Military Studies Committee, which is responsible for finalizing a report on discrimination within ROTC against gay students, has not completed its report.

The delay is due to the addition of new committee members.

Both new and absent committee members have had to be briefed on what has transpired since September.

Originally the committee was to submit a finalized draft of its report to the Academic Matters Council on Oct. 17.

However, the committee just had a meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 13, and determined that a report will not be ready for approximately two weeks.

Tough-talking anti-pollution campaign unveiled in Boston

By CHRIS TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — People will pick up the phone and trash the corporate "scum" and "slime" who foul the environment if they respond to a tough-talking anti-pollution campaign unveiled yesterday.

Posters plastered on Boston's subway trains will urge state residents to blow the whistle on polluters with a call to the state Department of Environmental Protection.

"Fighting environmental crime is a tough business and we need all the help we can get," said Secretary of Environmental Affairs John DeVillars. "And this is one good way to get it."

Authorities want to jolt passengers into breaking their silence if they know about environmental polluters, and the method may work.

"Go ahead, report the scum," blares the slogan on one poster depicting oil leaking from rusty drums. Another shows a background of chemicals being dumped down an industrial drain with the headline, "Make the slime come clean."

A third poster shows medical waste washing up on a beach; the slogan reads, "Bag the garbage who dumped this."

Environmental crime is often violent crime and it's rarely victimless crime," said DeVillars. "For thousands of families that have seen their drinking water contaminated by toxics or their neighborhoods become the dumping sites for hazardous materials, the message may not even be strong enough."

State officials have pressed some of their most successful cases against corporate polluters after getting anonymous tip-offs from workers, DeVillars said. The state investigates and brings pollution charges against hundreds of companies each year, he said.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority is carrying the posters free of charge as part of a settlement with state officials for discharging oil-contaminated water into a brook and creek in Quincy.

The environmental posters, which will run on subway cars on the orange, blue and red lines for six months, will cost the MBTA $35,000 in advertising revenues, said spokesman Peter Dimond.

"We try to be as environmentally sensitive as possible," said Dimond. "We did run into problems in Quincy and we're doing our best to make up for it."

more try," said Beatty.

On campus, students from Public Health 216, Peer Health Promotion, set up a table on the Campus Center Concourse to distribute packets of information to those interested and to "gross them out" with photos of smoker's lungs.

"We even include candy in the packet to make them feel better," said Lynne Keating, a member of the class.

Lee Stinson and Linda Kenny, also members of the class, said the student response so far had been good.

The American Cancer Society also pointed out in a news release that 90 percent of smokers start before the age of 18. The blame should be put on the tobacco companies and their "blatant attempt to seduce the young" with misleading advertisements, said Beatty.

"If tobacco were new it would never be made legal," said Beatty, condemning cigarettes as a fluke of history.

For some, skipping last night's dinner at the Dining Commons was a chance to abstain valiantly from something.

The money value of the meal would then be donated by Food Services to OXFAM AMERICA, according to MassPirg, the organization sponsoring the event on campus.

OXFAM is an organization which fights world hunger and has led the nation-wide Fast for a World Harvest for 17 years during the week before Thanksgiving.

Students donate their meal by signing a ticket at the cashier and usually many participate, according to MassPirg member Dan Jacobsen.

"Most people say that's the OXFAM thing, we won't eat today," said Jacobsen.

Shirley Hebb, an employer of Worcester Dining Commons, said he expected about half of the normal diners would not be there.

According to Chang, the center will promote multicultural functions as well as provide a support group for the approximately 600 minority students on campus.

To accomplish this, the students are asking for a center on campus which has a 75-person meeting capacity, adequate storage facilities for sports equipment, a lounge and reception area, a small performance space, cooking space and exhibit space.

"There are so many events and functions that we have that we need and identifiable center to support them," Chang said.

The Unity Coalition is meeting with architectural consultants to decide what their space requirements are and where on campus they might be accomodated.

Chang said they have received a lot of support from local and Five College groups as well as support from a national coalition of colleges and universities based in Washington D.C.

Of the seven groups in the Unity Coalition, only The Black Student Alliance and Nosotros currently have space on campus, in Lily Hall.

'Barnicle's Boston' comes to Amherst

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Although most readers of the Boston Globe only read Mike Barnicle three times a week, people at the University of Massachusetts got an extra dose of the columnist yesterday as they listened to him comment on his job, the city of Boston, television and newspapers, and other topics.

Answering questions from a group of 100 people in Memorial Hall, Barnicle discussed the transition of going from print media to television.

"The basic difference is you have to realize that you don't worrying about writing on TV," he said. "The attention span [of viewers] is so short, you say it and it disappears like a puff of smoke."

"Television does funny things," he continued, "It warps our perspective. If Mother Theresa and Dick Albert [weather forecaster on WCVB, TV 5] were in the supermarket, a person would recognize Albert and say, 'Hey, it's the weatherman.'"

Barnicle said he has only seen his show, Chronicle [WCVB, TV 5] "about twice in 10 years."

He said newspaper can't compete with television in the visual effect department, but newspapers can take the story further.

"Newspapers bring you there, keep you there and tell you in detail the fabric and texture of the situation."

Barnicle said the United States is an "impatient nation," likening the citizens of the nation to "a car waiting at a yield sign at a rotary, trying to get out."

"Bush, on Labor Day, had 81 percent support for the Persian Gulf crisis. Now it's only 52 percent because nothing has happened."

Barnicle said he did not have a favorite topic, except "whatever he had just finished."

"I like a good story," he said, "but I can't pick anything out. I don't save anything I write. It's my job to put together the ingredients and push the button to get it in the paper. It's one of the best jobs, and I'm very luck to have it. I don't dwell on the highlights or lowlights of it."

Public office is not on the agenda for Barnicle, he said.

"A high percentage of the Legislature is low-lifes, imbeciles. Still some are pretty good people. The quality [of politicians] in the last 10-15 years has dropped off considerably."

Collegian photo by Dondi Abearn

IT'S A BIG BUCKET — Two people hold a large donation bucket for the Salvation Army.

"It's just not worth it. We've made it to difficult and humiliating for good people to run for office," he said.

Barnicle also gave reasons for not going into the suburbs of greater Boston, considering he devotes a great amount of time to the inner city of Boston.

"Laziness," he said. "I don't want to go out to Route 128. Also, the kids in places like Wellesley High are pretty boring. For the kids in the city, it's sheer survival, and it's interesting to present to suburban readers."

The Globe, he said, likes to get involved with the issues which reflect the city. Issues such as infant mortality and racial tensions were among those he listed.

"The Boston public school system is falling apart," he said. "About 70 percent of the system is minority, but 99 percent of those don't come from homes with clout. Many parents are not thought of as having clout."

"If you cover the school system, you cover the city," he continued. "In my mind, it's a reflection of the problems in the city in five years."

As manager of the Red Sox, Barnicle said he would, "sign [Mike] Boddicker, sign [Roger] Clemens, try to get designated hitter [Jack] Clark and try to get [Bruce] Hurst back, to get a left-hander in Boston. The Red Sox should also try to get three or four Black players, so that the sport would be played in Boston as it should."

Of Barnicle's six children, none appear to be headed in his footsteps, he said.

"If they did, I would make a couple of phone calls for them," he said. "My business is rigged for anyone coming in from the cold. Getting in is difficult."

"I've been lucky," he said. "No one [at the Globe] has ever said 'boo' to me about something I wrote. No one has ever said to stay away from something I wanted to write about."

Barnicle said he got his job working at the Globe because he knew the editor when he began in 1972.

"It has nothing to do with the reality that you'll go through. I was lucky," he said. "Now, skill has to come first and then you hope to get lucky."

The Escort Service hits the jackpot at 'Las Vegas Night'

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Staff

The chance to win a million dollars was all yours, if you attended Las Vegas Night last night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The annual event, sponsored by the Alpha Phi Omega National Service Fraternity raised $350 for the Escort Service last night.

By paying the admission fee of $3, participants were given $500,000 in play money.

Those who won the most amount of money were awarded prizes donated by local area merchants. Sponsors of the event expected the betting to get heavy around 10 p.m.

The betting tables were manned by members of the APO fraternity and the staff of the Escort Service, according to Julie Casey, service vice president of APO.

"The Escort Service has been cut pretty badly by the budget cuts," said Casey. "This directly affects the campus."

The APO is a co-ed national service fraternity, recognized by the Boy Scouts of America, whose principles are based on the principles of scouting.

These 12 principles are: trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courtesy, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent.

Previous scouting experience is not necessary to join the fraternity, added Casey.

Previous projects of APO have included:

- Acting out a Haunted "substance abuse" House in Hasbrouck Laboratory to inform the community about the dangers of drug abuse.
- Operation Identification, which included engraving Social Security numbers on the valuables of students in different residential areas.
- An outdoor leadership team, which taught Girl Scouts about camping.
- Sponsoring an Annual Karate Marathon with the proceeds going to "Save the Children."

This weekend, new pledges will do an outdoor cleanup of the Southwest Residential Area.

Membership of the UMass chapter has doubled this semester.

"There are as many pledges as active brothers this semester," stated Casey. "We hope to do the same next semester."

UMass student travels to El Salvador bearing gifts

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

A senior University of Massachusetts student wants to make the holiday season happier in El Salvador by personally delivering donated gifts from local residents.

Kibau Claudino, a Portuguese-Spanish major from Brazil, will leave Amherst on Dec. 8 in a truck loaded with gifts for the less fortunate in rural El Salvador.

Claudino said he visited El Salvador last July and because of the poor economic situation there, the holidays might mean that the parents of many Salvadorian children will not be able to afford to buy Christmas gifts.

"I am very sympathetic to the problem," he said. "When I was a child in Rio De Janeiro, my parents didn't have the money to buy presents for me."

Claudino said North American people really cannot fathom the degree of poverty in Latin America and throw away many things which could be fixed and made useful in El Salvador.

"People over here don't know what it means to not have shoes on your feet," he said. "This is a throw-away society. In Latin America they fix things because they cannot afford to buy a new one."

Claudino said any type of donation would be acceptable, such as used toys and summer clothing, canned and boxed food stuffs, medicine and cash donations.

To contact Claudino for more information, call 549-5348 between 1 p.m. and midnight.

Local businesses contribute money to program

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE

While budget cuts have severely weakened the Everywoman's Center, bringing about the elimination of its Counseling Program, two local businesses are raising money for the embattled center with special sales.

The Jeffrey Amherst College Book Store has been running a week-long book sale, with half of its proceeds going to the Center. According to Ty Lorenzo, store manager, he hopes to raise about $1,000 toward restoring the program.

Lorenzo said the sale, which ends Saturday, is his way of paying back the center, and the program, for helping one of his friends. "Obviously, they need help — a lot of help," he said. "This is a pretty good opportunity to get them money."

Lorenzo also said despite slow sales on the first day of the fund-raiser, he is confident that the store's customers will help the store meet its goal.

"I'm excited," he said. "I'm sure the community will get together."

On Sunday, Hair East's Amherst salon will hold a Cut-a-Thon for the center. According to salon manager Rachel Alves, the salon has received many calls asking in advance for appointments.

Alves said the salon will run the fund-raiser after a similar event held last year raised $1,500 for the Children's Diabetes Foundation. She added that with the recent cuts to the Center, there was a need to help the students, who comprise a major part of the salon's customers. "We think it's a good cause

Rack-A-Disc, Inc. rakes in the bucks

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

After Randy Barth sold his car in 1979 to buy a sound system when he was living in Orchard Hill, he said he knew his disc jockeying business would become successful.

Today Barth is the president of Rack-A-Disc, Inc., a multi-faceted entertainment company which will be worth half a million dollars at the end of this year.

"I haven't even begun yet," Barth said. "In the next five years, we would like to franchise nationally."

With its headquarters in Hadley, Rack-A-Disc has started an innovative entertainment program to encourage high school and junior high school students to stay off drugs.

The rights to "Just Say No — Locomotion Promotion" have recently been sold to the National Park and Recreation Association and is also being sponsored by Warner Brothers Records. This large video package aimed at teenagers will now be marketed nationally and in military bases overseas.

Barth said after watching other anti-drug programs geared to kids, he sat down at his computer terminal and, eight hours later, finished the plan for the promotion which incorporated the teenagers as advocates against drugs.

The package is a Club MTV-style video dance set-up where student leaders at participating schools can speak out against drugs in front of their peers, said Aric Philipson, a UMass student who is an intern at Rack-A-Disc.

"It's going to make a huge difference," Barth said. "It's innovative in that the kids get to speak out on drugs versus people speaking to them. The message here is that there's more to entertaining kids than drinking and dancing."

Barth said the over 50 "Locomotion Promotion" shows in New England have been a huge success and he expects over 500 national bookings in the next year.

The inspiration to Dee-Jay hit Barth while he was in high school in Chelmsford in the disco-inspired 1970s. He said dee-jayed parties for his friends in his parents' basement.

"We used to have the best parties in Chelmsford, Mass.," he said.

While at UMass, Barth first dee-jayed parties in Orchard Hill and on other campuses until he graduated with an undergraduate degree in communications in 1982 and Rack-A-Disc became incorporated.

In the summer of 1984, Rack-A-Disc Dee-Jays had played over 1,000 shows in New England and the company opened up branch offices in Hartford and Boston. By the end of this year, it is projected that Rack-A-Disc will have performed at over 2,000 functions across New England, Barth said.

Barth said his company is looking to expand their progressive music selection to appeal to college students. Philipson described the present music library as "mainstream, pop Top-40 hits from the late 1960s to the present."

Since over half of all function which Rack-A-Disc contracts are wedding and anniversary parties, Barth said the adult contemporary music library will be expanded to appeal to people of middle age.

The corporation has also ventured into live music, owning the equipment and management rights of three bands and acting as an agent to many others, Barth said.

The company is presently trying to centralize in Massachusetts and Hartford instead of playing functions all over New England and in Rhode Island. Barth, a resident of Natick, said he commutes from the Boston area to Hadley every week. The Hadley office houses the corporations main computer system.

Rack-A-Disc is also looking for interns who are interested in marketing, public relations, music or the technical aspects of dee-jaying, said Philipson. Barth said he only hires interns for are working for academic credit since he feels they work harder.

BOG passes Pledge of Allegiance proposal

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

At a very brief, but efficient Board of Governors meeting last night Governor Ted Maravelias's proposal to hold a voluntary Pledge of Allegiance was passed by a unanimous vote.

This motion, which caused such heated debate at last week's meeting, was peacefully accepted by the Board last night.

Governor Guy Glodis, who presented the motion to the Board for Maravelias, asked the proposal be voted on with as little debate as possible.

"I think there was enough debate on this motion last week, now it is time to vote," said Glodis.

Following this vote Glodis presented a new motion to the Board that concerned the Collegian's office space. This motion states the Collegian's right to use Campus Center 113 be terminated as of January 1, 1991.

"I filed this motion because the Collegian is a left-wing paper that serves special interest groups instead of mainstream students. They have neglected the needs of the general student body," said Glodis.

Several Board members objected to the proposal and Vice-Chairman Ed Corrigan asked that it not be considered. The proposal could not be thrown out without a vote, which did not pass, therefore it will be discussed at the next meeting.

In other BOG events:

- Corrigan was elected as acting chairperson of the space committee and Chairperson Sue Gordon was elected as acting chairperson of the Building Operations Committee. Full-time employees for these positions will be hired in the near future.

University of Massachusetts English Professor John Edgar Wideman's essay/interview with basketball star Michael Jordan in this month's Esquire is brilliant (a Collegian perk: you can grade your professors).

Wideman was a Rhodes Scholar and an all-Ivy League basketball player at Penn, and is the most qualified person on the planet to put the Jordan phenomenon under the microscope.

Jordan is a precise example, Wideman finds, of how sports can at the same time transcend and reflect everything that is wrong in our society, including its racial divisions. Wideman writes: "There's a good chance lots of TV viewers who are White will enter the work force and become dutiful, conspicuous consumers, maybe even buy themselves some vicarious flight time by owning stuff [Jordan] endorses. But what future is in store for those who intend to be the next MJ? Buy Jordan or be Jordan. Very different messages . . ."

Esquire, ironically, reinforced Wideman's point by putting a picture of Jordan on the cover under the words "Is he our new DiMaggio?" Joe DiMaggio was never a hero in the Black community, says Wideman.

Our (twisted) history lesson of the week is provided by Ed Corrigan, Republican Club member, at Wednesday's rally in support of U.S. troops in the Middle East: "You've got [Franklin Roosevelt] back there in the 1930s saying he'd do anything to prevent war, and what happened? World War Three!. . .um, Two!"

If you dropped into the University Bookstore from Mars or anyplace else, would you be able to tell what UMass' school colors are? Actually, if you have been going to UMass for three years and have been writing about UMass sports for two years, would you know what our school colors are?

A quick check of the football media guide reveals that our official school colors are maroon and white. The basketball team wears maroon and gold in practice. The women's soccer team wears red. The marching band wears red and black. Etc., etc.

School spirit, and our lack of it, is not just fun and games. For two years the State Legislature, 10 percent of which is UMass-Amherst graduates, has kicked this school each time the economy has provided the excuse. Were this a rah-rah school (and were there more UMass grads in the State House, but that's geography more than anything else) UMass would not be the first to suffer in tough times.

The graduate administrative offices are moving from the Lederle tower to Goodell starting this week. Since March, Goodell has been getting a facelift, and I was all ready to be mad at whoever made the decision to cover the black and white-marbled lobby floor with grey carpet until I found out it's actually asbestos-vinyl tile. Man, all this time I've been talking up Goodell as an example of a nice, old building on this campus, and the floor is asbestos? . . . Congratulations to UMass' April Kater for winning the Hermann Trophy, awarded to the best collegiate soccer player in the country.

Put down your D.C. food

Peter Capraro

. . . and stop to clear your mind and imagine for five minutes.

Imagine overwhelming anger, frustration, sorrow, pain, loss and regret flooding your body as you receive the phone call that told you that your best friend is dead and his funeral is in two weeks.

The thing is that he was raped of his life. It was taken from him for a senseless cause. It was not taken because he saved a drowning swimmer, or because he pushed an old lady out of the way of a moving truck.

It was taken for someone else's problem, something that he knew nothing about but the other person forced him to fight his war.

Yes, you got it, another person writing to the Collegian, bitching about one of the great problems of the world. I never thought that I would join the ranks. But I'm pissed off about the misconceptions people have in their minds about the Persian Gulf situation. Wait . . . it is not a situation . . . it is a shame. The Persian Gulf shame.

I won't talk in fancy political or economical terms because that is exactly what got us into this shame. I read two articles in the Globe today, one from a soldier's and another from a parent of a soldier's point of view.

The soldier expressed feelings of utter loneliness as if the people he loved had given up or forgotten about him. Imagine being in a foreign land for 60 days with nothing to do and feeling that your home country doesn't even know you're there.

The article by the parents expressed feelings of disbelief and deja-vu. They recalled the pain and anger they felt when they saw their loved ones being sent home in pieces from Vietnam. But this time it could be their son.

What has happened? Have we forgotten the pain? Have we forgotten the regret? Who are we fighting for, George Bush and Exxon? Would you want your brother dead in the name of George Bush or Exxon. Are they important enough to sacrifice lives over?

If they feel that it is important enough, why don't they send their sons and brothers, or better yet themselves, to the front lines to see what happens when all of their economics and politics go askew and bite them in the ass?

Maybe Hollywood glorified war and the death and pain that goes along with it. But it's not a movie. It is real — people that you love will die and people you don't love will die, but it doesn't matter if you love them, because someone else does, and that is what matters.

This is real.

Please help yourself and your friends, do something. Write a letter to George Bush or your state representative.

Don't put it off as your neighbor's responsibility because he won't do it, it is your responsibility. Sacrifice five minutes of Nintendo or General Hospital to help yourself or your neighbor.

Don't wait until you see your friend's funeral to get pissed off! Apathy will only cause you great pain and regret in the long run.

A week to extend global outlook

James Rowell

Today, I write not to discuss the student senate or issues of student rights at UMass but a topic of more global consequence. This week has been National Geography Awareness Week.

"So what?" you ask. "Why is the student government president writing about something so . . . um . . . sixth grade-ish?" Well, it just so happens that geography is my major.

National Geography Awareness Week, Nov. 11-17, was created by Congress in 1987 to focus national attention on geographical illiteracy in the United States and to look at the strategies being offered to combat it — to involve schools, campuses and communities in events exhibiting the importance of studying geography and to advance the place of geography in the curriculum.

Typically, when I tell a fellow student or co-worker that I am a geography major, s/he asks me with a snicker, "So, have you taken U.S. Capitals 101 yet?" or tests my knowledge of geographical "trivia." I am, therefore, dedicating this letter to those who find geography to be so trivial.

The study of geography is very relevant these days. Today, the study of global warming is quite a hot topic. Is this a regional, hemispheric or global phenomenon? Obviously, the research done on climatic change is very important to all of our futures but this topic is only one small part of physical geography.

On another end of the scale is the study of Third World development. Here, human geographers look at the history, issues, strategies and specific problems of development in the Third World.

On a more technical side of geography is cartography, the art of map-making. Planning and resource management (relating to water resources, deforestation, natural and man-made hazards) are other areas of study within the spectrum of geography.

Oh, and of course, for all business men and women there is economic geography. This area of study looks at the costs and benefits of locating industry in a particular region or country, specifically its social and economic impacts.

Certainly, as the world becomes more interdependent, the study of geography becomes more important. So, if any of these topics interest you and you need a major, minor, a Gen. Ed. or just an elective, check out the geography department. It's a small department with a global outlook!

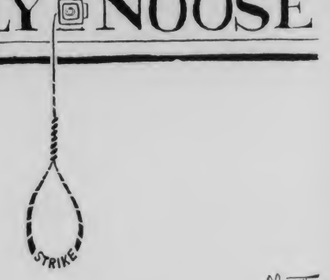
DAILY NOOSE



Nuclear arms and conflict

Regional crises such as Kuwait are nothing new. There have been crises and conflicts over land since the beginning of recorded history. More recently, there have been conflicts such as the Cuban Missile Crisis or the ongoing saga in Nicaragua.

Some factors change and the conflicts may be directed more over oil, ideology and strategic placement of missiles. But the fact is our world as a whole does not operate in ways to eliminate conflict.

The delicate network of economic interdependencies makes conflict likely. We receive oil from the Mideast, Japan receives oil from the Mideast, we buy countless products from Japan and export our products and factories to nations where we can make a profit.

We now have global market situations and soon we may have global nuclear situations. Nations like India and Israel are now in possession (or are believed to be) of nuclear weapons. Nations such as Libya, Iran or Iraq may be in possession of nuclear weapons in the next couple of decades. The superpowers will not possess a monopoly forever.

But because regional conflicts will most likely not disappear in the next couple of decades, there arises a new and frightening situation which we in the United States have not yet faced: dealing with Third World nations in possession of nuclear arsenals.

Imagine, after gaining control of Kuwait, Saddam Hussein had dramatically announced to the world that he was in the possession of not one but several nuclear weapons targetable on major cities throughout the globe. The negotiations in dealing with Iraq would be even more prolonged and agonizing than they are now.

For this reason, I further the belief that the time is coming when we will have to act more as a global community, and this means an alive and functional United Nations and not an empty figurehead of an organization.

In handling the crisis with firm but delicate care today, we are establishing vital precedents for tomorrow. It would be nice to pretend that we could play isolationist, but we are not isolated from the world nor they from us. The proliferation of economic markets has ensured this. Imbalances will develop and conflicts will arise.

Similarly, it would be nice to imagine that these conflicts are resolvable in a community without nuclear weaponry, but this is not practical thinking. Sadly, humankind's taste for armaments over our long history only indicates the further proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Thankfully, the current easing in East-West tensions may lead to a future climate where the resolution of Third World conflicts is more readily achievable, even in the light of nuclear proliferation.

But then, we must say that the world lies in the palm of the Soviet Union and the United States.

U.N. envoy to visit Israel

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Security Council and Israel have agreed that a U.N. envoy will visit Israel to discuss ways of protecting Palestinians, the U.S. ambassador says, in an apparent end to a bitter standoff.

Israel's refusal to allow a U.N. visit after police killed at least 17 Palestinians during last month's Temple Mount riot had threatened Arab-U.S. unity in the Persian Gulf crisis.

U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering said Wednesday after meeting with the 15 council members that "I detected a very strong note of interest in the council in the mission going ahead, so I assume it will go ahead."

Israel's international isolation has increased since it refused to cooperate with a Security Council request to send U.N. investigators to check on the Oct. 8 slayings at Temple Mount in Jerusalem's walled old city.

The United States joined the other 14 council members in voting unanimously Oct. 12 to condemn Israeli security forces for firing on Palestinian demonstrators and again a week later to criticize Israel for refusing to receive the U.N. mission.

for women on campus," she said.

She also said given customers' response last year, she is confident that this fund-raiser will meet, if not exceed, last year's total. "People lined up outside at 9 a.m. last year [the salon opened at 10 a.m.]," Alves said. This year's Cut-a-Thon will run from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center, said she has been pleased by the efforts of the two businesses, as well as the rest of the community. "In general," she said, "the response from the community has been wonderful."

In addition to the support the Center is receiving through these fund-raisers, Wallace said, Collective Copies donated $500 worth of copies to the center and Delta Chi fraternity and Iota Gamma Upsilon sorority have been raising money through raffles.

She added contributions from alumni and the other four colleges may also be sought.

Wallace also said the community assistance has improved the Center's morale, and additional funding could even reverse some of the damage from the budget cuts, including the elimination of the Counseling Program.

Tony Williams brings tight band to the Horse

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

The Tony Williams Quintet is coming to the Iron Horse in Northampton on Sunday night. This band, composed of the master drummer and four young sidemen, is one of the tightest around; give or take a bassist, they have been working together for several years.

Regular readers may have noticed that one of my problems with jazz today is that the industry is too quick to jump on young prodigies and offer them leader-status recording contracts when they should still be apprenticing under a master on the bandstand. Similarly, the industry is too quick to ignore those "middle-aged" musicians who have developed distinctive voices on their instruments but who are not old enough for so-called "living legend" status.

Tony Williams and his band are happy exceptions to this rule. Williams himself started out as a child prodigy, playing with alto saxophonist Jackie McLean at the tender age of 17. If he were 17 toady, he would be given a lucrative contract with CBS or Blue Note, his ego would over inflate, and he'd be burned out before he had the chance to find his own voice. Instead, he played with McLean for a couple of years and then went on to join Miles Davis' historic mid-60s band, which also included Herbie Hancock and Wayne Shorter.

In the late 60s, after roughly five years of invaluable apprenticeship under the masters, Williams formed his own group. Davis and others were going in the direction of fusing rock with jazz, and Williams went at it with a vengeance. The group Lifetime, which included guitarist John McLaughlin and organist Khalid Yasin (Larry Young), played music that could be described as Harlem organ-trio soul cross-bred with acid rock a la Hendrix or Pink Floyd. Lifetime cut two albums, unfortunately badly produced, and set a standard of raw energy for fusion that was subsequently never duplicated by others.

Williams remained in the jazz-rock world throughout much of the 70s. Then he joined Herbie Hancock, his former Miles Davis bandmate, in the VSOP Quintet. VSOP consisted of the members of Davis' mid-60s band, minus Miles, plus Freddie Hubbard on trumpet. All five had played fusion for the past several years; all were now returning to acoustic jazz. The resulting album, Hancock's VSOP, was a landmark that sowed the seeds for the current neo-traditionalist movement.

After VSOP, Williams recorded a few more neo-traditionalist albums with some of the same musicians plus trumpeter Wynton Marsalis. Then, in the mid-80s, he formed the band that is essentially the one that will be at the Iron Horse on Sunday: tenor saxophonist Billy Pierce, trumpeter Wallace Roney, pianist Mulgrew Miller and bassist Ira Coleman. These are four talented young musicians who all have albums out under their own names, yet they are learning the fine art of playing in a band under Williams. The quintet has cut four albums together, which in today's market is absolutely amazing.

Williams has managed to avoid the fate of many of today's "middle-aged" (older than Wynton, younger than Dizzy or Max) jazz musicians who have been squeezed out of the market even though they have worthwhile things to say. He has molded lessons learned from Elvin Jones and Art Blakey into one of the most exciting and unique drumming styles in jazz history.

His quintet's music, mostly written by him, is essentially a vibrant updating of the music he played in the 60s with Miles. Although it has definite traditional elements, it does not wear its obeisance to tradition on its sleeve; it is a superb example of how the jazz tradition can be expanded, rather than just imitated.

Tony Williams will be appearing at the Iron Horse on Sunday, Nov. 18 at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Free quality jazz

The Jazz Lab and the Jazz Ensemble I
The Hatch
Wednesday, Nov. 14

Attention jazz lovers, or even those of you who are thinking about getting into jazz. Want to hear quality jazz in a big band style, for free? Then check out the Jazz Lab and the Jazz Ensemble I, two of the student oriented jazz groups here at the University.

The Jazz Lab consists of primarily undergraduate music students and is conducted by graduate student, Herman Lebeaux. With five saxes, five trumpets, a tuba, three trombones and a rhythm section of piano, bass, drums and two guitars, the Jazz Lab's performance last Wednesday night at the Hatch was a first time public gig for several of the students. Were they nervous? Maybe. Did they impress? Definitely.

Opening with Ernie Wilkin's "We and Us," we were introduced to Mike Weber and Andy Berger on tenors, who gave structurally sound solos but seemed a little timid at first, as did the group as a whole. The drumming of Brian Daniels in "We and Us" as well as the second piece, Lennie Neihaus' "Poltergeist and Moonbeams" was solid. Good solos with sharp puncutuations and downbeats, but a little cagey with the rhythm work.

Then we came to a classic piece — Thad Jones' "Big Dipper," and the group started putting out the energy that not only is needed for a tune like this, but the kind of energy that really shows. A smooth sax intro led into some power bass playing and really clear trumpet sounds. Of note was Andy Diviva's playful use of his mute as he took it on and off and seemed to be having a really good time with it.

A pure guitar solo preceded another Andy Berger tenor solo which saw him go down and get some really deep and rich tones, definitely his best solo of the evening as the group as a whole seemed to get better as the night went on.

We also heard Louis Bellson's "The Untitled Waltz" which was done rather straighforward and the the Lab closed with Bud Powell's "Un Poco Loco."

Rambunctious trumpet work, including a spicy, almost salsa-like solo from C.J. Lombardo and a real solid, face-puffing solo from Kristy Bein on sax were some of the highlights of the evening.

REVIEW

Overall the Jazz Lab get the perennial "thumbs up." Real straight and honest play from some kids who have got some real talent. It was professional and well put together. Perfect for a Wednesday night, when when all this week I've been thinking about Tony Williams at the Iron Horse. Keep it up kids, and everyone else out there should start keeping an eye out for their future gigs.

After the Jazz Lab came the Jazz Ensemble I led by Jeff Holmes. Consisting of a mix of graduate and undergraduate music majors, some who have been instructed by Jeff Holmes in class as well, the Jazz Ensemble I continued the evening's buffet of quality work.

Unfortunately, I had to leave early and only heard part of the first set. Another Thad Jones piece, "Don't Get Sassy," started off as Herman Lebeaux sat in on pi[illegible] and really flowed nicely. Of special note was the baritone sax of Rich Hersh who pulled out a sonud that sounded —

Stanislavski pushes limits

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

The Shooting of Stanislavski
Hampshire College
Wednesday, Nov.14

The Russian pioneer of naturalism, Konstantin Stanislavski, is one of the giants of the theatrical world, who made his mark at the beginning of this century with such unparalleled successes as The Seagull by Anton Chekov. The more modern New York acting teacher Lee Strasberg brought the controversial "Method" to America, training such famous actors as Marilyn Monroe, Al Pacino, James Dean and Paul Newman. The Theatre Guild class under the direction of Sabrina Hamilton has exhaustively investigated a very interesting debate in theatre, which no one knows about, between these two men, both dead.

Let's be frank. (Or, according to the school of method acting, let us actually be Frank.) The critic and the cast may be the only people who understand this play. The audience enters across stage and the actors are the ones who are already there, in what looks like a Russian rehearsal for Anton Checkov's masterpiece, The Seagull. Suddenly an American video crew from the 1980s bursts in and begins shooting a documentary of the theatre company — thus the "shooting" of Stanislavski, but also the "skewing" of him as well. The American crew from the present gradually takes over the Russian company (as American Lee Strasberg took over Stanislavski's theories and, some say, perverted them by taking them to far and causing his actors to suffer nervous breakdowns).

At one moment in the first act we, the audience, are watching the American camera crew shooting the Russian theatre company which is putting on a performance of The Seagull, in which there is a character who is also putting on a play — or to put it more clearly, it's the play within the play within the play that's in a video documentary that we're watching. There is no central character, no plot, and no conclusion, just a series of alternately funny or informative events which either satirize or evoke controversy, but give you virtually nothing to go home on.

There are some 34 actors in the production, of which at least half are on the stage at any one time, usually watching each other. At times the stage becomes very busy and you're not sure who you're supposed to watch. This can be engaging, as in Barnum and Bailey, or boring and distracting, as if we had walked through the wrong door into the dressing room, and we're not supposed to watch anyone yet.

The cast remains in character before the show and during intermission; the box office clerk had such a convincing accent when I bought the ticket that I thought she was a foreigner, though the fake Russian accents are also a serious obstacle for the first half hour. The play is an ensemble piece and there is a strong, though not always well orchestrated ensemble spirit, however acting becomes tricky in a play about acting. One is often uncertain whether actors are satirizing some aspect of being an actor, or just trying to act and not succeeding.

In this montage the minor bits tend to be the most exciting: Josh Goldberg was the clowing sound-effects man

'Midway 10': Exhibit is diverse, imaginative, appealing

By JENNIFER SAARINEN
Collegian Correspondent

"Midway 10" features a variety of works from 10 Masters of Fine Arts students, midway through completion of their degree. From paintings to sculptures, charcoal drawings, an installation, and a video, this exhibit has it all. It is this diversity of media and styles which gives it strength and appeal.

The first thing which struck me when I walked into the Student Union Gallery was Ed Grant's "Thief in the Temple: Annunciation." This large red and black painted wooden temple is inserted with black and white photos of praying hands and a women's tortured face. It stands out as a powerful work as it questions Catholicism.

Also by Grant is a work simply entitled "Font." This consists of a metal container full of oil and a string which hangs from a contraption above and touches the oil as it reflects with a mirror-like quality. According to Grant, the work resembles a baptismal from the catholic church and the string represents "the connection between us and God."

Contrasting the strong symbolic nature of Grant's work are the simple but elegant female nude charcoal drawings by Anne Beidler, and the rustic, warm intaglio pieces by Lucina Roark, which give the impression of looking into a whirlwind of yellows and greens.

Chris Dobbs's, "Preserves-Self Portrait" consists of 21 Ball jars, each containing a photograph of a loved one, except the last jar, which is empty. One only has to guess to grasp the meaning of this.

REVIEW

In the center of the gallery were sculptures by John Taylor and Kathleen Gilrain. Taylor took everyday materials such as wood, brick, and plastic and attempted to organize them in an eye-catching manner. My attention was drawn to Gilrain's "Horse Egg," however, which is comprised of a huge metal orb painted white and brown and looks very much like a cow lying down.

Ron Kim's "I Am Sorry If My Dreams Made You Dizzy vs. Ex-Angel Hears God's Silly Chuckle," is composed of four small oil paintings and a platform which juts out from the wall with what looks like a wooden grammar school desk top attached to the top. I couldn't find the relationship between the different elements and in my opinion, the title is more interesting than the work itself.

For a change of pace, Karen Sullivan's video, "Apron Strings" is a pleasing view of how three generations of women create potato salad and the similarities between their methods. The editing is well done and each scene flows on to the next with perfect timing.

Perhaps the most imaginative feat of them all is the installation entitled "156 Re-shelled Eggs" by Andrew Norton. Norton completed the work in only a few hours before the reception. He broke 156 eggs and dropped each one in a zip-lock bag which he tacked up on the wall in a vertical column. It now stands eight feet tall and the yokes form interesting patterns as they seem to flow down the wall.

In relation to his brand of "new shell," Norton remarked, "I used Stop and Shop zip-locks. I highly recommend them."

I highly recommend taking a few moments and checking out "Midway 10" to catch a glimpse of what these very imaginative and diverse students are doing.

"Midway 10" will be at the Student Union Gallery through November 28.

MOM, WHERE DO WE KEEP THE PAPIER-MÂCHÉ?
WE DON'T HAVE ANY.
OH GREAT! JUST GREAT! HOW AM I GOING TO MAKE A ROADRUNNER WITHOUT PAPIER MÂCHÉ?!
MAYBE YOU SHOULDVE THOUGHT OF THAT BEFORE 7:00 AT NIGHT. YOU'LL HAVE TO MAKE ONE SOME OTHER WAY.
BUT HOW?!
THIS IS YOUR SCHOOL PROJECT, CALVIN. YOU DO THE WORK.
IF I GET A BAD GRADE, IT'LL BE YOUR FAULT FOR NOT DOING THE WORK FOR ME!

MMMM! YUMMY! YOUR MOLE LOOKS SCRUMPTIOUS TODAY, B.D.!
HELP YOURSELF, BUTTSY. I HOPE YOU LIKE YOUR GRUB POWDERED
DO I EVER! WHAT IS THIS, MEAT? SOUP? EGGPLANT?
BEATS ME. IT TASTES LIKE SOME SORT OF GROUTING COMPOUND.
MAN, I WISH BOOPSIE WOULD GET A PACKAGE TO ME. I'VE BEEN DREAMING EVERY NIGHT ABOUT HER BANANA BREAD AND CHOCOLATE CHIP COOKIES...
HE'S BEEN SENDING ME A VIBE — HE NEEDS CIGARETTES!
WELL, HE IS UNDER A LOT OF STRESS...

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Good ideas come up in casual conversation. Keep your ears and eyes open for new sources of financial backing. A creative hobby could lead to a second career. Romance sizzles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Nice rewards come your way from official sources. A promotion or raise may be featured. You decide to attend a special lecture or concert. Influential people are likely to grant favors now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your tact will help create a better work atmosphere. Accept an older person's offer of assistance. An unexpected reunion with a friend could make your evening most enjoyable.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Devise a daily routine and stick to it. Complete a major job before moving on to less important tasks. Firm up an earlier offer. Invest some money in order to improve a relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) New financial gains can be made if you strike while the iron is hot. Be bold; those in authority are impressed by practical solutions. Dress elegantly if attending a special event this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22) A telephone call could be a catalyst. Finish up a big project as soon as possible. Overseas contacts are more important than ever. Your romantic partner proves reliable.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) Exciting changes on the work scene allow you to showcase your originality. Teamwork is favored. Try to avoid buying things on impulse. Surprise your romantic partner with an evening on the town.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) Concentration will not come easy today. Plan to isolate yourself if working with financial figures. A photograph will trigger a flood of memories. Phone old friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Keep your emotions under tight control when at work today. A trusted friend will confide something that could help you in the near future. Postpone signing contracts or agreements.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Do not attempt to fool others today or you could lose out on something special. An unusually exciting career opportunity will present itself. Be more direct in your relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) An authority figure plays a major role in your career or financial decisions. Use extra caution in legal affairs. A gifted child enters your life. Romance is thrilling but may not last.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Someone from your past comes back into your life. If nervous energy is a problem, participating in active sports will help you relax. Be open-minded about new technology.

■ jazz at the hatch

dare I say — a little like Coleman Hawkins (I know Bean didn't play baritone but this guy Hersh was good!).

We also heard "That Old Black Magic" which featured trombonist John Farnsworth who couldn't match the strength of the rest of the horns who were giving some really hip, spiraling backup. Included in the horn work was some really ripping trumpet play from the whole section. On Roland Kirk's "Serenade to a Cuckoo" kudos go out to the rhythm section who had been excellent up until now as well. Real strong bass play and crisp, firm drumming are what made "Cuckoo" really fly.

I can only assume that the rest of the evening went as well, if not better and I really wish I could've stayed. I wouldn't have minded leaving so much if there had been a better crowd, but maybe I can understand what people are thinking: "How good can free jazz at the Hatch be?" The answer is damn good. Blow off your studying, skip watching Thirtysomething, and catch these gigs when they come around (which is once a semester, I believe) because it is more than worth it.

■ Stanislavski

Josef; the mild mannered actor Gustavo Garcia and the poignant Rachel Sledd round out the obstinately Russian cast; Jess Hill and Jake Perrine made incharacter video cool guys manhandling their interviewees; Jennifer Haag gives us the most hilarious and finely crafted scene of the evening as the ultimate neurotic actress/dancer Isadora Duncan, who remembers Stanislavski in her interview as "a potted plant;" Barry Weil puts in a well-characterized and passionate Strasberg, along with his lovely playmate and model actress Jessica Kane; and finally Mal Nichols has found his best part yet as the God-like Stanislavski who ironically has no lines in a play about himself.

There's some character in The Seagull, the play within the play, named "Trigorion" who never shows up for some reason, and the lackey scriptwriter from the American crew is substituted.

With script in hand he begins to deliver lines woodenly ("I haven't acted since college") but soon he gets into the character, drops the script, and begins to sympathize with the situation, to realize that his life is like that of the character's who lived a hundred years ago. I tried to find the significance in this and many other provocative moments, but my final is that there isn't any, or the meaning is too diffuse for synthesis. The play was fundamentally written about actors, by actors, and for actors, and no matter how interesting it may be for someone on the inside, it is never quite entertainment, and little better than boring for the uninitiated people on the outside.

■ Milli Vanilli

record was out, there were some people who raised some questions."

The questions were never really answered as the Vanillis won a 1989 Grammy for Best New Artist. Rob Pilatus and Fab Morvan became international stars, lip-syncing their way through television and concert appearances.

"Girl, You Know It's True," and "Blame It On the Rain," were huge hit singles for the band. At the MTV Awards, the boys boasted they were better than Elvis or Bob Dylan.

Farian — who has a new album with a new group coming out in January — said he was forced to go public with the revelation when the guys told him they wanted to sing on the follow-up to "Girl, You Know It's True."

"I said, 'No, I don't go for that.' Sure, they have a voice, but that's not what I want to use on my records," said Farian, describing the encounter earlier this month.

is on Pitt only because they seem to be revamped, if you will. After starting the season 1-3, they have won four of their last five, on the other hand or foot, has been in a serious draught, just plain winless in their last couple at bats.

$ROCKY$ le fifth comes out today. Will Sly never learn? He gets his face kicked in every time. You think someone would sit the man down and say, "Look Rock, you get your face kicked in every time, give it up babe." But the show must go on, the show must go on.

If you are a sports fanatic or just someone who likes to crack a couple o' brew-pups and sit and watch a couple of games on the tube, then you may understand my problem. It is with the Boston Bruins.

They have not shown what they can really do yet this year. The Stanley Cup defeat, which I know had something to do with the New Kids "Hangin' Tough" tune, may have hurt them deeper than I thought.

The Bruins are a great team, but they have these let downs like giving up three goals in less than two minutes Wednesday night against that team from Connecticut. Someone needs to wake up the B's and quick.

We lost to Japan in Big League ball this year 4-3-1. I heard the Japanese used their technology though, to emit this high pitched noise that made it hard for the Americans to think and it took the guys three games before they could get used to it.

Well, I think I'm done. This column had to be oh so long and it is. I will talk to y'all later and remember, as it was said it the movie Major League, "Forget the curveball Ricky, give em' the heater."

Dave Szpila is a Collegian columnist

■ field hockey season wrap up

Hixon was not ready to start talking about next year's team. But when she does sit down and assess who and what she needs to replace, she will be looking to fill the shoes of captains Lisa Berardinelli and Beth Thornton.

Berardinelli's aggressive style was unmatched by any of her teammates this year. She was never afraid to bump shoulders with the opposition, and she frustrated many players in her four years.

Thornton was the quarterback of the mid-field, and her presence on and off the field will be sorely missed.

"We had a lot of leadership," Hixon said. "I have no regrets [about this season] at all.

Scoring was the main problem for this team. Frattasio led all scorers with 11 goals and five assists. Junior Dawn Trumbauer chipped in seven goals as did senior Kerri Fagan. However, there was no one player who took on the scoring load left behind by DeAngelis.

The biggest surprise of this team was the play of freshman Jen Salisbury (five goals) who's constant hustle and hard work earned her a spot in the starting lineup midway through the season.

"The team of 1990 had a purpose. If it was to get me my 200th, then so be it, they put their minds to it and they did it."

What this team was unable to accomplish was neither win the Atlantic 10 Tournament nor advance to the final four in the NCAAs.

"I'm disappointed that we didn't make it to the final four, Hixon said. "But at the same time I wouldn't say that we underachieved. This team gave it their all, and that's all any coach can ask for. Without players, coaches don't get wins."

Unblemished Minutemen face UNH

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

With the Yankee Conference title and the playoff spot that comes with it already in the bank, what is left for the University of Massachusetts football team to play for?

For starters, a home playoff game and the first undefeated regular season since 1963 will be on the line when the Minutemen play New Hampshire (6-3-1, 4-3) Saturday at Cowell stadium in Durham, N.H. (12:30 p.m.).

There's also a bit of a rivalry going on here.

Last November, the Wildcats rolled into Amherst in need of a win to make the playoffs. UNH lead 28-18, but UMass scored three touchdowns in less than four minutes late in the game and won 34-28.

UMass has handed UNH coach Bill Bowes four such defeats in the past 10 years.

Now the spoiler role could be UNH's. The Minutemen (8-0-1, 7-0) have not lost since last year, and head to Durham Saturday ranked No. 4 in the nation.

A loss would destroy UMass' chances of hosting a playoff game Nov. 24, and derail the school's first undefeated season since Vic Fusia's Minutemen went 8-0-1 in 1963.

The Minutemen are coming off a 3-0 win over Villanova in which the Wildcats were held to five yards rushing on 30 attempts. UMass has the top-rated defense in the league, and is one of the five best teams in the country against the rush.

UNH's offense, meanwhile, is the rush. Sophomore tailback Barry Bourassa, a 5-foot-7, 165 pound streaker, leads the Yankee Conference in every run-related category, including yards-per-game (107.3), total yards (858) and touchdowns (11). This season Bourassa has busted 10 plays for 35 yards or more, incluilding five for touchcowns.

As the Wildcats raced to a 6-0-1 record to open the season, Bowes worried openly about his quarterbacks. Bowes' worst fears have come true in the last three weeks as the Wildcats have dropped three straight — including a 24-14 loss at Rhode Island last week — to drop out of contention.

Though the Wildcats have the best total offense in the conference (424.9 yards-per-game) the quarterback spot, anchored much of the season by junior Matt Griffin, has hurt them. Griffin is strong-armed, but erratic, and has thrown 15 interceptions in 10 games.

Freshman Dave McGovern will make his second consecutive start at quarterback for UMass, and John Johnson will return at tailback after twisting an ankle in the first half last week and leaving the game.

Pre-game notes: The game will be broadcast on WTTT 1430 AM and WMUA 91.1 FM with Mike Fagerson, Tim Ashwell and Adrienne Matt . . . UMass leads the series 34-13-3, and has won five of six.

Women's swimming preps for Maine

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team has had Saturday, Nov. 17 circled on their schedule since the beginning of the season.

Tomorrow at noon their anticipation will end as they host the University of Maine at Boyden pool.

The reason the date has been singled out is because it's not just another meet for these swimmers.

It's a continuation of a long, intense rivalry between the two squads. UMass has placed higher than Maine in tournament competitions, but has yet to defeated them in a dual meet.

Nonetheless, Saturday could change that.

UMass is undefeated so far this season with two encouraging wins. They trounced Smith College in the season opener and gained some confidence in a come-from-behind victory over Vermont last week.

The Minutewomen have been successful in all strokes and distances with contributions coming from all members of the team. They have had a swimmer finish first in 21 of the 28 races in their first two meets. In addition, they have already set one school record, several pool records as well as numerous individual lifetime bests.

Maine enters the meet with a 2-0 record as well. However, their two wins were against Canadian teams that Maine coach Jeff Wren described as unchallenging. Since then, the experienced squad composed of mostly juniors and seniors has been hampered by multiple injuries and sickness.

Maine will be without the services of their best backstroker and top breaststroker as well as their best all-around swimmer Jennifer Denison who was described by Wren as "limited" because of a back injury.

"We're going to do our best with what we've got," he said.

The Minutewomen on the other hand are pumped-up and ready to go. Coach Robert Newcomb said Maine has been the main conversation at practice for weeks and described the team as "sky-high" for the meet.

"It's about time," Newcomb said of the Maine meet. "I think we've got what it takes this season. I think this is definitely our year."

The god does not stop there. You start off a game that you know how to play and you f... up. Next thing you do is get yourself killed so you can start over again. How do you think the midget on the screen feels about that?

Cross country coach pleased

Each harrier contributed to team's success

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

According to University of Massachusetts coach Julie LaFreniere this years women's cross country team was consistent, dedicated and ran with a lot of pride; and that was just about all she could ask for.

UMass started the season by defeating Lowell and losing to Boston College, then beat Springfield the following week. UMass the hit the low point of its season when it lost to Providence and arch-rival Connecticut.

The team rebounded to beat three schools, Vermont, Rhode Island and New Hampshire, in its next meet. UMass finished the regular season with a 5-3 record.

At the Atlantic-10 Championships UMass uncharacteristically did not perform as a team, but still managed to finish third.

"The A-10s was the only time we did not go out and go for the win," LaFreniere said. "Usually we run hard from the start but that day we were too laid back."

One bright spot on the day was the performance of Kelly Liljeblad who came close to taking A-10 Freshman-of-the-Year honors.

The following week UMass competed in the New England Championships and finished 4th out of 34 teams. For LaFreniere it was the high water mark of the season.

"We performed as a team that day because everyone wanted to win," LaFreniere said. "We were lead by Becky (Johnson) and Kelly but it was the whole team that ran well."

Last Saturday at the ECAC Championships UMass again performed well and finished 15th out of 76 teams from the Northeast. The competition was held during a cold down pour and the fact that UMass ran so well under trying conditions impressed Lafreniere.

"At the ECACs we were able to close the gap on teams that beat us eariler in the year," she said. "The team was very excited when we tied UConn and beat Harvard, a team we had no business beating.

"How we ran at that meet was characteristic of this team," LaFreniere continued. "We have some good talent on this team, but everyone on the team has a head to go with the talent. They were not afraid to work hard and they ran to their potential.

"I have coached teams with more talent but no team that worked as hard. They earned their success," she said.

The team was obviously lead by Becky Johnson and Kelly Liljeblad but it was the depth on the team which made them a success.

"Each meet someone else would step up with a big performance," LaFreniere said. "Dana Goldfarb, Michelle St. Laurent, Cathy Crocker, Kathy Holt and Mo Meldrim were all very consistent but each also had one big meet. None of them were afraid to run with a lead pack or pass a top runner. That is what you need for success."

Consistency, dedication and pride is what is required for success and that is what UMass proved it had.

Hixon's 200th highlights season

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Coach Pam Hixon's 200th win will be the most remembered moment of the 1990 University of Massachusetts field hockey season.

The Minutewomen lacked the necessary scoring punch to compete with the top teams in the country, and thus were unable to win some close-scoring matches.

"You've got to look at the whole picture," Hixon said. "We lost Kathy DeAngelis, who accounted for probably 90 percent of our scoring last year. We had very little scoring returning, with the exception of Mara (Frattasio), who's stats were good.

"I think that the Northeastern game showed our inability to finish off scoring chances," she said of the 1-0 loss. "It was a mental turning point, we saw that we needed to be tenacious, and attack every minute. It was an eye opener."

Soon after the loss to the Huskies, the Minutewomen ran off nine straight wins.

"You don't just wish for things like that, you go out and make it happen," Hixon said. "This team had an urgency to get the job done, they decided that they could do more, and they did."

In actuality, this was a defense-oriented team. Goalie Philippa Scott shut down the opposition. Scott allowed just 17 goals, (eight to Old Dominion) and had 11 shutouts, in 22 games.

Iraq to free hostages if 'peace' unchanged

By WALTER C. PUTNAM
Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq will begin allowing foreign hostages to leave the country beginning on Christmas "unless something would take place that mars the atmosphere of peace," Iraqi officials said Sunday.

Baghdad's latest peace move came as the United States worked to secure international approval for a U.N. resolution authorizing the use of force to dislodge Iraqi troops from Kuwait, which Iraq invaded Aug.2. The White House dismissed the move.

Iraq said the estimated 600 Westerners and others held at strategic sites since the early stages of the Persian Gulf crisis could all be freed by March, an official announcement on Baghdad television said.

The Iraq News Agency said the decision was made in a meeting presided by President Saddam Hussein.

INA said it was decided "that foreign guests would be allowed to travel on batches as from Dec. 25 and within a period of three months, the last batch of which would leave the Iraqi territories on March 25 unless something would take place that mars the atmosphere of peace."

Iraq has been encouraged to make such a gesture in an effort to clear the way for some sort of peace talks. Practically every elder statesman who has visited Iraq on peace missions — from former British Prime Minister Edward Heath to ex-German chancellor Willy Brandt — told officials in Baghdad that it would be the proper step.

The release of the foreigners may be an effort to forestall any decision by the U.S. administration to go to war over the next few months. The Moslem holy month of Ramadan begins in March, and it also could delay action by Arab military forces that joined the U.S.-led buildup in Saudi Arabia.

In Paris, a spokesman for President Bush shrugged off the announcement.

"We want all the hostages released," said White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Rain forest group protests

Local action group targets Mitsubishi

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

With shouts of "Ban Mitsubishi!" a local group gathered on the Amherst Common Saturday to protest Mitsubishi Corporation's involvement in the depletion of the world's tropical rain forests.

The Rainforest Action Group, part of the international Rainforest Action Network, is urging consumers to ban all Mitsubishi products. According to the group, the company has had a brutal impact on rain forests in Malaysian Borneo, the Philippines, Indonesia, Chile, and Brazil.

According to the group, Mitsubishi Corp. has been single- handedly responsible for devastating thousands of acres of rain forests and promoting cultural genocide on a global scale.

"Rain forest destruction is directly related to global warming and the destruction of life," said Bart Bouricius, member of the local Rainforest Action Group. "Deforestation will lead to a change in the earth's temperature, eventually turning the areas into deserts."

The group, in solidarity with the Japanese Tropical Action Network, is proposing the ban on Mitsubishi Motors, which also makes parts for Chrysler Corporation, Mitsubishi Electronic, makers of VCR's, FAX machines, stereos, Kirin Beer and Nikon camera equipment.

"By boycotting Mitsubishi products, the consumer will be sending a message to the company," said Michael Ferretti, another member of the local rain forest group.

On a global scale, the group says that tropical rain forests are being destroyed at a rate of 80,000 square miles a year, an area roughly the size of the state of Pennsylvania.

"Our job is to inform people of what is happening there," said Bouricius. "We must address the international issues by acting both locally and nationally."

Dukakis says business sales tax repeal possible

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Dukakis says it might be reasonable to repeal a new sales tax on business services a few years from now if the state's economy rebounds.

But he cautions against taking such steps immediately, citing the state's fragile financial condition.

Dukakis said he gave this advice to his successor, Republican Gov.-elect William Weld, during a private meeting this weekend. The two men were in Lexington, Ky., for a National Governors' Association seminar.

Dukakis said he told Weld that because of the state's uncertain fiscal situation, it would be unwise to immediately repeal the sales tax extension approved earlier this year.

The tax is expected to bring in from $100 million to $145 million a year.

"All I am saying is that this is a year when we just have got to take it a step at a time," Dukakis told the Boston Globe. "We have got to be very, very careful about things that are going to throw us out of balance."

The broadening of the sales tax was part of a tax package signed by Dukakis in July to help solve the state's budget problems. Since then, however, revenues have continued falling below projections, forcing deep cuts in state programs.

The Democratic governor said he advised Weld to make the repeal of the tax on professional services a more distant goal.

"In year two or three, when, let us hope, the Middle Eastern thing is resolved, the economy is starting to turn around, there is a little daylight and so on and so forth, there is no reason why he can't go out there and advocate repealing this tax," Dukakis said.

Weld confirmed Dukakis had counseled him to go slow on the service tax, but otherwise would only comment that the meeting had been "good."

Earlier, however, Weld reiterated his commitment to repeal the tax, saying he would like to see this action taken by the Legislature.

Minutemen, off first loss, will face William and Mary

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will travel to Virginia over Thanksgiving break to face William and Mary in the first round of the Division I-AA playoffs.

The Minutemen (8-1-1) missed out on their chance to host a playoff game when they were drilled Saturday at New Hampshire 36-18 and dropped to ninth in the polls. The loss was UMass' first of the season.

William and Mary is 9-2 and ranked seventh in Division I-AA. The Indians beat four Yankee Conference teams this season: Connecticut (24-7), Villanova (37-14), Delaware (24-12), and last Saturday, Richmond (31-10). Their two losses were to The Citadel, 34-31, and Division I Virginia, 63-35.

"This will be a real tough game for us. They played Virginia tough," coach Jim Reid said after pairings for the 16-team tournament were announced yesterday.

"But [UMass] has found a way to win all season...it's been a nice balance of offense and defense. We'll be entering the game as heavy underdogs I'm sure, but don't count us out yet."

Saturday at Durham, N.H., the Wildcats ripped the 'Even Silver Slide Adjust' pass defense that lead UMass to wins over Boston University and Richmond and a tie at Holy Cross. New Hampshire scored on four of its first five possessions to open a 29-0 lead by the early second quarter.

"We didn't play it well enough," Reid said of his defensive alignment. "It comes down to focus and concentration...We went into a little panic when things didn't go right."

Quarterback Matt Griffin (28 of 36, for 3 TDs and 369 yards), tailback Barry Bourassa (152 all-purpose yards and 3 TDs) and split end David Gamble (6 catches, 115 yards) did the most damage for UNH, with Griffin connecting on several spectacular passes early in the game that seemed to deflate the usually bold UMass secondary.

UNH's first possession set the tone. Griffin slipped away from a blitzing Mario Perry to toss a drive-sustaining 17-yard pass to midfield, and found Gamble in triple coverage for 19 more. He burned another UMass blitz for a 14-yard touchdown pass to Bourassa, and a muffed snap on the point after was turned into a two-point conversion by holder Shawn Lane: UNH lead 8-0.

Bush begins meetings with leaders on Persian Gulf crisis

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

IN THE CITY OF LIGHTS — President Bush talks with French President Francois Mitterand in the Elysee Palace Sunday night.

PARIS (AP) — President Bush on Sunday began a series of meetings with allied leaders aimed at solidifying support for his Persian Gulf policies. He urged German Chancellor Helmut Kohl to take a more active role in confronting Iraq's "challenges to peace and freedom."

During a rain-drenched half-day in Germany, Kohl cautioned Bush against pursuing a military solution before exhausting all avenues of negotiation. Bush said he, too, would like to see a peaceful solution to the crisis.

The president then traveled to Paris for a 34-nation summit of North American and European nations. It was the third stop on an eight-day trip highlighted by the signing Monday of a conventional forces treaty with the Soviet Union and Thanksgiving dinner with U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia.

French President Francois Mitterand hosted Bush for Sunday dinner and the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait was high on the agenda. Mitterand, like Kohl, is stressing a non-military outcome to the Persain Gulf crisis.

During the 45-minute dinner, Bush and Mitterand agreed "that it is necessary to pursue and strengthen the action taken in the framework of the U.N. Security Council," Mitterand spokesperson Robert Vedrine said.

In Rome, meanwhile, Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said "new ideas" have emerged to avert a war in the Persian Gulf. "I am convinced that we will succeed in finding a way out of this deep crisis," he said.

Gorbachev did not elaborate.

Bush and Gorbachev planned to meet over breakfast Tuesday.

Bush is seeking to build support for a United Nations resolution authorizing military action to drive Iraq's Saddam Hussein from Kuwait.

Bush landed early Sunday evening at Orly Airport in Paris after visiting Kohl's home region of Oggersheim.

Although Bush and Kohl sought to gloss over their differences, the two clearly came down on different sides of the issue of using force in the Persian Gulf.

Hair (fund)-raising event held for Everywomen's Center

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

People turned out in force yesterday as Hair East held a benefit Cut-a-thon to aid the financially-ailing Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Close to 100 people went to the salon and raised $950 for the EWC as a result.

Area Supervisor of the Hair East chain, Dawn Eichhorn, said she was pleased with the turnout for the Cut-a-thon. By 2 p.m., customers were being turned away because the wait was over three hours long.

"The reason we decided on the Everywomen's Center is because it has been the target of so many budget cuts. It's a worthwhile center and we support their efforts," she said.

During a similar Cut-a-thon last year, Hair East raised more than $1500 for diabetes.

Some 14 hair designers from the Hair East stores in Amherst, Agawam, West Springfield and Southampton donated their time. Guest designer Manfred Schulz from Germany also volunteered time.

To his knowledge there are no fund raising events like this in Germany, but he was happy to be part of the Hair East team for the day.

Funding to the EWC was cut severely over the past semester when $400,000 was reduced from the budget of Student Affairs. As a result, two counselling positions were transferred out of the EWC to Mental Health Services and the Financial Aid Office.

Some 55 register as potential marrow donors

Some 55 people were tested in a blood drive in an effort to find potential bone marrow donors, according to organizers of the drive yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

The free blood testing drive reflected a national movement to encourage individuals, particularly minorities, to register as potential bone marrow donors, a drive official said.

According to the National Marrow Donor Program, 18,000 people die each year from leukemia and currently there are only 4,000 minorities, as opposed to 220,000 Caucasians, registered as potential bone marrow donors.

The drive was organized by the family of Jonathan McGowan, 18, a Norwell high school student diagnosed with leukemia last July.

McGowan, who is Korean and adopted, has been unsuccessful in finding a donor who matches his HLA blood type.

"My first motivation is helping Jonathan but I'm also doing this to raise awareness and educate the public about bone marrow transplants," Heather McGowan, 19, who has been across the country promoting her brother's story, said yesterday at the drive.

Awareness of the need for minority donors has reached the Federal Government as it recently allocated $13 million for minority blood testing, McGowan said.

Springfield residents debate US in Mideast

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Amid growing national debate over the U.S. military role in the Persian Gulf, about 200 residents here gathered for a town meeting to share their views on the crisis.

The presence of U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia and the cost of U.S. involvement there is an issue that has touched the people of Springfield. Residents of the western Massachusetts town are reminded of the crisis everyday as C5-As, the nation's largest air cargo carriers, take off and land at nearby Westover Air Force base, taking troops and supplies to the Middle East.

"We shouldn't be involved in it. It has nothing to do with us," said Danielle Kutt, an ROTC Air Force student at Springfield Central High School.

The crisis in the Persian Gulf also has made Westover the site of repeated demonstrations by groups protesting the U.S. involvement in the Middle East confrontation.

"I feel I've done everything else that I know what to do to try to slow down the war machines, so I think it's time to put our bodies on the line," said Frances Crowe, who was recently arrested for her part in a Westover protest.

Others at Saturday night's town meeting, however, were more supportive of the U.S. role in the Persian Gulf. Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2. Officials announced earlier in the month that another 200,000 U.S. troops would join the 230,000 Americans already deployed in the region.

World War II veteran Michael Rostkowski said the United States needs to stand strong against Saddam Hussein, the leader of Iraq.

"We need oil and we're trying to insure the Persian Gulf situation doesn't escalate into World War III and the way we do that is to cut out the cancer that is causing the problem, and that's you know who," Rostkowski said.

But Jim Tillotson, the father of an Army lieutenant sent to the Gulf, spoke more about caution and defense than aggression.

"I've lived through Vietnam and I certainly don't want to see any young men and women in that position again. Whether it be my son or anyone else's child," Tillotson said.

The town meeting was videotaped for an upcoming episode of the PBS television show, "Frontline," and was hosted by correspondent Bill Moyers. Frontline will present "Springfield Goes to War," a look at how U.S. communities like Springfield are responding to international crisis. The show will air Tuesday at 9 p.m. EST.

CNN restricted from broadcast of Noreiga tapes

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court refused by a 7-2 vote Sunday to give Cable News Network permission to broadcast tape recordings of conversations between Panama's Gen. Manuel Noriega and his lawyers.

The court rejected an emergency request by CNN that was aimed at lifting a federal judge's order forbidding the broadcasts until he could determine what the tapes disclose.

The emergency request had called the Nov. 8 order by U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler in Miami an unconstitutional "prior restraint" of free speech. But only two justices — Thurgood Marshall and Sandra Day O'Connor — agreed with that assessment.

Voting against CNN were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Harry A. Blackmun, John Paul Stevens, Antonin Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy and David H. Souter.

The Justice Department had joined with Noriega's lawyers in opposing the request.

The court also turned down a formal appeal the cable network filed.

CNN President Tom Johnson called the court's decision "a loss of a battle in a continuing war against censorship."

Johnson said the network would immediately turn over the tapes in its possession over to Judge Hoeveler. He said CNN is "confident that after he reviews them he will decide on the merits to deny the prior restraint."

In a dissenting opinion for himself and O'Connor, Marshall said "this case is of extraordinary consequences for freedom of the press."

"Our precedence makes unmistakably clear that any prior restraint of expression comes to this court bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity and that the proponent of this drastic remedy carries a heavy burden of showing justification for its imposition," Marshall said.

Jane Kirtley, executive director, Reporter's Committee for Freedom of the Press, said she was "stunned" by the decision, which she calls "truly unprecedented."

"The fact that the court would be willing to tolerate a prior restraint in these circumstances signals a new era in First Amendment jurisprudence," Kirtley said. "It will have a far-reaching impact going beyond this case extending to many cases in state and federal courts around the country.

Noriega is awaiting trial on charges of taking $4.6 million in payoffs to protect cocaine trade through Panama. He is being held in a federal prison near Miami.

Federal prison authorities monitor and tape record inmates' telephone conversations except those between an inmates and their defense teams. But the CNN tape recordings reportedly contain conversations between the deposed Panamanian leader and his defense lawyers.

CNN is under court order not to broadcast those portions of its tapes divulging Noriega's conversations with his lawyers.

rain forests

The group is calling for the United States to join the Europeans and the Australians in waging an all-out campaign against Mitsubishi Corp.

Bournicius said that the consequences of the continued deforestation would be disastrous.

"It would lead to flooding, erosion, pollution, and the displacement of many people for whom the rain forest is home," he said.

According to Bournicius, the Rainforest Group has been successful in boycotting Burger King from buying beef produced by continually cutting forests and converting them into pasture.

The rally ended with a make-shift battle between Godzilla, the defender of nature, and the Mitsubishi Corp., a symbol of the destruction of nature. Defending a tree, Godzilla was able to destroy the "Mitsubishi Monster," much to the delight of the crowd.

donors

First Lady Barbara Bush has been involved in the campaign too. She recently appeared on the ABC soap opera All My Children appealing to the national public to register as potential donors, McGowan said.

"The more publicity, the less fear and hesitation people will have about registering as donors. With this education process, people will realize how important it is and will want to do their part," she said.

Results of yesterday's testing will be stored in an international database. If preliminary matches are found, the potential donor will be contacted for additional testing, according to the program.

"If people are interested in registering as potential donors, they can call 1-800-654-1247 and talk to Terry Kerner," McGowan said.

The drive was sponsored by the United Asian Learning Resource Center, an on-campus organization serving the Asian community.

ONE MILLION OF THE BEST MINDS IN AMERICA HAVE ALREADY CHOSEN THE BEST RETIREMENT PROGRAM.
TIAA-CREF.

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people in the education and research communities. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities.

We currently offer you Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) and are working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan (ORP) in Massachusetts. ORP-type plans are currently offered at public institutions of higher education in 41 of the 50 states.

SOLID PERFORMANCE AND TIMELY INNOVATION
Whether you are just starting your career or you are nearing retirement we can help you prepare for the future. Since 1918, we've been dedicated to making sure that people in education and research can count on a comfortable retirement.

We pioneered the portable pension. We invented the variable annuity. In 1988, we created the CREF Money Market Account to give you more flexibility. And in March of this year, we introduced two new accounts, the CREF Bond Market Account and the CREF Social Choice Account, to let you shape and diversify your retirement investments even further.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe that steady incremental growth over the long term is the best way to build retirement income. This investment philosophy has worked well for over seventy years, and has provided retirement income for hundreds of thousands of people like you.

THE KEYS TO RETIREMENT INVESTING
Security, growth, and diversity are the keys to sound retirement investing: security, so the resources are sure to be there when it's time to retire; growth, so you'll have the income you need for the kind of retirement you want; and diversity to help protect you against volatility and to let you benefit from the strengths of several types of investments.

TIAA AND CREF—A SMART COMBINATION
TIAA's traditional annuity provides maximum safety, guaranteeing your principal and a specified interest rate. It also gives you the opportunity for growth through dividends—which we've declared every year for 41 years. In fact, TIAA's net earned rate has beaten the industry average for every one of those years.†

With CREF's variable annuity, you can choose from four different investment accounts, all managed by experts who understand the long-term strategies essential to sound retirement planning.

THE FIRST CHOICE IN EDUCATION AND RESEARCH
The TIAA-CREF retirement system is specifically designed for people in education and research. You may move from one institution to another many times in your career, so your annuities move with you to any of over 4,200 institutions with TIAA-CREF retirement plans. You need financial security, so the system provides retirement income you cannot outlive. Plus, the TIAA-CREF system offers:

Performance: The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.‡

Responsiveness: Our experienced counselors are ready to answer your questions. Call our toll-free numbers for performance figures or information about your personal annuity accumulations.

Strength: Your future is protected by the largest private retirement system in the world. We have done so well, for so many, for so long, that we currently manage over $80 billion in assets.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writers or cartoonists and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The Allies: 'We are not dealing with an ideal situation'

Yes, it's bad that nearly half a million of our soldiers are now preparing to fight a war in the name of cheap oil. The dependence on foreign oil fostered during Reagan's presidency may now cost us thousands of young lives that could be better spent. In the view of an ethical purist, this is decidedly wrong.

But has anyone considered the alternatives?

We aren't dealing with an ideal situation. America is dependent on cheap foreign oil and our soldiers are there to defend this, whether it should be that way in the eyes of the average liberal on the street. Given the facts of life as they are, what were our alternatives, really?

At the time the soldiers were sent to the Arab Peninsula, Iraq was poised to take Saudi Arabia and her satellite states, Yemen, the U.A.E., Bahrain and Qatar. Domination of this region would have given Saddam Hussein control over the lion's share of the world's oil supply, and he had already announced his intent to double or triple the current market price for this oil.

The world would have two options: pay his prices or enact an embargo similar to the one in effect now. If an embargo had been in place, the remaining member nations of OPEC would not have been able to pick up the slack, as has been done now with Kuwait.

Whether we paid his prices or told him to stuff his oil, the outcome would be the same: global economic recession. Gas lines in America would dwarf the ones we may remember from the seventies. Developing nations would stop dead in their tracks. Wars would start purely for economic reasons.

Bradley P. Heintz

And what would happen to the Soviet Union? (And for that matter, Eastern Europe?) They are currently going through a massive restructuring process, attempting to start a functional market economy from scratch and enter the world's economic arena as the equal of the rest of the giants. There is only one way that this will happen, and that is with lovin' spoonfuls of economic aid from the capitalist giants of the world: the United States, Japan, Germany and the European Economic Community.

If the world economy is in deep recession, this simply will not happen. The Soviet economy will collapse, and not neatly. Food riots and continued ethnic and separatist strife would certainly ensue, and the second Russian Revolution in this century could potentially follow. Is it really worth risking all that the superpowers have accomplished in just the past five years to say, "It's wrong to have our soldiers there fighting for cheap oil?"

The idealists are right to a point: The last thing any sane person wants to see right now is a war with Iraq, and America should have explored alternate energy sources rather than put all its eggs in one Arabian basket. But idealists sometimes have trouble facing the here and now, losing functional perspectives among lofty ideals. They say, "I refuse to deal with this because it's to the way it should be," when they should be asking themselves, "Okay, the situation is bad, but given that things are as they are and it's too late to change them, what can I do here and now?"

We can't go back in time and change the Reagan administration's energy policy, or the other mistakes that led us into our current bind. Our course of action now, though, should be clear: to keep ourselves from getting in a worse bind, and to learn enough from this foolish mess to keep it from happening again. The first is being done now by Bush and our soldiers in the Persian Gulf region.

The second part is up to you in the 1992 election. Good luck.

Who is the true enemy?

The year is 1969. A 20-year-old soldier lies on his stomach in the heart of Vietnam, dressed in khaki fatigues, silently saying prayers to the Blessed Virgin that she keep him safe, and protect him from harm. The sweat drips off his face, and the artillery flies overhead. The sounds of the bazooka guns and hand grenades exploding everywhere keep his heart beating as fast as humanly possible.

Gayle Long

This man was my father.

Twenty-one years ago, my father was 20, the age I am now.

My father was called by his country to fight in a foreign land, despite his religious or moral beliefs. He was young, too young to have to give up these beliefs to fight a war where the enemy was undefinable and every step he took could have meant his death.

I thank God everyday my father was one of the ones to come back alive. Now, I have another concern.

It is my own generation. It is my friends, my cousins and most importantly — my one and only brother.

This is indeed a cruel world.

I get nauseous thinking about how close this nation is to war. It really has nothing to do with the ideology of "why we are over there."

It is the rather scary thought of "who's not coming back" which haunts not only me, but those who have felt the death of a loved one who died for a seemingly noble but intangible ideal, and leaves them with only a memory, an empty feeling, without a chance to say a last good-bye, a last kiss, the final handshake.

It is those who have been there, and are still troubled about what exactly happened.

We, as a nation, are starting to glorify war again. Do we really want to go to war?

How many of us have heard the horror stories not only of Vietnam, but of World War II and Korea? How could anyone in their right mind want to kill and be killed?

For every American casualty, there is a family, a friend or loved one who will be grieving. The same is true for the Saudis, the French, the British, the Soviets, and yes, even for the Iraqis.

We are all human beings. How quickly we seem to forget.

In Vietnam, there was a young lieutenant named Calley, who was about 22 years old. Lt. Calley was a young, patriotic and passionate man, who had seen his men killed, dying terrible horrific deaths. His men entered the town of Song My and began to systematically kill every human being in the village.

"Why?" was the question the press was eager to know. Why did he and his men kill over 370 Vietnamese — old men, women and small children? Why did they throw infants, too young to pick up a gun or throw a grenade, into a ravine to die?

Because they were angry and they were scared. They couldn't figure out who the enemy was. And this undefinable enemy had taken their buddies away from them.

It is hard to deal with death, any way it is presented. But to watch people die, people you cared about and loved, to see them bloodied or blown apart, especially when you've never seen it before — that must have driven this man over the edge. Calley saw every Vietnamese as the enemy, because they had taken away those he had known and he had grown close to.

He forgot the babies, the women and the old men were human and they had a loved one who would be equally devastated.

Today, I think there is still a problem with determining who the enemy is. I can't figure out if the enemy is overseas or in the White House. Because anyone who is going to take my family and friends away is the enemy.

And anyone who won't let them come back is the enemy as well.

Sanctify the US flag

Thank you to the UMass police officer who directed traffic on University Drive at the Dallas Mall before the last home football game. You were the only person to display proper respect for the flag of the United States as the band procession passed you.

Maybe the tuba players from the band could learn a few things from you. As the national colors passed them, they all stood and gestured to the colors with mock salutes.

The flag is a living symbol of the principles which make our nation great.

By mocking the flag, you mock our country. You mock the principles for which our nation stands. No, I am not claiming that the United States is a perfect place to live. But, the intent and effort are to provide a place where life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are guaranteed and enjoyed by all.

To those who wish to burn the flag, you have the right to do so. It is the freedom of expression. But, what are you expressing? By desecrating the flag, you are destroying a symbol of that very freedom you are exercising. Doesn't it logically follow that you are actually protesting that freedom?

Any type of disrespect to the flag, be it mocking salutes, burning or just outright ignoring it, shows a lack of support for the principles of our nation. Only by united support can we maintain and improve the greatness of the United States.

So, next time you see Old Glory passing, stop, render it the proper respect and be thankful for the freedom you enjoy.

A mother's plea to President Bush

I always believed in the natural succession of life's events.

I knew that after summer came fall, then winter and then spring. I always assumed that I would watch my children grow and mature into productive members of society. I never dreamed I would be sending my son off to war and facing the possibility that he might die in that war.

I now find myself in that heart-wrenching situation.

My son is a Marine now stationed in the Middle East.

Why is it that the sons and daughters of working class fight and die for the interests of those whose sons and daughters will never spend a day dressed in camouflage fatigues in a hot desert?

Many additional troops to that area is an indication of your intent to start that fight.

Can you assure me that my son and the sons and daughters of this nation will not die protecting the interests of big oil companies and the Kuwaiti emirates who are now living in luxurious exile?

Have you even given thought to the many innocent men, women and children in the Middle East who will die?

Why does your administration decide to selectively condemn aggression?

When Saddam Hussein was carrying out the will of your administration by attacking Iran, he was encouraged to continue. Now you decry him as another Hitler because he is a threat to the controlling interests of oil in the Middle East. Why was there no deployment of troops when Vietnam invaded Cambodia? Where was the intervention when Turkey invaded Cyprus?

If my son dies, will you stand beside me at this grave or must I stand alone like the mothers and fathers of the over 58,000 sons and daughters who lost their lives in Vietnam?

Mr. Bush, will you send your son to fight next to mine? Someone recently asked, "Do we hate our enemies more than we love our children?"

I don't, Mr. Bush, do you?

Mr. Bush, it is time for the United States forces to come home. The United States should support peace negotiations through the United Nations. You should observe the Constitution, Mr. President, where only Congress has the power to declare war.

We should not shed blood for oil.

10,000 Maniacs captivate a sold-out crowd

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

10,000 Maniacs
Fine Arts Center
Saturday, Nov. 17

Jamestown, NY can claim that it is the "World Center for Wood and Metal Furniture," and 10,000 Maniacs and Natalie Merchant can claim that they – once again – captivated a near sold-out audience this weekend.

Merchant's wild swirling and hand motions that seem to cut through unseen brick walls, were familiar scenes for many in the audience and her voice, along with the calypso-tinged guitar of Robert Buck were the perfect coupling. The crew was on tour backing Hope Chest, a venture by Merchant and former Maniac John Lombardo that combines the band's two first independent efforts.

The night was similar to breaking open a present that you knew you were receiving: you know what it's like, you haven't used it and it is a gift.

With 50s-esque music piping over the sound system, people knew something unusual was happening, and so, expectantly settled in their seats, the projection screen came falling from the ceiling and lights dimmed. Ripples of laughter filled the FAC as smiling men and women clad in early 50s garb, rows of Fords and the Zenith man floated across the screen and "Jamestown, NY – that's my hometown" propelled itself through the air.

"Maddox Table," (1985, The Wishing Chair) was the Maniacs' first attempt to draw their captives in and work it did.

Their first attempt to get attention was actually the opening act of Mary Ramsey and Lombardo. Should you have closed your eyes and listened, Ramsey was Merchant for a moment. More enjoyable to listen to but not quite the grip on lyrics that the Maniacs have, she offered an uplifting and energetic twist to the evening with sonorous fiddling and her gutsy on-target voice. I would be much more apt to buy Ramsey's material versus Merchant's, but this was not a competition, evidenced by Ramsey's joining in on several songs, including "Trouble Me" (1989 Blind Man's Zoo) as harmony and a duo with Merchant on "Verdi Cries" (1987 In My Tribe) with violin in hand.

With the exception of a handful of songs from In My Tribe ("Don't Talk," "Peace Train" and "My Sister Rose") there were the expected favorites including "A Campfire Song." Plomping down on the stage as though she made it herself, Merchant began the song that all the folks in the front seats were awaiting – and joined in on.

A little heavy metal was in order for the night as Merchant borrowed Buck's guitar to end "Scorpio Rising" (Wishing Chair) – my ears are still ringing.

For the conscientious objector in all she played "Gun Shy." Hidden only physically behind a flag made of a flourescent pink peace sign against a backdrop of unforgettable photos of war, Merchant belted out "My Mother the War" to a mesmerized and silent audience.

Though I've seen them many times, I wondered: Why so many cheers and whoops for this crew? And the answer was simple enough – though she didn't engage herself in much political discourse or convincing of the unconvincable, she planted the bug in people's head about hunger and homelessness in America by questioning the backing of only Thanksgiving and Christmas meals for those in need. By virtue of the songs themselves, it becomes apparent 10,000 Maniacs can impel productive thought into the air.

With an off-beat "Thank you very much for coming because you didn't have to," Merchant went into "Cotton Alley" (Wishing Chair) and later "Wildwood Flower" a peppy B-side.

Seems many would disagree that they didn't have to show and by the looks of it – the Maniacs can do no wrong.

Gillis gracefully enchants with stylistic dance techniques

By MELISA CANLI
Collegian Correspondent

A statuesque body, flowing waist-long flame-colored hair, the grace and agility of a doe in the woods...Margie Gillis had all of these attributes at her performance on Friday, Nov. 16 at Bowker Auditorium. A solo modern dance performer, Gillis was born in Montreal to two Olympic skiers. She is responsible for introducing modern dance to China in 1979, the first in this field since the revolution. She developed her own style over the years after taking ballet and gymnastics lessons from the age of three.

The variety of the pieces she performed was extensive. She started with a piece called "Roots of the Rhythm Remain." She managed to move every part of her body to the jungle beat, even her long, thick braid. The music echoed through her diaphragm as her chest heaved from exertion.

"The Little Animal" had a completely different flavor. It was short and very painful. A pink shadow against a black curtain, her expression was one of deep suffering.

In "Waltzing Matilda," some of that sorrow remained. The bittersweet music by Tom Waits described a girl who was frightened in a world filled with violence as she tried to dance.

Gillis also had a wonderful sense of humor, evident in pieces like "Give Me Your Heart Tonight" by Shakin' Stevens. Her body never left the ground as she ground her hips clad in frilly red undergarments. She churned restlessly on the floor, causing the audience to roar with her comical facial expressions.

"Nocturne," the piece she did before the intermission, had the essence of ballet and she accordingly wore a tutu. She also had her face covered with a white cloth tied with a pink ribbon. She was naked above the waist but never once allowed a glimpse of her semi-nudity to show as she always used her arm or frilly skirts. She aged in front of our very eyes and finally fell. When she rose, she had untied the ribbon and in a very convincing manner slowly shuffled off the stage using the ribbon as a cane.

The beginning of "Mara" was breathtaking. Gillis was atop a rock covered with the long skirt of her black raw silk dress. Her hair was loose and reflected the lights shining on her. Like a form of liquid, a wave from the ocean, she danced to the mystical music. She used her hair as a vital part of her dance, her tresses were part of the sea where she could have easily been a mermaid. Her movements were a dance that were taken from the depths of the ocean and placed on land.

In the long "How the Rosehips Quiver," she performed four or five different scenes, from the comical scene where she could not control her feet or legs to crying to admiring the blues skies amidst imagined flowers on a rustic countryside. She ended standing on a chair, twirling around like a rosehip blowing in the wind.

Gillis bowed, blew kisses, smiled angelically, and won almost every member of the audience over to a standing ovation. When she expressed her joy with a childish leap in the air and dashed behind the curtain, the thundering applause was proof of Debra Cash's words in the The Boston Globe, March 1989: "Margie Gillis is the embodiment of what dancing is all about." I couldn't agree more.

Paris All-Stars pay tribute to a great jazz legend

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Correspondent

The Paris All-Stars
Homage to Charlie Parker
A and M

While they say that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, in the world of jazz I'd rather listen to an homage than an imitation. And while there has been many an homage to Charlie Parker, how about an homage to Bird from the likes of Dizzy Gillespie, Max Roach, Jackie McLean, Phil Woods, Milt Jackson, Hank Jones, Percy Heath and Stan Getz? Sounds like a good idea doesn't it? Well it sounds even better on The Paris All-Stars: Homagae to Charlie Parker. Released just this month, the album is a recording of a concert on June, 15, 1989 at La Grande Halle, La Villette, Paris.

Even though French audiences were indifferent to Coltrane when he toured Europe in 1962, they do have a great fondness for jazz, and particularly Charlie Parker (they also tend to appreciate the Trane now as well).

Well over an hour in length, the album consists of nine tracks of which only one is an actual Bird composition – "Yardbird Suite." Yet the other tracks are all noble compositions themselves – Dizzy Gillespie's "Birks Works," "Con Alma" and "Night in Tunisia" and Ray Noble's "Cherokee" being the most recognizable.

We also get to hear renditions of Duke Ellington's "Warm Valley" and Max Roach's "Drummer's Sweet" with Babs Gonzales' "Oo Pa Pa Da" and "Old Folks" by Willard Robison and Dedette Hill rounding out the program.

You may say to yourself, "Well, what can these guys do today with these tunes that they haven't done already?" Ta-da! That is where the surprise comes in – these guys haven't lost it. Yetwhile some of them may not be doing anything out of the ordinary today, let us not forget that these guys all have strong ties to Yardbird. Put them all together on one stage, ask them to reminisce a little, and they begin to play.

REVIEW

"Birks Works" also gives us some lilting rhythm section work and real nice alto work from McLean and Woods. They play hard together, work each other, but don't step on each others toes – a surprisingly high level of communication for two men who have never played before this recording. We also hear some usual Stan Getz, no real surprises.

The rendition of "Warm Valley" is done without fanfare, yet there are other highlights on the album which make for great listening.

"Drummers' Sweet" is an exhibition of the talents of Max Roach, whose admirers will be glad to know that he delivers the type of solo that has made him one of the preeminent percussionists of all time.

On "Old Folks," we get a taste of Hank Jones and Milt Jackson working together just like the title says – two wonderful old folks whose experience and skill, temperament and joy of playing always remain youthful.

An extended bass solo introduces us to "Yardbird Suite," throughout which Percy Heath plays the bass in a stronger style than he ever did with the MJQ, and teamed with a really swinging Hank Jones, this cut is really sweet.

One of the more interesting tracks to study is "Con Alma," which has Jones on piano supporting a slow an deliberate muted solo from Dizzy which sounds like Dizzy trying to tell Miles Davis what he used to play like. Everybody jumps back in for "Cherokee" with McLean and Woods continuing to enjoy themselves.

"Night in Tunisia" is done well, yet Diz seems aloof in his opening, as if he was the only one who really played "Night in Tunisia" with Bird. Yet the other horns are unphased and provide some fine new interpretation of this bebop classic.

Closing with "Ooo Pa Pa Da," makes you sing scat right along with Dizzy as he gets back into it, clowning in his idiosyncratically serious style. The rest of the group picks up on Dizzy's fervor and rip out an ending that leaves you wondering what could have been if the concert had been with Bird, rather than an homage to him. Nonetheless, it's quite impressive.

Quality play, which makes for some interesting listening, from some of the all-time greats. More than worth the price of admission.

Prof writes on foreign policy

By STEPHEN R. DAMIANI
Collegian Correspondent

U.S. foreign policy decisions are more influenced by domestic political considerations than by the actual events that occur in those countries, according to a new book by a University of Massachusetts political science professor.

Howard J. Wiarda wrote Foreign Policy Without Illusion, published this year, after spending several years in Washington D.C. as an advisor on foreign policy.

In his book, Wiarda argues most of foreign policy decisions made by current administrators were based on the domestic agendas of individual, political parties, special interest groups, Congress and think tanks.

"I would say that during the past years 80 percent of our policy was based on domestic political considerations, with James Baker as Secretary of State, that number has probably increased to 90 percent now," Wiarda said.

The United States's foreign policy decisions regarding recent events in the Middle East are following patterns discussed in his book, Wiarda said.

"Clearly it is in the United States' best interest to protect both the U.S. oil supply and political and military stability in the Middle East," he said.

In addition to national security interests, Wiarda said Bush's quick decision to boost U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia has brought in favorable responses for him from the general public, according to national opinion polls.

By focusing attention on events in other countries, the pressure of dealing with domestic issues is relieved, Wiarda said. Rather than talking about "dreary" issues such as welfare and the budget deficit, "they would much rather focus on dramatic foreign policy events."

However, Wiarda said, the decision about U.S. involement in the Gulf could cause political harm if the conflict escalates and there are American casualties.

One example of the government taking foreign policy issues off the agenda for political reasons is the United States's recent dealings with Nicaragua and Central America.

"Nicaragua is no longer damaging to Mr. Bush politically. Both Secretary of State James Baker and Mr. Bush view Central America, and here I mean primarily Nicaragua, El Salvador and Panama, as a can of worms. And the way you deal with a can of worms is you don't stick your hand in it, but you get rid of it...They got it off the front pages and dropped it as a political issue. It served the national interest and served Mr. Bush's re-election possibilities," he said.

Though the book has caught the interest of academic institutions and is being used as a textbook, Wiarda said it was written for a wider audience. "The book is not just a serious study of foreign policy-making, but it is also a semi-insider account by a person who spent a lot of time in the White House, State Department, the Pentagon and other Washington agencies."

His reason for writing Foreign Policy Without Illusion stems from the time he spent at the nation's cap"al. "I came away from my experience in Washington with a feeling the textbooks were out of date or just plain wrong when discussing U.S. foreign policy. I wanted to tell how foreign policy really works."

Another work, edited by Wiarda, is being published as a companion to the book. The publication is an anthology of essays focusing on foreign policy issues, such as terrorism, drugs, human rights, the environment and world hunger.

On the Agenda: Current Issues and Conflicts in U.S. Foreign Policy, includes essays on major regions that are the focus of American foreign policy, such as the Middle East, Africa, the NATO countries, the Soviet Union and Latin America.

On The Agenda focuses on the 'new agenda' issues in Washington," Wiarda said. "Issues such as the ecology, immigration, nuclear disarmament, pollution and world hunger. These are the 'front burner' or 'hot' issues these days, for they reflect the U.S.'s growing interest in issues that are global, rather than national, in scope."

Prof. Wiarda has been with the University since 1965, and over the past 10 years he has traveled extensively through Latin America.

He has also spent five years as a consultant with the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research (AEI) in Washington. A second book by Wiarda, The Democratic Revolution in Latin America: History, Politics, and U.S. Policy, was also published this year by the publishing house of Holmes and Meier.

Jan. 1 could prove to be 3-ring circus for bowl contenders

By RICK WARNER
The Associated Press

The battle for the national championship may turn into a three-bowl circus on New Year's Day. The Orange, Cotton, or Citrus could produce the No. 1 team on Jan. 1, a fitting ending to one of the most confusing seasons in college football history.

The Orange Bowl's dream of a clear-cut titile game between top-ranked Notre Dame and No. 2 Colorado was shattered Saturday when the Irish were uspet by No. 18 Penn State 24-21. Colorado, which ended its regular season with a 64-3 rout of Kansas State, is expected to take over the top spot when the new Associated Press poll is released on Monday.

If Colorado (10-1-1) beats Notre Dame (8-2), the Buffaloes should win the national championship. But if Notre Dame spoils Colorado's title hopes in the Orange Bowl for the second straight year, the Cotton or Citurs could have the No. 1 team.

Miami (7-2) which probably will move from third to second this week, will play the Southwest Conference champion — possibly a once-beaten Texas team — in the Cotton. A Miami victory and a Colorado defeat could give the Hurricanes their third title in four seasons and make them the first school with two losses to be voted national champion. That's assuming, of course, that they win their final two regular-season games against Syracuse and San Diego State.

If seventh-ranked Texas (8-1) gets past Baylor and Texas A&M and beats Miami in the Cotton, the Longhorns may have a shot at No. 1 if Colorado loses and Nebraska (9-1) beats Georgia Tech (9-0-1) in the Citrus.

Tech, the only unbeaten team in Division I-A, can stay in title contention by beating Georgia on Dec. 1 and Nebraska on Jan. 1. But the fourth-ranked Yellow Jackets will probably still need losses by Colorado and Miami to make it to the top.

No. 11 Nebraska, with a game left against Oklahoma, is seemingly out of the title picutre because there are too many teams ranked ahead of the Cornhuskers. And Notre Dame's late-season loss makes the Irish a long shot even if they beat Sourthern Cal and Colorado.

If you're thinking No. 1, forget about the rest of the New Year's bowls. However, there is a slim chance that a non-Jan. 1 bowl could produce the national champion.

After all, what if fifth-ranked Brigham Young (9-1) beats Utah State and Hawaii before going to the Dec. 29 Holiday Bowl? Then suppose BYU beats its opponent (probably Texas A&M) in the Holiday and Colorado, Miami and Georgia Tech lose their bowl games? The Cougars, who beat Miami early in the season, could make a strong case for No. 1 if that happens.

One reason the championship scenario is so muddled is that the major bowl matchups were set two weeks before the offical Nov. 24 bid date.

The first event set the stage for the remainder of the competition as UMass finished first and second in the 200-yard medley relay with the team of senior Kiri Binning, freshman Jennifer Saunders, junior Laurie Schwarz and senior Denise Reimer the first to touch the wall in 1:54.31.

"They were ready to go and went nuts right away," Newcomb said. "As soon as I saw the first two backstrokers touch in the medley relay, I knew we were going to have an awesome day."

As for the remainder of the meet, UMass dominated it as a team, an aspect that has become characteristic of the Minutewomen. There were only three events in which swimmers did not score.

"That displays a true team effort. We gave them a lesson in depth," Newcomb said.

Even though the team as a whole was the standout, Binning, Kari Edwardsen and Jennifer Saunders swam exceptionally well.

Binning, an exchange student from Brisbane, Australia, was able to set three school records that also broke Boyden Pool records. She eclipsed a 1976 record in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:01.77. In addition, she established school records in the 200-yard individual medley (2:13.95) and broke her own record from a week and a half ago in the 200-yard backstroke (2:12.01).

Edwardsen finished second to Binning in the 100- and 200-yard backstroke with times under the existing records before Binning broke them ahead of her. Saunders was victorious in both the 100-yard breaststroke (1:13.18) and the 200-yard breaststroke (2:36.05).

UMass freshman Allison White remained undefeated in the 1-meter diving competition with 213.98 points. However, she placed second to Maine's Michelle Giraux in the 3-meter dive.

Maine wasn't the dominant team they have been in years past. They had only one bright spot as Maureen Solakoff was able to win the 200- and 500-yard freestyle events.

"I wasn't happy with our performance," Maine coach Jeff Wren said. "However, we did what I expected."

Wren made several comments as to the reasons for their lackluster performance this season. He said the team has been training inconsistenly and they weren't able to recruit any freshmen.

With their incredible performance, the undefeated Minutewomen scared Maine right out of Boyden. They even caused them to leave their team banner behind.

"The amount of noise, communication and personal exchanges that they had during the meet allowed them to accomplish something a UMass team has never done," Newcomb said.

Just some basic baseball banter

It was difficult to ignore the glamour factor at the University's second annual Fund for the Future reception dinner. Held at the Sheraton in Boston, it was a bonafide booster event, complete with Boston Red Sox Jeff Reardon and Toronto Blue Jay Mike Flanagan as well as retired and former UMass baseball players.

Adrienne Matt

UMass grad of '75, Flanagan and Reardon ('78) were lauded for their accomplishments, as the event's title 'Salute to Excellence' would imply. As the literature read, it was a celebration of 122 years of baseball at UMass, the school's first athletic team.

I admire the vision of the Fund for the Future organizers. They want people of Massachusetts to sit up and notice UMass (at least what's left of it). Their visionary focus is that the state must be willing to maintain a Major Public University which offers education, research and service not only to its immediate community but to the state at large. [At this point I could go into why I support this, but those comments belong on the editorial page.]

Needless to say, the personalities made for interesting interviews. Red Sox Mike Boddicker and Blue Jay Mike Flanagan kept the attentive dinner guests laughing with their banter and punchlines.

To my suprise, Boddicker grew up in a town 40 minutes from where I went to grammar school in Iowa. We talked about common ice fishing holes and primo pheasant hunting spots near Lake Okoboji. He was shocked to hear someone living in Massachusetts talk and know about some of his favorite getaways in the Midwest.

His suggestion for solving the education crunch in Mass. was to collect all the tax dollars that go into paying tolls and give it all to higher education. He was serious.

"Well, they're not improving the roads," he roared. "All the contruction's going on in Connecticut."

Sox Manager Joe Morgan couldn't find the words he wanted to express himself — he never ceases to amaze me. His dry humor and gentile manner create one of the more affable baseball personalities I've met.

"It's too bad it's gotten to this point," he said of the amount of UMass budget cuts. "Ya know, I just don't have any concrete answers. I just can't answer your questions."

We're sorry too, Joe. I wish we had the answers.

Swimming teams lap opponents

● Men route BC, 135-85

By TOM QUINN
Collegian Correspondent

The men's swim team soundly defeated arch rival Boston College 135-85 in their first meet of the season, last Friday at Boyden Pool.

Coach Russ Yarworth said he was encouraged by the performances of his freshmen and sophomores, swimmers who will provide the backbone to defend their New England Championship.

"The kids sent a message to New England swimming that UMass is still the team to beat," he said.

The key to the meet was lead by the Minutemen's sprinting strength. An indication of the its sprinting dominance was in the 400-yard free and the 400-yard medley relays, in which the team swept heats, deflating BCs momentum.

"It's gratifying to see the kids realize the efforts of their hard work," Yarworth said.

Freshman butterflier Tim Nubar swam to a first-place finish in the 200-yard heat, his first collegiate meet. Minutemen sprinter Aaron Osborne beat his opponents off the wall to win the 50-yard freestlye and sophomore Chris Barret cruised to an easy victory in the 100-yard free. Junior breaststroker Bill Chouinard won the 200-yard breaststroke. Yarworth said he is one of the team's hardest workers.

One of BC's more impressive swimmers, Martin Kraaijvanger, cruised to first place victories in the 200-, 500- and 1,000-yard freestyle events.

"Martin is one of the strongest swimmers in our league," Yarworth said. "We really didn't have anyone to counter his ability."

However, Martin's maverick heroics were not enough to save BC from UMass' sheer numbers. The Minutemen handily took first place in six of nine events.

The team's only sore spot appears to be the divers with the graduation of Dan Cheznika. Boston College swept the 1-meter and 3-meter diving events. However, junior diver Steve Myers dove to two second place finishes narrowly losing out to first place in the 3-meter. Rich Dockery took third on the 1-meter board.

"This was supposed to be a rebuilding year for us, but with this freshman class and all the other guys working hard, we're not rebuilding at all, we're reloading," Yarworth said.

The team will face its toughest challenge of the season early against Brown University Dec. 5 at Boyden Pool. This new rivalry began last season with UMass winning the meet in the last relay which went down to the wire.

"We had a lot fan support agaisnt BC," said Yarworth. "I hope we can that again when Brown comes."

They did it.

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team defeated the visiting Maine Saturday for the first time ever in a dual meet.

After years of embarassing losses to Maine, the Minutewomen finally came out on top, 195-103. The swimmers trounced their opponent as they won 11 of the 14 events.

"I'm just sky-high as the way we swam," said UMass coach Robert Newcomb. "They just came in pumped to the ceiling. We did some amazing things today."

Griffin also threw touchdown passes of 14 and 64 yards in the first half as UNH built its lead.

"We were awfully close to him," Perry said of Griffin, who was awarded the Bill Knight Trophy given annually to the game's most outstanding player. "He wasn't the greatest scrambler, but he read everything."

The UMass offense, meanwhile, didn't warm up until after the Wildcats had buried it in a 29-0 hole. Freshman quarterback Dave McGovern threw an interception on UMass' second possession and fumbled away their fourth, before hooking up with split end Ron Blauvelt on a 19-yard touchdown pass late in the second quarter to put UMass on the board, 29-6.

Late in the third quarter McGovern closed UMass to within 29-12 with a 5-yard pass to tight end Bill Durkin (UMass' fifth tight end touchdown pass this season), but UNH iced the clock with a 14-play, 80-yard touchdown drive and lead 36-12 with ten minutes remaining.

A second McGovern-to-Blauvelt strike with 4:41 to play finished the scoring at 36-18.

McGovern, making his second start since replacing Tom Fasano in the second half of the Richmond game, finished 14 of 30 for 249 yards and 3 TDs, and was intercepted three times.

"He grew as the game went on, from the first half to the second half," Reid said of the Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week. "He didn't wilt. We'll only go as far [in the playoffs] as Dave McGovern can take us."

Tutor program starts to offset fee increase

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will implement a tutorial program for students in the residence halls to help offset the $400 fee increase for the spring semester, according to officials in Housing Services and Academic Support Services.

Letters will be sent to target tutors — junior or senior English, accounting, economics, mathematics, or COINS majors. The potential tutors must also have a grade point average of 3.0.

"Payment for the service will be in the form of a residence hall rebate equivalent to 5.5 hours of tutorials per week at $6.50 an hour rate for twelve weeks," stated the letter sent to possible tutors in the residence halls.

Students applying to be tutors will be evaluated by the Financial Aid office and academic departments, to determine the need for aid and the qualifications of each applicant.

Applications are due Nov. 30, and those selected will be notified by Dec. 12. More than 100 students, 50 from off-campus and 50 from the residence halls, will be selected. The 50 selected from off-campus will move back into the residence halls.

The total compensation is $450. This payment would reduce the total cost of a basic double room to $457 for the semester.

Students will also be paid for three hours of training, to be given by Dr. Gloria de Guevara. De Guevara will also monitor

Article to limit number of housemates passes

By PETER HERING
Collegian Correspondent

An article to restrict the number of unrelated people living in a single-family household to a minimum of four passed at the Amherst Town Meeting last night.

With a two-thirds majority vote Article 19, referred to as the "family question," will change the concept of what family is by making it less restrictive.

While some town meeting members argued that questions of blood relationships were not pertinent to zoning laws, the majority argued that the new restrictions would allow for more traditional families to live together.

Under the new bylaw, only four unrelated adults can reside in the same home, with no restriction on the number of children living there under the age of 18.

John Fox, of Precinct 7, called the new bylaw a, "vast improvement of the existing bylaw."

The former bylaw included references to marriage that may have been unconstitutional.

The proposer of the Article 19 amendment, Seymour Friedman of Precinct 10, said he believes the old bylaw was "too restrictive in dealing with marriage."

Fox argued that five or more unrelated people living together would pose more of a problem than the traditional family would.

"Five unrelated people would have four or five cars, while a family would have one or two. The increase in traffic problems and the dangers for neighborhood children are increased," he said.

Fritz O'Conner, of Precinct 2, referred to the new bylaw as "a substantial solution" to the previous law.

"If [more than four] people aren't disruptive then there will be no complaint under the zoning bylaws," he said.

A member of the Graduate Student Senate, speaking in opposition, believed that the bylaw was largely aimed against students. He believed that overcrowding is largely due to the escalating rents, which have made it necessary for five or six students to combine rent money.

Jan Dezar, of Precinct 9 and a member of the Amherst Planning Board, said he believes the bylaw would not regulate the number of students living in a single-family house.

"We need to base zoning on the use of the property and not on the users," he said.

The Amherst Select Board's decision to pass the bylaw was unanimous, while the Planning Board decided to back Friedman's proposed bylaw with a 4 to 3 vote.

Although the measure passed convincingly, some town members voiced displeasure with both the old and the new bylaws.

Town member Fritz O'Conner called the new bylaw, "imperfect, but a substantial chance to improve the situation."

Guerrillas launch attack on Afghan government

By KATHY GANNON
Associated Press Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — In a rare show of unity, rival guerrilla commanders launched an offensive against Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government yesterday in three provinces surrounding the capital, a rebel spokesperson said.

A barrage of rockets slammed into an ammunition dump several miles north of the the Afghan capital, Kabul, just before dawn, signaling the start of a blitz on dozens of government targets, they said.

"It was one of the government's largest ammunition dumps," said Minhaj, a spokesperson for a joint rebel news organization known as MIDIA.

There were no immediate reports of casualties and no way to independently confirm the claims. The rebel sources spoke from Pakistan, where the guerrilla groups have their headquarters.

One Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonoymity, said in Islamabad that "something was happening" but that he and others were scrambling for details.

Farid, a member of the Hezb-e-Islami, the most radical and anti-West of the seven major guerrilla groups, said the offensive on Kabul, Logar and Wardak provinces took several weeks to plan.

"The main purpose of the operation is to eventually take Kabul," said Farid, who like most Afghans uses only one name.

Minhaj said sporadic and often confused reports from the battlefront indicated guerrilla fighters were launching rockets at dozens of government targets in an arc around Kabul.

The guerrillas, financed by the United States, Saudi Arabia and other sympathetic Arab states, have been fighting for more than 12 years to overthrow successive communist-style governments in Afghanistan.

Most of the countryside is under the guerrillas' control, and troops loyal to President Najibullah hold the major cities.

Regents prepare for Weld

Plan devised to stabilize college funding

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents of Higher Education is presently devising a proposal for Governor-elect William Weld which would stabilize state funding of public higher education and allow campuses to retain tuition revenues.

"All we want from him is stability of funding for the next five years since the money can't be restored and the minimum is maintained," said Terry Zoulas, press secretary for the regents.

The plan is based on public higher education revenue figures for this year. From the $500 million allocated in state funds, public higher education generated $1.5 billion in total private fund revenues.

The private fund revenues include tuition, fees and all profits made from sales on all 29 campuses. "We want him to see higher education as an investment, not a cost," Zoulas said.

"For every state dollar, two private dollars are made, or for every state dollar that is cut, two private dollars are lost as well," he added.

The regents would also like to see the 29 state colleges and universities retain full tuition revenues on each individual campus, rather than sending two-thirds of the revenues to a general state fund.

Approximately $105 million in tuition revenues were sent to a general state fund this year while $45 million was retained on the campuses.

The stabilization of public higher education funding that the regents are seeking from Weld follows a 22.4 percent reduction in state allocations since 1988.

This year, the greatest proportion of this reduction, about 14.9 percent, hit all state universities and colleges in across-the-board cuts resulting in a loss of almost $16 million in funding.

and evaluate tutors. The evaluation will be determined by a questionnaire and the student's final course grade.

Freshmen and sophomores in introductory courses will be notified through the target departments, advertisements in the Collegian, notices given to professors of these courses, and Residence Assistants.

The tutorial service will be provided free of charge to underclassmen.

After the program is announced, interested persons can call the Academic Support Services. De Guevara will match students with tutors, and the tutorial sessions will begin the second week of the spring semester.

Tutorials will be given in residence halls and other cultural centers on campus.

A poisoned feast: Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving is seen as the day when the pilgrims held a great feast and invited a few poor Indians [Indigenous people] to come along and join the celebration. American history tells us that the first Thanksgiving was in the autumn of 1621, in Plymouth Colony. It was a time set aside to give thanks for the year's harvest. The celebration was also used to strengthen the colony's friendship with the Indigenous peoples. An invitation to the feast was sent to Chief Massasoit. Chief Massasoit accepted by sending the colony five deer for the festival. The colony set the feast's table with wild game, corn bread, and cranberries, which they had been taught how to prepare by the Indigenous people of that area. The feast lasted three days. It included eating, wrestling, foot races, and singing and dancing to the beat of the drum. The first Thanksgiving went off with a blast.

However, the history books never took the chance to tell the whole history of the first Thanksgiving. Upon the arrival of the colonists at "Plymouth Rock," their numbers were reduced by half because of illness and exposure to the elements. This could have been the fate of the remainder of the colonists.

The majority of the people had little or no knowledge of the New England environment. After an ocean journey which lasted a few months, they would not have had very many supplies left. Not knowing the proper ways to provide themselves with adequate shelter for the terrain or supply themselves with the proper edible foods, they could have surely perished. They had come to a country they knew virtually nothing about. Needless to say their survival didn't show much promise. Fortunately, the pilgrims came to an area populated by a few Indigenous nations, the Wampanoag and Narraganset peoples. These people, led by Chief Massasoit, taught them how to find certain seafood, and gather roots, bulbs, and berries. They instructed them on how to grow new types of crops on the land, such as squash, corn, sweet potato and pumpkin, in addition to basic survival techniques. The People helped the pilgrims through their first year.

Lynn Walker

However no good deed ever goes unpunished. Several Indigenous people died due to poor relations between the pilgrims and themselves. For instance, many Indigenous people met their death when diseases, unknown to them, were purposely introduced. Some suffered in token gestures, such as King Philip [a.k.a. Metacom, the son of Massasoit], whose head was displayed in Plymouth for two decades, after being chopped off. In addition, Metacom's wife and children were put into slavery, by the community.

Several disagreements and wars between the two different societies plagued their peaceful existence. However, in 1863 President Lincoln made the American-born holiday official. In reality, such celebrations had been a common occurrence in North America prior to the European invasion. It was known by several different names, the most common being the Harvest Festival. The Navajo, for instance, called it their Corn Festival. No matter what the name, all of these ceremonies served the purpose of giving thanks to the Great Spirit. The Pueblo and Navajo have a saying which went along with their Harvest Festival which stated:

"[Thanks to the] Creator of All for creating these things because he has prepared 'corn' for us. And this is why we must be thankful. Because eventually what comes from the ground goes back to the ground . . ."

The Harvest Festival lasted several days. It was an occasion for all to enjoy. The days of prayer and thanks to the Great Spirit were interwoven with several activities. These ceremonies included a feast and a great amount of singing and dancing to the rhythm of the drum. Also included were several games, among them team sports, foot races and the ever-popular wrestling.

Today Thanksgiving is thought of and celebrated as a modern- day holiday. It seems to have lost a lot of its original meaning. Its only claim to thanks is its name of Thanksgiving. However it should be thought of as a time for all to give thanks for the things one has and has accomplished; and not the mislaid beginnings of the "American" holiday of Thanksgiving.

ARTS & LIVING

A terrifying trip to the barber shop

By RORY K. EVANS
Collegian Staff

The time had come.

After a mere 11 months of unimpeded bang growth, I decided enough was enough. Too much forehead acne, too large a nose, too many thoughts of Janis Joplin; indeed, the time had come.

I could have cut my bangs myself, I am sure, although I probably would have ended up looking like Prince Valiant. Instead, I decided to go to the Campus Center Barber Shop, next to Campus Travel and the video arcade.

At 3:57 in the afternoon, I cautiously stepped into the barber shop and took my seat on the red cushioned bench. The man to my right shot me a glance sideways; I was suffering from female-barber-shop-patron paranoia.

I watched as the barber shop's staff of four attached blades, snipped sideburns, shaved necks. All four of the customers were men, and all four came away from the chairs looking ready for military service.

I just wanted my bangs cut.

It was 4:03 when Sandy, one of the two women employees, walked over to the bench, looked at me and said, "What can I do for you?" She showed me to a chair, and draped an apron over me. I told her what she could do.

I admit I was disappointed at first, I had been hoping that a male barber would cut my hair. In my four years at UMass, in my thousands of sojourns past the Campus Center Barber Shop, I had never seen one of the male barbers cutting a female's hair. The barber shop sign clearly states that it does unisex styling, but it seemed that no women ever took them up on the offer.

Female barber or not, I would go through with my plans. I told her that I wanted my bangs to be at my eyebrows when dry. She combed them down to a little past my chin. She asked if I wanted the rest of my hair to be trimmed; she was more than likely eyeing my abundant split ends. I would sooner die than sacrifice hair length for hair health, and replied politely, no.

Sandy took out the scissors. No going back.

The first clump fell to the floor, joining the other tarantulas of human hair. Several more soon followed. Sandy squinted at me as she did the finishing work. Whiskers of hair littered my nose.

At 4:12, the deed was done. A successful mission.

I paid Sandy $7 for the cut, and she presented me with an envelope in which to save my hair (I had picked up a few clumps). I walked through the Campus Center, clutching the envelope, straining my eyes upward, peeking at my new bangs.

And the time had past.

Clegg and Savuka brim with intensity

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE

Johnny Clegg and Savuka
Pearl Street
Sunday, Nov. 19

"... And we have found there are more commonalities than differences."

South African Johnny Clegg and Savuka (Zulu for "we have arisen") won the hearts of their audience at Pearl Street Sunday night with a reverberating set backing the release of their most recent LP entitled Cruel, Crazy, Beautiful World (Capitol).

Stunning in the intensity of his energy, Clegg's voice filled every crevice of the walls and every ear with celebrations of equality and reality.

Clegg has first hand experience that the world can be an institutionally racist place. Born and raised in South Africa, he explained his home has captured the world's attention by discreetly institutionalizing people culturally, financially, economically and politically based upon the color of their skin.

As a youth, Clegg said he became aware that what he wanted to do what he was not allowed to do: "dancing with South Africans at a migrant workers hostel, playing with them at night atop the roofs ... and things I wasn't allowed to do because of the apartheid laws." He was informed he was confused with the natural order of things.

Natural order has won out in the form of intricate and passionate songs. In "Dela (I Know Why the Dog Howls at the Moon)," from Cruel . . ., Clegg sings of wholeness. It was one of the most memorable performances of the evening and crowd response was so strong that Clegg and Savuka played it again during the encore.

"One (Hu'man One Vote," honoring the idea of a free and active political voice, has been banned in South Africa and with this preface — the voices in the room

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Am I going to be a veteran? A corpse?

Like an old-fashioned preacher, I want to use a text this afternoon from that fascinating book which was written too late to make it into the Old Testament, the Book of Ecclesiasticus, found in what we call the Old Testament Apocrypha. The words are as follows: "There be them, that have left a name behind, that their praises might be reported. And some there be which have no memorial."

Last week Dr. Walter Donald Kring, Minister Emeritus at the Unitarian Church of All Souls in New York City, began his remarks at the Veterans' Day service in East Brookfield, Mass. with those words. Dr. Kring was a Navy chaplain in World War II. I'm a sergeant in an infantry company of the Massachusetts Army National Guard, and I was standing in the color guard.

A week later, just this weekend, my unit conducted a training exercise at the Sudbury Annex of Fort Devens. About 30 men assaulted an isolated farmhouse defended by four snipers. They cleared the house in about two hours. The four snipers and 13 men in the assault force were killed or wounded.

Maybe this practice will help us do better in Kuwait City, with real bullets. Maybe not.

The guys in my unit seem to think a war is coming in the Middle East. I think so, too. We don't know anything about the plans for activating reserve units, so we don't know when or if we'll be called. Maybe I'll be a veteran by this time next year, or maybe not. Either way, this seems like a good time to be leaving a few words behind, that my praises might be reported.

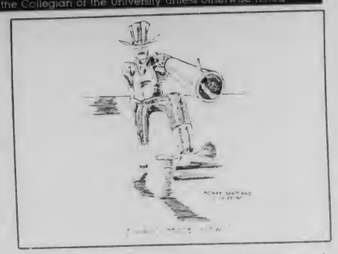
Today as we honor our veterans and those who are now facing the new Satan in the Persian Gulf, Saddam Hussein, we honor our veterans and ourselves only if we have a thorough debate about our principles... But as we gather here on this day, it seems to many of us that world leaders are tipping their hats to peace and preparing for war.

Dr. Kring made it clear that he recognizes the threat to U.S. interests posed by Saddam Hussein's military machine. So do I, but not because of any explanation put forward by our leaders in Washington. And I resent the fact that We, the People, as well as They, the Congress, are out of the loop as the most basic, critical decisions are being made.

George Bush has a reputation as a prudent man. Certainly his ability to cope with complex situations exceeds that of his predecessor, Ronald Reagan.

But we invaded Panama last year to get rid of a Manuel Noriega, a man George Bush met and had worked with for years. And, two days before Iraq invaded Kuwait, the president sent an assistant secretary of state to tell Congress that Saddam Hussein was on our side, and deserved foreign aid. So I don't trust George Bush's prudence very much.

In fact, I can only serve in the military with a reasonably clear conscience because I believe (or hope) that the people of the United States will eventually exercise some collective prudence, and perhaps even some moral restraint. In other words, I'm counting on you to decide whether our interests in the Persian Gulf are important enough for me and many others to go get killed.



Or, as Dr. Kring put it:

The responsibility for our country rests upon our shoulders, not just upon those whom we have chosen to govern. We must ever remember the words of Abraham Lincoln that "Government of the people, by the people and for the people" shall not perish from the earth.

What's a yodeler like you doing in a place like this?

"Hey, what do you do for a living?" a known political campus figure was once asked as he was locked in conversation with the brilliant scholar-in-residence at UMass, Willard "Bud" Willard.

Anna Regina Santiago

"You don't know this, but people were created with not even half a brain. But God gave me this political astuteness that no one else has, and you're all stupid. God Himself handed it down that fateful day on Mt. Sinai. I know everything, and you can all go to hell if you disagree."

"Whoa! Are you for real? As a student at a university, isn't that a rather rash generalization? And, do you mean to say that you attack other human beings only so you can reaffirm you're demented belief that you're too good?"

"Exactly."

"That's scary, man. Tell me, how long did it take you to create this twisted world of yours? And, how do you go to bed each night with a clear conscience?"

"I don't sleep. That's right. I have gone for years without sleep. It's good for you, y'know."

"Intelligent, rational debate is an inevitable part of a well-rounded education, or I thought it was. But you seem to imply that such a discussion is useless, nay, a branch of fascism. What has caused your mind to become completely closed off?"

"I can be as narrow-minded as I please."

"Tell me again, were you born like this, or did your parents allow you to light matches too close to your nose, thereby singeing your nose hairs and creating a whole new array of insecurities for you to deal with? Please, I'm interested."

"I always wanted to be a famous yodeler."

"Excuse me?"

"I want to be a yodeler. But nobody listens to me when I stop in the middle of a crowd to yodel at the top of my lungs about justice and equality. There's a world outside our window, and they are all suffering. All you people do is live your own pitiful lives, as if life isn't supposed to be taken seriously. You're all stupid. All of you."

"Is it really necessary for you to find fault with everything that moves and breathes here? Is your life so pathetic that you must warp your visio... the world to fit into your own interpretation of how it should be? Can I assume what you're trying to say, with little in the way of tact I might add, is that to belong in your own little world all of us must become some sort of Joe-arrogant-with-a-cause?"

"Damn right. Can I yodel now?"

"No, but you can start making logical sense."

"I am appalled by your ignorance. I have a right to be heard, and you're gonna listen, whether you like it or not."

"By suggesting a meaningful dialogue with your peers, even with those who do not conform to your political agenda, I am ignorant? Now, I take offense."

"It is a proven fact that yodeling in someone's ear help's one's cause. My yodeling capabilities are now directly proportional to the jokes going around here about my raving irrationality. But I am saving this world and making it an egalitarian place to live. You go on right ahead and have a life. You'll thank me in the end. Let's see who goes to Heaven."

"You seem to have convinced yourself that everyone else in this University is, oh, a moron with time to sit around, plan your demise and do everything in their power to prevent peace. Isn't that a bit egotistical?"

"When I'm yodeling, I am reaffirmed. I feel macho. I am doing something for my cause. Even though most of the time I forget what it is exactly I'm fighting for and why, I don't care. I'm always correct, and they all hate me for it. I just want to be loved, is that so wrong?"

"So, you can yodel solutions to the world's injustices, but when someone tries to yodel along with you, you throw a tantrum. In short, you're nothing but a spoiled brat. Is that true?"

"If you don't stop this intellectual crap, I'm calling my mommy."

Doesn't that just prove my point? You have certain political beliefs, and that's admirable. But you're not in this alone you know. People live their lives around other things as well, much like you live yours solely around yodeling for your cause. Leave them alone. Hey, I'm not done... What are you doing?"

"I'm running back to my mommy, and singeing the rest of my body hair."

"Will that help your cause?"

"No, but, at least, everybody will notice me."

No one deserves violence and abuse

Most of you who are reading this don't know me, but I bet you've seen me. I'm probably the only female on campus who has had two black eyes and a nose cast on. I'm not writing this letter to persecute the offender or men in general, but only out of concern. Since this happened to me, I've been asked by a few people if I was punched over a stereo or for bumping into a guy in a bar.

Neither of these is true: I was punched in the hallway outside my apartment. What I find horrifying is that there have been several of these incidents. I once thought that this was the exception to the rule. What is even more upsetting are people's responses to this type of violence. Too many people have asked me what I did to deserve this, as if I must have done something so horrible that I deserved to have my face punched in. What worries me is this "cause and effect" attitude people have about violence against women.

It's almost as if people really believe you can deserve to be raped or get punched in the face, as the case may be. If you are searching for a reason for someone to deserve violence, you are searching for a reason to condone violence.

Is that what we have been reduced to? Have we spent so much time blaming the administration, the politicians and every other conceivable organization that we no longer feel responsible for our own actions? Is that what we have learned? That nothing is ever our fault? That someone else is always to blame? For those of you who believe that a woman can deserve to be violated, I hope that your mother, sister or girlfriend is never a victim.

The womb police and women's rights

Pregnant women have no rights.

They give up their rights at the moment of conception. Once they conceive that child, they might as well get used to a whole new set of laws, a whole new set of personal freedoms that will govern their lives until the child is born.

Meredith O'Brien

In some states, pregnant women who consume alcohol are being arrested and thrown in jail until their baby is born. Women who use drugs during pregnancy are being prosecuted for being "drug dealers" to their unborn children, facing up to 20 years in prison.

The Michigan attorney general, Tony Tague, is one of those prosecutors who think women who consume drugs while pregnant should be tried as drug dealers. Two women are currently on trial on charges of dealing drugs to their unborn children — feeding them drugs through their umbilical cord.

Recently, Tague announced his plans to extend his "war against pregnant drug abusing women" to pregnant women who drink alcohol. (Michigan currently has no laws forbidding women from consuming alcohol while pregnant, and none stipulating women who take drugs while pregnant are guilty of drug dealing.)

Why should the rights of pregnant women be demeaned and constricted? Why should women, who may not even know they are pregnant at the time of alcohol consumption (most women do not know they are pregnant until they are two months into the pregnancy), be thrown in jail for drinking alcohol, a LEGAL beverage to people over 21 years of age?

I suppose this "war" on pregnant women is just a predictable facet of the alleged war on drugs. It also follows along with the popular idea that women who have abortions are criminals. It is also in sync with the idea that fertile women should be prohibited from working in places that might hurt their eggs and cause birth defects in a potential child. It continues to tell women they should not have control over their own bodies, that the government will tell them what they can or cannot do. For if pregnant women try to exercise their own judgment, regardless of the rightness or wrongness of any given decision, they may face jail time for doing something that would otherwise be legal if they were not pregnant.

Meanwhile, real criminals like rapists go free when women cannot prove they did not ask to be raped and did not lead a man on in any way... and pregnant women are going to jail.

Tague claims that his little crusade is all in the best interests of the unborn children. He says he is only trying to "protect" them from their mothers' scurrilous behavior.

I don't see how throwing a single mother in jail for alcohol or drug consumption, not helping her rehabilitate, will help her children. I don't see how prohibiting pregnant women from working in a place that may be detrimental to her eggs help her potential children.

If a boy is born to an alcohol or drug consuming mother, Tague's war would certainly help him. He could take the government's lead and realize how easy it is to legitimize controlling women's lives simply because of their biology. He would see that forcing women to give up their rights the minute the sperm fertilizes the egg is essential to protect the children.

But if a girl is born, Tague's war will only make her life one of unreasonable restrictions. When that female child is an adult, able to conceive her own child, her mother (an ex-convict) will tell her how much Tague has helped to make her life better. The mother will also issue a solemn warning to her daughter — to watch herself and her "potential" babies. One wrong move, one attempt to exercise rights as a pregnant woman, and she could easily follow in her mother's footsteps.

She will be eternally grateful to Mr. Tague for showing her the light.

welled with emotion during the chorus.

In fact, there was not a moment of silence during the entire show. Savuka and Clegg have an inimitable musical strength and it stems from the hopeful combination of a Western and South African music weave accompanied by the Zulu dances that Clegg — a socioanthropologist — and members of Savuka perform.

"Asimbonoga," a tribute to Nelson Mandela and "all others who fight for justice," was riveting. Clegg said that he played at the falling of the Berlin Wall one year ago and at the Esplanade in Boston in June when Mandela spoke.

It was hard to capture the fires of emotions that were present in people's faces and most likely spirits as they left the club Sunday night. A general message pervaded though and it was simple and expressed by Clegg himself: "If tomorrow is circling around you and not moving towards you — you've got to go and fetch it."

Top offense fuels William and Mary

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Before the Delaware game in late October, coach Jim Reid handed his University of Massachusetts football team copies of General Douglass MacArthur's quote: "I have studied my enemy . . . and when the time comes I'll whip his ass."

Reid and the Minutemen did know their enemy -- they had lost to Delaware 14 consecutive times since 1958 -- and, inspired, they whipped them 17-3.

The Minutemer have will no such luxury going into Saturday's game against William and Mary (9-2) at Cary Field in Williamsburg, Va., in the first round of the Division I-AA playoffs. The Tribe and the Minutemen have never played.

Since the tournament pairings were announced Sunday afternoon, Reid has been doing his homework and has found, he said, "nothing that I like."

William and Mary has the best offense in Division I-AA, averaging almost 500 yards per game. They have two 1000-yard rushers in tailback Robert Green (1,202 yards, 17 touchdowns) and fullback Tyrone Shelton (1,028, 4).

Fifth-year senior quarterback Chris Hakel has tossed 19 touchdown passes, including seven to flanker Mark Compher (1,020 yards on 57 receptions).

"The coaches they've played against tell me they've got two running backs that would be the best in our conference," Reid said. "They score a lot of points and they control the ball. It will be a real test."

The Tribe and UMass do have one thing in common: wins over Villanova, Connecticut, Richmond and Delaware this season. UMass averaged 21 points in the four games, and William and Mary scored 28.5. The Minutemen hold the edge on defense, allowing 7.8 points to the Tribe's 10.8

William and Mary is making its second straight appearance in the playoffs, and its third ever. Last season the Tribe lost to Furman in the first round 24-10. In 1986 they got blown out by Delaware 51-17, also in the first round.

At Cary Field, the Tribe has not lost in three years, spanning 17 games.

Travel Information

Through the kindness extended by U.S. Express, a 45-seat bus will be made available to all UMass football fans interested in busing it down to Williamsburg to watch the Minutemen compete in the first round of the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

The bus will leave Boyden at noon on Friday and return Sunday afternoon. The trip will cost $145, including bus fare and two nights of hotel accommodations.

In order to reserve your spot on the 'Victory Bus,' please call the Collegian at 545-3500 during business hours. Leave your name, telephone number and hours you can be reached at that number. You will be notified as to whether or not there are enough interested to make the trip.

Men's soccer honored by NEISL

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Peter McEvoy and Ray Cunha, both members of the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, were recently honored for achievements both on and off the field.

McEvoy was named to the New England Intercollegiate Soccer League All-Star team, and started in an all-star game comprised of players from that team on Saturday at Upper Boyden field.

McEvoy, a senior, was named to the NEISL all-star team two weeks ago. In a vote of New England Division I opponents, McEvoy was rated among the best defenders in New England.

McEvoy started at sweeper in Saturday's NEISL game, which was held at Upper Boyden field. Fourty-six teams from all three intercollegiate divisions were represented.

NEISL All-Star player Pete McEvoy represented the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team this past weekend when the Minutemen hosted the all-star game.

McEvoy played half the game for the South team, which beat the North 2-1.

McEvoy said that making the all-star team was a good way to cap his soccer career at UMass.

"It was a nice end to a disapointing season . . . our record didn't reflect our talent or how hard we worked," he said. "It was great to be counted with the best players in New England."

Gettler said that McEvoy really improved this past season.

"I can't recall a game this year in which Pete didn't put his stamp on the game," said Gettler. "And he did this from a new position, a position that calls for leadership."

Cunha, a junior forward, was named to the Atlantic-10's Academic All-Conference Team. Cunha, a finance major, currently has a 3.35 cumlative average. He is a member of the Golden Key National Honor Society, and has been nominated by the soccer program for the GTE Academic All-American Team.

Cunha said that his success can be attributed to working equally hard at both soccer and academics.

"A lot of guys put other things in front of academics," said Cunha. "I love soccer, but academics are my first priority -- that's why I'm here."

"Cunha is a great role model for the team," Getler said. "He's been real disciplined . . . he has his priorities straight."

The team received the Fair Play Award, an award which is voted on by the coaches of the NEISL which includes Division I, II and III teams. Considering the top teams in Division II and Division III received the award, Getler said he was pleasantly surprised by the award of good sportsmanship and fair play.

"When you're losing and not getting as many chances, it's harder to play fair," he said. "It's a real good honor to get."

Getler, in his ninth year at UMass, received a more personal award -- the NEISL Service Award. It, too, is voted on by coaches and is awarded to a coach who has demonstrated outstanding service to New England soccer. Getler explained coaches receive ballots during the year and that there is no slate, even non-college coaches can be nominated.

After serving as Vice President for the past three years, Getler will begin his two-year Presidency term next year. Prior to serving as VP, he worked as Secretary Treasurer for the NEISL.

On a more delicate note, Getler is currently signed to a one-year contract with the University. He was due for a five-year contract offer, but due to budget constraints, was only allotted one. Getler pointed out this was the case for all coaches, not just him.

"It doesn't bother me, it's accepted," he said. "But at this point, job security is a nebulous thing.

"I'm not overconfident about it, in fact, I'm not confident," he continued. "But when you've got a 3-11-3 season . . . I try to do good things for the team. I feel I'm on firm footing."

Around the NFL, NBA, CFA . . .

The last thing I wanted to hear this weekend was that the Cincinatti Bengals were going to thrash the Pittsburgh Steelers on Sunday night or that Portland would finally lose a game this season. You'll have to excuse me while I shed a quick tear for the Steelers but, as for the latter, there is finally joy in Szpilaville.

The Steelers are now tied for second in the AFC Central Division with the Houston Oilers at 5-5, and the Blazers are now 9-0 after handing the Bulls and their star -- ummm, that Nike Air guy, what's his name? -- a 125-112 loss. The New England Patriots, for you loyal local pro team fans, are 1-9. Sorry, didn't mean to remind y'all of that. (Yes I did).

The Boston Celtics, who I called 'sad' in a drug-induced columnn last week, have been running, yes running, their way to the second-best record in the NBA. The Celtics, however, have played only three solid ball clubs. They have split two games with the Bulls, and beaten both the Knicks and the Utah Jazz. The other teams, such as the Nets, the Hornets, the Bullets and the Cavaliers cannot be considered powerhouses of the NBA, and the Celts' loss to Milwaukee's old age home was not one of the prettiest of defeats. Let's just wait and see how the holiday season is to the boys from Beantown.

Dave Szpila

Let's give a big round of applause to the Sacramento Kings who, for the first time all season, scored over 100 points. God it makes you feel good to be alive don't it?

Pro football saw its only two undefeated teams stay unbeaten this past Sunday as the Giants and the 49ers both posted victories. Both teams breezed to wins with the Giants shutting out the Lions of the Motor City and San Francisco kicking the living shit out of Tampa Bay. Tampa Bay's only TD came on an interception return of an 'Unstoppable' Joe Montana pass. It was the first of its kind in the past two years. My god, Jim -- he's human!

Other little NFL facts include: The Lions Barry Sanders only carried the ball 11 times against the Giants on Sunday. Boy those Detroit coaches really know how to utilize their talent, hey? Chicago is 9-1 now after beating Denver in OT. How are they 9-1? I thought it was a NFL rule that you can't have a winning record if you have a QB named Harbaugh. Well, it isn't as bad as Bubby, I guess.

Monica Seles took home a big chunk o' change on Sunday ($250K), with her win over Gabriela Sabatini in the first five-set women's match since 1901. The youngest Virginia Slims champ to date, Seles, at sixteen, will probably also be asked to pick up the tab at the local Friendly's when she and her friends decide to spend a night on the town.

Andre Agassi finally got over 'the Big Choke' on Sunday winning the ATP Championship over Stefan Edberg in five long sets. Agassi finishes the season ranked No. 4 in the world but he will always be No. 6 with me, behind the likes of Edberg, Becker, Lendl, the line judge and that automatic serving device or, as I call it, the ASD.

College football saw its own Citrus Bowl 'SUPER-BOWL' go down in flames as the Not-So-Fightin' Irish lost to Joe Paterno and the young men of Penn State. Besides Colorado, Notre Dame's loss opened the doors for Miami, if they can beat Syracuse (and who can't, even Tulane beat 'em) and San Diego State, the Longhorns from Texas, if Colorado loses in the Citrus, and even Brigham Young, if a of string events more twisted than an Agatha Christie novel happen to occur. Unbeaten Georgia Tech still has an outside shot as well. College football is so confusing these days.

The Dodge-NIT college hoop games have moved into the semis leaving four clubs -- Duke, Arkansas, Arizona and Notre Dame -- to compete for the title. A quick prediction is for Arizona to take the title only because I have a relative living in Pheonix. No, that's not it. Arizona has a solid ball team and besides, they are playing Notre Dame in the semi-finals so obviously they are going to the NIT finals.

One final piece of sports news comes from the world of stock car racing. During the Atlanta Journal 500, three members of Bill Eliot's pit crew were taken out by an out-of-control car driven by Ricky Rudd. Mike Rich was killed and Tommy Cole was hospitalized. For you football players, both past and present, think of being blind sided by someone going 60 mph. Not a pleasant thought, hey?

On that note, my little space here is finished. I am sorry it ended on such a downer but not everything in sports is fun and games. So, until next time, this is Dave Szpila saying, 'Don't forget about all those great football games on Thanksgiving. Even though there is only one team above .500, it will get you away from your smelly Uncle Ralph.'

Students stage deaths to show effects of war

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Some thirty-five University of Massachusetts students "died" yesterday on the Student Union steps in an effort to show the effects of a potential war with Iraq.

In a rally sponsored by the UMass Adhoc Coalition on the Middle East, students outlined themselves with chalk, laid on the cement and topped themselves with mock graves for 15 minutes to inform onlookers to the negative effects of a war.

"The people who are lying here aren't really dead, they're symbolically dead today, instead of two weeks from today," said Peter Wagner, a member of the coalition to students passing by.

Wagner said he thinks students at the University are growing more aware of the potential of war and the extent of U.S. involvement.

"Actions like this educate people a lot more than what they may read in the papers about a war," he said.

Students who had died remained silent for 15 minutes, while holding graves which read "R.I.P. -- Died for Oil" and "Georgie, Porgie, Pudding Pie -- Missed the point and lets men die."

Wagner said membership in his organization has increased five fold in the past two weeks.

"People see it in the papers, but Bush doesn't say it -- he's been twisting reasons for going to [Iraq] -- and people are starting to see that," he said.

Loyda Guzman draws an outline around fellow UMass student Bill Hodkinson at the die-in yesterday on the Student Union steps.

Megan McColgan, a Coalition member and one of the "living dead" said she thinks most students are trying to "black out" what is going on in the Middle East.

"People will do something about a problem after it's too late, but when people are dead, you can't bring them back," she said.

McColgan said although there have been projections about the numbers who may be killed, but added that they are "just numbers."

She added that she is willing to die for the soldiers who may die in the Gulf, but said she is not willing to die for President Bush.

Wagner said that Bush wants to go to war to retain his popularity and that Iraq and Kuwait only supply 8 percent to the world's oil supply.

The die-in ended with the "dead" rising to the chant "Bring them home."

The Coalition is planning another rally for early December in addition to continued organizational meetings to plan more events.

Senators investigated

Role in failed savings and loan questioned

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Senate Ethics Committee yesterday explored the role of Arizona's two senators in meetings with federal regulators on behalf of failed savings and loan owner Charles Keating Jr.

An aide to Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., backed McCain's assertion that he refused to negotiate with S&L regulator Edwin Gray in a critical April 2, 1987 meeting that four senators held with Gray. According to earlier testimony, McCain's refusal prompted Keating to call the senator a "wimp."

The ethics committee is investigating allegations that the five senators improperly intervened with federal regulators on behalf of Keating, owner of the failed Lincoln Savings and Loan Association of Irvine, Calif.

Today, lawyers for some of the so-called Keating Five senators questioned Gwendolyn van Paasschen, an economics aide to McCain, about her understanding of those meetings.

She underwent detailed questioning by lawyers for Arizona's other senator, Democrat Dennis DeConcini, and for another of the five senators, Banking Chairman Donald Riege, D-Mich. The other two senators facing the allegations are Democrats John Glenn of Ohio and Alan Cranston of California.

McCain has contended DeConcini went beyond their agreed upon agenda in that meeting with Gray and offered the regulator a deal on behalf of Keatings' Lincoln Savings and Loan -- saying the thrift would make more home loans if federal regulations limiting riskier investments were dropped.

Newman Center helps raise food for families

By HEIDI BABINSKI
Collegian Correspondent

Over 90 families in the Amherst area were welcomed with packaged bags of food and supermarket gift certificates Sunday, ending the Newman Center's Annual Thanksgiving Food Drive.

Donations were "generously" given by local merchants, community members and students in hopes of easing financial pressures during the upcoming holiday season, organizers said.

The drive began ten years ago this month when boxes were set up in the Newman Center to collect any non-perishable items people were willing to donate.

Louis Foods donated five percent of all purchases over $30.00, which brought their total to $260.00 for the drive. Stop and Shop donated gift certificates and Atkins Farm contributed baskets of fruits and vegetables.

An anonymous $200.00 was also given, helping to bring the monetary amount to $1000.00, which was then used to purchase grocery certificates.

Alpha Delta Phi fraternity gave stuffed food carriages after touring Southwest collecting anything from freeze-dried noodles to Kool-Aid students were willing to give.

The Amherst High School Honor Society also used their energy toward food gathering and Saint Brigid Parish collected at their masses.

Karen Warren and Bob Sloat, Jr., both Drive Chairpersons, telephoned local churches and shelters searching for names of families and single people who may need food donations. They then verified location and population with the families for efficient deliveries.

The close of the drive allowed items to be divided according to the four food groups and number of people in the household,

Milli Vanilli stripped of Grammy for falsifying performance

LOS ANGELES (AP) -- The band Milli Vanilli was stripped of its Grammy Award Monday because other singers substituted for the pop duo on the best-selling "Girl, You Know It's True" album.

It's the first time in the 34-year history of Grammys that an award has been taken away.

Trustees of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences voted overwhelmingly to rescind the award given to Milli Vanilli members Rob Pilatus and Fabrice Morvan, said Academy Prsident Michael Greene.

"The academy hopes its action sends a clear signal to producers, music packagers and record companies thst they need to take very seriously their task of giving us and the public credible information on that packaging," he said.

"I do think it's an isolated incident. We are as upset about it as the public has the right to be."

The attorney representing Pilatus and Morvan said the pair already had planned to surrender the Grammy.

"My guess is when the academy read that, they decided to beat us to the game," attorney Alan Mintz said.

"Needless to say, this is an emotionally trying time. But (Pilstus anmd Morvan) are determined to prove to the world that they will come back strongly and demonstrate that they are indeed artists."

In a related development, an Oakland woman who bought her son a Milli Vanilli tape filed a class action lawsuit Monday seeking a refund in light of the revelation that the duo didn't sing a note on the recording.

Harvard law students to sue University

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — A group of Harvard Law School students sued Harvard University for discrimination yesterday charging that White, male professors dominate the law school faculty.

"We'd like to sue our school," second-year law student Linda Singer cheerfully told the clerk of the Middlesex County Superior Court.

The 38-page suit, prepared by the students without the help of lawyers, alleges that Harvard Law School has failed to hire any minority women, Asian Americans, Native Americans, disabled citizens, Latinos or openly gay men and women to tenured or tenure-track faculty positions.

The suit also charges that Harvard Law's faculty includes far fewer Blacks and women than are represented in the population of lawyers.

"The hiring practices of defendant's agent, Harvard Law School, operate to disproportionately exclude qualified women and minority candidates for tenured and tenure-track positions," the suit claims. "These hiring practices constitute a continuing pattern and practice of discrimination in violation of state law.'

Harvard spokesman Peter Costa said the university would have no comment until it has reviewed the law suit.

A student group called the Harvard Law Coalition for Civil Rights filed the suit naming the President and Fellows of Harvard College as defendants. The students based the suit on a state law which bars discrimination in hiring by businesses or institutions with 15 or more employees.

According to the coalition, five of 66 tenured and tenure-track faculty members at the law school are women, or 7.58 percent. Nationwide, at law schools approved by the American Bar Association, 23.7 percent of faculty are women. The students maintain that women comprise 36.75 percent of the law graduates since 1980.

Of the law school's four tenure-track faculty members, two are Black but none are women, according to the suit. And three of 62 tenured positions, or 4.84 percent, are Black.

"It's not just morally wrong for Harvard to say, 'Our professors are 95 percent White-male,' it's fundamentally against the law," Singer said.

Second-year law student John Bonifaz said the discrimination was being committed by "an institution which purports to be the best in the country." Bonifaz noted that the suit is only the latest move in an anti-discrimination drive that began in 1969.

Guardsmen and homeless problem collide at armory

NEWTON (AP) — Two of America's most pressing foreign and domestic problems bumped into each other at an armory when 200 homeless people were forced out by National Guardsmen preparing for action in the Mideast.

The transformation was completed yesterday as cots were moved out and dozens of guardsmen wearing battle fatigues scurried around the armory, taking care of final details before they ship out this weekend for training at a military base.

Community activists who ran the homeless shelter at the armory had to perform their own mobilization the day before, transferring beds, pots, pans and other materials to a National Guard armory several miles away in Cambridge.

Some found a bitter irony in the colliding problems.

"We can mobilize enormous resources for Operation Desert Shield, but we can't seem to mobilize the same resources for people who are homeless right here in our own country," said Philip Mangano, executive director of the Greater Boston Adult Shelter Alliance.

Capt. Jayme Casgrain-Guido, a spokesman for the Guard, said the National Guard tries to help out in the community, but national defense must be the top priority.

Still, when it was learned that the Newton armory would have to clear out the homeless shelter to make room for the troops, "our first concern was to find them another place," she said.

The Guard's 972nd Military Police Company was placed on alert last week after President Bush ordered an additional 72,000 troops from the Guard and military reserves to mobilize against Iraq.

Homeless people using the shelter were picked up each day in Boston and were driven out to the armory in Newton, a suburb just west of Boston.

The transfer of the homeless from the Newton armory to the Cambridge armory will prompt community activists to work more quickly to find alternative sites, Mangano said.

The company, which expects federal employment orders in the next weeks, displaced the state's largest homeless shelter when they occupied the armory for their mobilization. The shelter moved from the Newton facility to the Cambridge Armory.

Dukakis backs museum

Governor also supports resort in Berkshires

WORCESTER (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis says he hopes to launch both a state-blocked art museum and a condominium resort in the Berkshires in his last six weeks in office.

His successor, William Weld, has already announced plans to dump one of Dukakis' pet projects — a proposed 500-inmate prison in the isolated town of New Braintree.

And Weld also plans to take a close look at Dukakis' other construction plans, including the proposed $77.5 million contemporary art museum in North Adams and a proposal by a Connecticut developer for a $200 million vacation home resort on the state's highest peak.

But Dukakis told the Worcester Telegram & Gazette during a stop here Monday that despite mounting opposition, he plans to press ahead with both projects.

"Northern Berkshire is the one corner of the state that never, ever shared in the boom. It's down. It's depressed. They just lost another 500 jobs up there at General Electric in Pittsfield," Dukakis said. "People have been leaving. There have not been jobs being created. Unless we do something up there to stimulate the economy, we are going to continue to suffer."

Three year ago, the state Legislature authorized $35 million to help convert the vacant 28-building Sprague Electronics Co. mill into the world's largest contemporary art museum. The idea was the brainchild of Thomas Krens, who has since become director of the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum in New York. He has proposed similar locally-financed satellite museums of the Guggenheim in Salzburg, Austria and Venice, Italy.

However, release of the money depends on acceptance of the $1.7 million feasibility study by state capitol planning and finance officials as well as the museum commission. The museum commission, headed by Krens, has not met in more than a year, although officials say they now hope to get members together by Christmas.

And the state Inspector General has questioned the legality of the proposed financial arrangements and called estimates that the museum could attract the 150,000 visitors a year it needs to break even overly optimistic.

The latest plans for the resort call for the construction of 850 detached homes and condominuim units adjacent to the protected state park on the summit of 3,491-foot high Mount Greylock, a few miles outside North Adams.

Silber's campaign tactics discussed among analysts

BOSTON (AP) — Defeated Democratic gubernatorial candidate John Silber lost the Nov. 6 election, but was the focus of campaign and news media officials who analyzed the election yesterday.

John Moffitt, campaign manager for victorious Republican William Weld, compared Silber's performance in the campaign to that of a caged tiger.

Moffitt said Silber's temperament was a fair issue in the campaign, but mildly chastised its strong focus on the Boston University president.

"We've been here for 45 minutes. If somebody had just landed here from Mars, they would have thought John Silber had been elected at least president of the United States," Moffitt said. "There were two of us in the race for governor, as a matter of fact, and one was that orange-haired WASP."

Much of Weld's strategy in the general election was to bring voters' attention to Silber, and Moffitt said Silber's testiness was a legitimate campaign issue.

"Watching the campaign evolve, John Silber was like a tiger in a cage. He would sit there looking around menacingly and the media would come up with long sticks and they'd poke the stick into the cage and invariably, John would give out with a roar and the media would smile and poke it in a little harder the next time," Moffitt said.

Moffitt said the question could be asked "how much of it was the stick poking and how much of it was the tiger roaring. I think it was a combination of the two."

Silber's campaign press secretary, Michal Regunberg, said a combination of factors led to his defeat.

"There were mistakes that were costly, but it would be too simple to say John Silber blew it," she said.

She said he was hurt by a defection of liberals and Democratic supporters of former Attorney General Francis Bellotti, who lost the Sept. 18 Democratic primary to Silber.

But Agnes Bain, head of the government department at Suffolk University, which sponsored the forum, said Silber was a major factor in his own defeat.

"Toward the end, John Silber ceased to be a statesman," she said. She was referring to Silber's anger at WCVB-TV anchorwoman Natalie Jacobson and other incidents of temper.

John Henning, a political reporter and anchor with WBZ-TV, said voters looked more carefully at Silber when he became the apparent front runner in the race and that Weld was helped by people who voted for him because they decided they didn't like Silber.

Henning said people also saw similarities in outlook between Silber and outgoing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, despite differences between the two men on issues.

"I agree with the person who said after all these years, people are tired of this little guy getting on at night and saying 'eat your peas' at six o'clock. Do we want a guy to follow him who will say 'eat your peas or I'll kick the hell out of you', " Henning said.

A graceful journey to the gangster underworld

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

The Coen Brothers' Miller's Crossing begins with a wonderful image: a black fedora gently falls to the leave-strewn ground of a majestic autumn forest. Suddenly the wind picks up and blows the hat away from us, rolling it along the forest floor amongst the leaves until it gracefully flies out of our view. It's all part of a dream that gangster Tom Reagan (Gabriel Byrne) tells his mistress, Verna (Marcia Gay Hardin) about. "And you chased it, right?" she asks him. "No," he tells her. "I didn't chase it. I watched it blow away — nothing more foolish than a man chasing his hat."

Hats play a big role in Miller's Crossing; they define Tom's struggle between his heart and his sensibility — a battle that Tom isn't too keen on waging within himself. He's a no-nonsense guy, and that's exactly how he plays out his advice to his boss, Leo (Albert Finney), to kill Verna's brother Bernie (John Turturro), a sleazy bookie who's just double-crossed Leo's biggest rival, Johnny Caspar (Jon Polito). Tom's the brains behind Leo's brawn and makes his decisions divorced from all emotion, relying instead on his political cunning; he likes things this way because it keeps his head from being kicked in and his kat from getting knocked off. But Tom can't find it in himself to give his love over to Verna any more than he can give his loyalty over to Leo (who insists on protecting Bernie for Verna's sake); and when both men ultimately have it out over her, Tom joins up with Caspar and a bloody gang war erupts.

The gangsters in Miller's Crossing carry the terrible cross of alienation and emotional arrest, but live a beautiful sphere: they dress in gorgeous rustic colors and come backed by the music of traditional Irish ballads. The film isn't about gangsters exchanging machine gun fire (although there is a lot of it — the film is extremely violent) so much as it is about the smell of the gin soaked world of dim lighting and overcast skies that these people find themselves in. This is a film about the mood of gangsterism and the determination it takes to not allow yourself to become ruled by your heart, a mistake that the laws of their world inevitably prove as fatal.

With Miller's Crossing (the title refers to a secluded stretch of woods where the gangsters take their enemies to bump them off) the Coen Brother's have created a world that defies typical genre expectations (urban gangsters in rustic settings and tough guy hit-men that return home to gay lovers) and establishes the film as a small classic in its own right. Does this mean it's as good as Scorsese's GoodFellas? It's hard to say since both films deal with different themes and share vastly different visions. But whatever Miller's Crossing may lack in terms of the raw, explosive power of GoodFellas, it certainly makes up for in terms of its originality: a melancholy world where the screams of dying men accompany the graceful dance of a lost fedora tumbling in the autumn wind.

Williams gives a classic yet experimental performance

By JAMES MOLESWORTH

Tony Williams
Iron Horse
Sunday, Nov. 18

From the opening drum roll, you knew who was the band leader. Tony Williams started off the gig by giving the audience a sampling of his skills. You know the Mingus piece, "Three or Four Shades of Blues," an experiment in various blues types? Well this solo was kind of like that, three or four shades of percussion. It was brash, strong, obtrusive, precise and loud.

Billy Pierce then came on tenor and blew a solo paced by Williams' furious energy. The bridge sequences between solos were filled with hard, driving punctuations from Williams and lilting piano play from Mulgrew Miller. Wallace Roney on trumpet played so firm and full you might have thought he was playing alto sax instead (if you didn't have trouble hearing the horns over Williams). Mulgrew gave such a hip solo that he was tapping his own feet as he wrestled with the output of Williams. Yet he did not wrestle in vain. Miller's performance was hot!

For the second piece Billy Pierce turned to soprano sax, and with Roney's trumpet, they came in and out with impeccable timing they seemed like they had the experience of playing together for 20 years, but they had the fire of a couple of young cats, playing for pure fun. On Pierce's solo he played around with the five note melody until he finally blew it apart and went into a full fledged experimental solo which matched, if not bested, the force being issued by Williams. Mulgrew smoked on piano and I noticed myself leaning in towards the stage, being pulled in.

The next piece started off with, of course, Williams again in a solo that ups his performance to five or six shades of percussion. He drummed on his sticks while playing his drums! I hate to say you had to be there, but you really did. He played a ballad with an underlying salsa rhythm, and could have gone all night by himself, but he didn't, and give credit where credit is due.

REVIEW

Roney and Pierce were solid. Their timing was perfect, and they constantly met the challenges that Williams was throwing at them with his changing rhythms and tempos. On the next tune, Pierce switched back to tenor and was real smooth while Roney hit a solo that flirted with the point where the play becomes effortless at the same time the output continues to grow.

The fifth cut was the best of the evening. A simple melody started off as the full quintet showed what a difference a working group makes in live performances. Then, both Roney and Pierce walked off and left the trio of Williams, Miller and Ira Coleman on. Coleman went into a bass solo that made you say, "Oh, that's what I've been hearing all night," as Coleman had trouble getting through when the quintet was on stage. Yet his solo was pure, and he made his bass hum with a chocolatey resonance and the warmth of a good cup of java.

Miller was incredible. Beautiful filling in, as he swung like the Duke and with notes like the Count. Without a doubt, Mulgrew Miller has to be one of the finest piano players out there right now. Williams never reverted to a rhythm player, and took a break from his percussive power.

After a lengthy experiment, Pierce came back and stepped right in with a solo that probably had been forgotten by most. Roney came in to finish the cut in the same manner, echoing the melody while going into his own solo. With the full quintet back on stage, Williams hit a rhumba like crescendo and the full sound of the group stopped on a dime to the loud approval of those attending.

Of note during the performance was the play of Mulgrew on piano (who played at Hampen Theatre last year in the Magic Triangle Series), who really smoked all night long. The soprano play of Pierce I felt was better than his tenor, and Coleman was rock solid all night. Wallace Roney on

Slashing Health Ed. shortsighted

I am a graduate student in the School of Public Health. One of our program areas, Health Education, has been slated for complete elimination. This is a very short-sighted decision. Health Education is vital to the School of Public Health. And the School of Public Health is vital to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Every dollar spent on disease prevention is saved many times over through reduced economic and social costs of disease incidence and treatment. With problems such as AIDS, substance abuse, toxic wastes and other environment disasters, the need for training of professionals in public health is greater now than it has ever been.

The UMass School of Public Health is the only publicly-funded accredited public health program in New England. Not all of us can afford to go to Harvard. In fact, not all of us want to go to Harvard. One reason I chose the UMass program was because of its excellent national and international reputation. Apparently, this reputation exists only outside of Amherst.

Who decided on the criteria for program elimination? Why weren't we informed before now that the teaching of graduate students is one of the lowest priorities at this campus? Some of us would perhaps have chosen to instead go to a university that actually values its graduate programs.

It's irresponsible for UMass to accept students into programs and then obliterate these programs before the students are graduated. And it makes little sense, economic or otherwise, for UMass to eliminate the Health Education program.

Two peoples, one struggle

I had promised myself I wouldn't get involved in the back and forth over Israel and Palestine. The dialogue, or should I say diatribe, has been racially charged, demagogic and manipulative. Confident that the freedom of Palestine will not be one nor lost in Amherst, Mass., I stayed away.

Jeremy P. Levinson

Whenever discussion is grounded, on one hand, in second hand principles and, on the other, in the current and daily experience of a besieged people, I stay away, knowing that all the principle in the world cannot stop history.

On the surface, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is textbook: A racist military government holds hostage a people in their own land, depriving them of everything save the opportunity to labor for a largely subsistence standard of living. History has shown us literally hundreds of these scenarios. Also, history shows that people will win their freedom or be exterminated trying.

For the purpose of the above analysis, the emotion-charged identities of the players in this conflict are unimportant. Machine-guns, tear gas and state power strip any one of their identity. Read, for example, George Orwell's essay about his time in Burma, predicting the empire.

On a deeper, more personal level, the Zionist campaign on campus has scratched at some very tender spots for me. I cannot pick up a newspaper or discuss politics without having my Jewish heritage held to my throat. This I am used to. For years, my writing on Palestinian rights has alienated me from large segments of my community. I am the bad Jew; the traitor.

This is a stigma I've carried along with my own political, personal and intellectual growth. Predicting the reception, I hadn't planned on writing about this. Until last week.

On Nov. 15, a Jewish Zionist barged into a Jerusalem butcher shop. He demanded that the Jewish owner fire his Arab employee. The owner refused and that Zionist, in the name of my people's freedom, stabbed both the Arab worker and Jewish employer to death.

The point here is not in the brutality of this act. Brutality is an all too available commodity. The symbolism here is what brought tears to my eyes. A 'bad' Jew is dead after trying to protect an Arab from a Zionist fanatic.

All death is equal and I mourn for both. I mourn, too, for my people. Zionism is the most dangerous threat to the Jewish people. It has divided our community and deprived us of the right to think and feel. A cannibalistic feeding frenzy has begun in the Jewish community. Here, it has enabled the more extreme Zionist to kill that which he is trying to protect.

Zionism and its Jewish supporters have taken it upon themselves to redefine my heritage. My history is used as a weapon against me; if I decry the injustices done by the government of Israel, I am no longer a Jew.

My Jewish brothers and sisters are being raised in an environment of political Judaism, as opposed to Jewish politics. And, like all people who have had their history held hostage and exploited, our people will suffer. In the long run, this period will be exposed as yet another attack on Judaism; this one of the most insidious kind. It has insinuated itself into our cultural consciousness.

Many Jews stand in defense of their history and people by standing with the Palestinian struggle for freedom. As Jews, students of thousands of years of persecution, we will fight injustice wherever it may be found. We will fight to the death for our right to critically analyze all that goes on around us, no matter how sensitive or emotional a topic it may be.

Unless the government of Israel opts to destroy the Palestinian people, Palestine will be free. No one can stop it, not Meir Kahane, not Ed Koch and not UMass Hillel. This is a simple lesson of history. The question is not "Will freedom come?" Rather, the question is "Will we stand for or against it?" Where will we be when it comes?

My Judaism fights against all oppression and brutality, not against history. As a Jew and a hater of all injustice, I will stand with the people of Palestine. In doing so and in the face of great adversity, I defend my own people.

Welcome to the era of hypocrisy

We are very adept when it comes to worrying about other people's sovereignty and freedom. The Lithuanians deserved to be free from the Soviets. Kuwait needs to be freed from Saddam Hussein. Northern Ireland needs to be freed from the United Kingdom. Quebec needs to be freed from Canada.

Pamela McCarthy

Welcome to the nineties, the age of sovereignty.

In Canada, Native Americans were subjected to police harassment, assault and exile from what little land they were allowed to have by the government. This is because they are following the philosophy we are so good at spouting. Sovereignty. Sovereignty for all, except for anyone we may have conquered.

Welcome to the nineties, the age of hypocrisy.

While Quebec strongly insists it needs to preserve its culture and heritage, it conveniently forgets that another group of people have the same gripe. I suppose that if you aren't White, you don't count when it comes to sovereignty. I mean, who do these people think they are? How dare they get angry because their land will be used as a golf course! Why, didn't they know that it is only French and English culture that matters at all?

Before we all smack our lips and nod and smile smugly, remember one thing. We are living in Amherst, a town named after a man who knowingly gave smallpox-infected blankets to the Native Americans here. We are living in a country that used to scalp Natives, and then get angry when they used the same trick on us. We are the same country that calls Native Americans savages even though we were the first to use the most barbaric weapon in the history of the world. We are the land of Custer's Revenge, a video game that came from the armpit of some mutant's mind. In this game, Custer gets his revenge by raping a Native American woman.

But we're for sovereignty, right?

I was bewildered when I read in an article a couple of years ago that many Native Americans don't celebrate Thanksgiving. They said they don't feel they have anything to be thankful for. I couldn't understand it. I knew we hadn't been angels in the past, but I didn't think we exiled or oppressed Native Americans anymore. I didn't know anything about them, really. They were invisible to me, stuck on reservations out of white sight. This alone should have told me something. The more I thought about it (and any of you who still believe they have it good should try thinking), the more I realized that they may have a point. But it was blurry, stuck in the back of my head. I had other things to worry about.

Then I heard about Custer's Revenge.

Then I heard about Canada.

Then I listened and watched the people around me. Those who bemoaned the fate of any other people in any other country wouldn't even acknowledge the fact that Native Americans exist. America, land of the free, home of the brave, is a colonial power.

I can't very well go back to where my ancestors came from to make things right. My roots are scattered too far and too wide; I wouldn't have a clue what country to go to. It's not the solution, what's done is done. But we can change what's happening now, if we would care to rouse ourselves.

This means respecting Native Land. Building a golf course on sacred ground is an insult. Think of it this way: Would any of us painfully good Catholics be thrilled at the prospect of the Disney Corporation razing the Vatican to the ground? Would any Christian, Muslim or Jew be doing cartwheels at the thought of all the holy sites of the Middle East and Jerusalem being demolished to make way for a water-fun park? Somehow, I doubt it.

Contrary to what Ronald Reagan said a few years ago, Native Americans are part of America. They are citizens of this country. As citizens, they share the same rights as the rest of us. Considering they were here first, we should respect them.

Think about that when your stuffing your face tomorrow.

Housing headaches

As a first semester student at the University, I would like to express dissatisfaction with the Housing Assignment Office, as a result of my first direct experience with them. At the beginning of this semester, I was assigned a roommate who proved to have a personality that was incompatible with my own.

My roommate moved out during the first month of the semester. I was advised to contact the Housing Office to indicate whether I wished to pay an additional $150 to maintain a double single room. With the cost of tuition being as high as it is, and with the subsequent fee increases, I opted not to keep my double single.

I complied with the rules by phoning the Housing Office on a number of occasions, declaring my desire not to keep the double single. After each call, I was told that I would be contacted with information pertaining to a new location for me to move.

When the Housing Office finally did get back to me, it did so in the form of a bill with a $150 surcharge on it. The person with whom I spoke at Whitmore to contest the bill basically told me that it was my word against theirs, as my decision was never put on file. I was also informed that if I did not pay the bill within two weeks, I would be administratively withdrawn from the University.

As a last resort, I relayed this information to my father, who subsequently decided to give the Housing Office a call. As a result of his 10-minute conversation with them, the charge on the bill was dropped and he was told that I would not have to move, but would instead have a new roommate move into the room, which is exactly what I wanted from the beginning.

I am thankful that charge was dropped, but I feel that I was treated inappropriately. It makes no sense that my father could accomplish in 10 minutes what I could not even do in an hour. I don't think my father should have to fight my battles for me.

The University claims that we are to be treated and respected as individuals, but the actions of the Housing Assignment Office personnel suggest otherwise.
